We didn't complain when our allies, France and Germany, assisted him in developing chemical and nuclear weapons.

According to Der Speigel, the German newspaper, the Germans are still operating the Iraq chemical warfare plants at this moment. Last year we were helping Germany to reunite. They have short memories.

The people certainly don't understand why our Ambassador to Iraq, with written approval from our Secretary of State, told Hussein that the U.S. had "no opinion on Arab-Arab conflicts, like your border disagreement with Kuwait."

When you negotiate with Arabs, always remember, they are smarter than we are—they will skin you.

I would like to read an excerpt from one of Kipling's poems regarding dealing with Arabs:

"The end of the fight is a tombstone white, And the name of the late deceased, And the epitaph drear—A fool lies here, Who tried to hustle the east."

Our State Department gave Hussein a green light to take part of Kuwait. The U.S. oil industry and the CIA warned the President that Iraq was about to attack Kuwait. Our leaders knew Hussein was going to take some of Kuwait and they did nothing.

When Hussein took the entire country, we were embarrassed. Now, like Noriega, Hussein is out of control and we must both defeat him and bring him to trial.

Do you see a pattern?

The people wonder why we gave Noriega and Hussein billions, knowing full well that they were sorry, worthless devils.

The people can't understand why we are now embracing Syria and its leader, Assad. They remember that Assad was involved in killing 250 Marines in Lebanon and in destroying Pan Am flight 103. How can this man possibly become our ally?

It is unthinkable that our President would meet with this terrorist who killed our people.

Assad of Syria, our new bad boy friend in the Middle East, has committed the same atrocities in Lebanon since August that Hussein has committed in Kuwait, and yet we ignore Assad's atrocities.

If we fight and win, Assad will be the new strong man of the Middle East.

The American people can't understand why their sons and daughters are preparing to fight for kings and emirs.

Americans don't fight and die for despots who think they can buy anything including million dollars a year blondes.

American's only fight for great causes.

If you have seen Arab royalty on the streets of New York and London, you can understand that they are a living definition of the phrase "absolute decadence".

Read the book, "The Mayflower Madam," with careful attention to the Arab stories. Talk to the managers of the luxury hotels throughout the world, and you will be appalled.

The Arabs should not be allowed to censor our fighting forces' mail.

If we are going fight and die in the Middle East for them, our forces ought to be able to practice their own religious beliefs.

They ought to be allowed to display the American flag.

They ought to be able to have Bibles.

They ought to be able to say a prayer of Thanksgiving with the President.

We ought to be able to send USO shows with girls to entertain them.

Having seen the beautiful people of the Arab world in New York and London, I can assure you, we don't need any lessons from them on morality.

The approach we are taking will not create a new world order or stabilize the Middle East.

In fact, if we had a total military victory over Iraq, we would destabilize the Middle East.

If you have questions on this, we can discuss them during the question and answer period.

The people ask—how do we commit the Nation?

Read the Constitution, Article I, Section 8.

Only Congress can declare war—and commit the Nation to death on the battlefield.

It is illegal and it is wrong for any one person in our country to put 450,000 lives at risk.

Our system of government is based on checks and balances.

If the President can't even appoint his cabinet or spend money without Congressional approval, do you think there is any possibility that the framers of the Constitution intended for the President to have the unilateral right to put lives at risk?

Of course not. The words of the Constitution are simple and plain. Here they are:

"The Congress shall have the right to declare war."

The lesson of Vietnam is:

First commit the Nation, then commit the troops.

It is Congress' job to commit the Nation and the troops.

The President's job is to lead the Nation and the troops—after Congress gives him the authority.

The people are disgusted that our leaders are running around the world using our money to literally buy the approval of the Security Council members so that we can go to war in the Middle East.

Why aren't our leaders seeking the permission of the American people through Congress to put 450,000 lives at risk.

I don't believe the American people are interested in having countries like China, Yemen, Columbia, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, and even France, who sold uranium to Hussein and made it possible for him to create nuclear weapons, decide whether our fighting men live or die—this is our responsibility.

Congress must decide this matter. First commit the Nation, then commit the troops.

This conflict is a U.N. problem—not solely a U.S. problem.

We have 5% of the world's population, yet we are bearing most of the burden in the Middle East.

I can hear the Washington establishment whining now, but how would it look if the American people don't want to fight in the Middle East.

Let's stop worrying about how things look.

Nothing looks worse than American casualties lost in a war that the American people neither understand nor support.

The Declaration of Independence promises life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Life is first.

One life is precious.

We are risking 450,000 lives and even the President can't tell us why.

Walk past the Vietnam Memorial and through Arlington Cemetery.

Ask yourself, would you be willing for one of your loved ones to die for this cause?

Congress has the Constitutional responsibility to declare war—It must first commit the Nation, then we can commit the troops.

Congress does not have to wait for a Presidential request.

Two days ago I spoke to 3,500 Mayors at their national convention.

I urged them to mobilize the people in their cities and towns.

To fully inform the people

To debate this issue

To include their Congressmen

And decide what we should do.

Here is what you can do—

Keep our commitment to our fighting men and women

Go to City Hall

Help organize town hall meetings

Involve your Congressman.

Get tapes of this speech from The National Press Club

Call or write me if you need help: Ross Perot, Box D, Dallas, Texas 75208.

You, the people, own this country.

The elected officials are your servants.

Decide what course of action we should take in the Middle East.

You hold 450,000 lives in the palms of your hands.

If you decide we must go to war, direct Congress to do it.

At that point, we will all face East—no whining—no dissension—total commitment—and get the job done.

You ask—

Can ordinary Americans really do this?

Remember Lech Walesa, a Polish shipyard worker. He changed Eastern Europe.

Of course you can do it!

First commit the Nation, then commit the troops.

I know the American people will make the right decision.

May God watch over our fighting forces.

God bless you all. God bless America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. GRAHAM pertaining to the introduction of legislation are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, since this is the opening day for introduction of bills, I had a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget that I have introduced previously on the first day of each and every session when we have a right to introduce bills. I was going to proceed with that along with some other measures that I consider priority measures. But somehow, with the gripping matters that confront the country today, I did not think it was appropriate for me to make those introductions at this time, but I will at a later date.

However, there has been a matter that has once again been brought to my attention that I feel is very critical with regard to our national security and national defense that I felt even with the grave concerns on the minds of all of us today, I should address by introducing this bill to get it moving.

(The remarks of Mr. EXON pertaining to the introduction of legislation are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ON BEHALF OF SENATOR CRANSTON

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am today introducing several bills on behalf of the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON], who is unable to be here today on the first day for introduction of legislation in the Senate for the 102d Congress. As the Members of the Senate are aware, Senator CRANSTON is currently undergoing treatment for cancer at Stanford University Hospital in California. He has asked that these bills be introduced on his behalf today so that the various committees to which they are being referred can begin whatever actions may be appropriate relating to these measures.

I know that I speak for every Member of the Senate in wishing Senator CRANSTON a speedy recovery and return to this body.

ENVIRONMENTAL RISKS OF WAR IN GULF

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, now that the President has secured the authorization he sought from the Congress which we hope will enable him to secure Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait without war, I hope that the White House will take into consideration the potential risks to the environment of a cataclysm in the gulf.

An article by Dr. John Cox, a British chemical engineer, suggests that significant climatic changes could be caused should Saddam Hussein successfully ignite Kuwaiti oil wells during the course of a gulf war.

According to Dr. Cox, the environmental risks include regional climatic changes affecting some 1 billion people within 1,000 miles of Kuwait; the creation of an equatorial ozone hole in the stratosphere; the development of acid rain from the sulpher and nitrogen contained in the burned Kuwaiti crude oil, reducing crops in affected areas surrounding the gulf; and significant human casualties as a result of crop failures, ultraviolet radiation and other climatic changes caused by the possible burning of some 3 million barrels of Kuwaiti oil a day.

As the President proceeds further against Saddam Hussein, I hope that he will take such steps as are necessary to protect against environmental catastrophe in the gulf.

I ask unanimous consent that the article "Environmental Consequences of a Gulf War," by Dr. John Cox, appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ENVIRONMENTAL CONSEQUENCES OF A GULF WAR

(By Dr. John Cox, BSc, ARCS, DIC, MSc, PhD, CEng, MBCS, FIChemE, MConsE, FRSA, Consultant Chemical and Environmental Engineer, Talywaun, Gwent)

In his speech to the World Climate Conference in November, King Hussein warned that a Gulf War could lead to an environmental catastrophe. On this specific point he was right—but, unfortunately, by choosing to highlight Global Warming as a major consequence, he misdirected media attention to the periphery of the problem.

If, as is believed[1], Iraq has mined the Kuwaiti oil wells, the resulting fires could burn almost 3 million barrels/day. This adds under 5% extra CO_2 to worldwide emissions which—though undesirable—hardly rates as a global eco-catastrophe. In reality the main dangers arise from the major by-products of uncontrolled combustion—CO, SO_2, NO_x and, above all, smoke.

CLIMATIC CHANGES

The initial consequence of smoke is to obscure sunlight and reduce daytime temperatures. The magnitude of these changes can be inferred from 'natural' wildfires. For example, the 1982 Alberta wildfires reduced average daytime temperatures in the north-central United States by 1.5 °C to 4 °C. In 1987, a series of large wildfires in south Oregon and north California reduced some daytime temperatures by as much as 20 °C. The Kuwaiti oil wells could produce comparable quantities of smoke and soot.

Climatic effects have been studied in detail for several years[2,3] to predict the long-term consequences and after-effects of a variety of 'nuclear exchange' scenarios. It is now appreciated that the climatic aftermath of a medium to large-scale nuclear war could cause more casualties than the direct effects of nuclear explosions. These studies and simulations also have relevance to the potential consequences of a Gulf War.

Firstly, soot has been shown to be the most important component of a smoke-induced climatic change. Using a smoke emission factor of 6%[4] and assuming a discharge comparable to current output[5], fires from Kuwaiti oil wells could produce sooty smoke at about 5000 tonnes/day (as carbon).

Compared with nuclear war scenarios, which variously assume between 15–150 Tg of smoke and cause global climatic changes, this is not a high figure. At this rate it would take three years to produce 15 Tg and, allowing for depletion, dispersion and washout (all included in the computer simulations), the effects are likely to be very localised. From this calculation, it seems that a global eco-catastrophe is improbable.

But regional effects are less easily dismissed. Within 1000 miles of Kuwait the pall of smoke could be as great as predicted by nuclear war scenarios. These, almost without exception, predict failure[2,3] of the Asian monsoons—even though the smoke is assumed to have been generated in more northerly latitudes thousands of miles away. A prolonged conflagration[6] within this sensitive microclimatic region could influence the onset, duration and character of the monsoons.

Failure of the Asian monsoons is not an academic curiosity. Upwards of 1000 million people depend on these annual rains for their crops and could face starvation if they did not arrive when expected. Even a partial failure could cause more deaths than the total populations of Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia combined. Similarly, even a few degrees drop in day-time temperatures could cause crop failures on a massive scale.

OZONE SCAVENGING

Microclimatic change may not be the most serious consequence of uncontrolled burning. In a humid climate and with dispersed burning (as is the case for 'natural' forest fires), smoke stays in the troposphere before returning to earth as rainfall. The smoke from a Kuwaiti oil well conflagration could rise to a much greater height and, because soot and NO_x gases destroy ozone in the stratosphere, this phenomenon could create an equatorial 'ozone hole'.

Ozone depletion in these latitudes would be catastrophic for plant and animal life. Without the protection of stratospheric ozone, more UV light would reach the earth and many life forms would be endangered. Medical researchers have shown that percentage increases in UV light cause a proven pro rata increase in the incidence of cancers, cataracts and other medical complaints.

POLLUTION

Whereas stratospheric pollution is the 'worst-case' scenario, most of the smoke would remain in the troposphere before returning to earth, mainly with rainfall. The composition of this 'acid rain' may be estimated from the composition of Kuwaiti crude oil and the earlier assumptions concerning smoke emission factors.

Kuwaiti crude oil contains 2.44% sulphur and 0.14% nitrogen. So the daily SO_2 and NO_x emissions could be 10,000 and at least 750 tons respectively. Carbon as CO would be comparable in output to the soot emissions. All these chemicals would return to earth eventually—and could reduce agricultural output in the affected areas.

CASUALTIES

So, as with the studies of the aftermath of nuclear war, the casualties from the long-term effects could exceed those of the combatants, either directly by the impact of UV radiation or indirectly from the failure of crops. One hopes that those planning the military action are alive to these possible long-term effects as well as the more conventional military consequences.

After the dust of war has settled, it will take time to extinguish any fires. Although fire-fighting teams already are on call to restore Kuwaiti oil production as quickly as possible, it seems unlikely that 'normal' best efforts for dealing with single oil well fires will be adequate to cope with a conflagration involving well head fires only a mile apart[6]—which will make reignition a very serious problem.

To minimize the catastrophe, it may be necessary to act on the scale currently expended in preparing for possible conflict. In the aftermath of the Chernobyl disaster, helicopters were used to entomb the reactor under thousands of tons of cement. One must hope that something of this nature already is being planned or, if not, that the climatic simulations have been conducted and shown that my fears are groundless.

[6] Basil Butler, Managing Director of BP, estimated "6-9 months to put out 300-400 fires". This seems optimistic. It is equivalent to 12 independent fire-fighting teams each extinguishing fires at one a week—a rate higher than normally achieved in fighting isolated oil well fires.

RETIREMENT OF JEROME CAHILL

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, recently one of the most distinguished journalists covering Washington, DC, and the Congress chose to retire. I refer to Jerome Cahill of the New York Daily News.

Jerry's long and noteworthy career in the Nation's Capital was typified by a determined pursuit of facts coupled with a strong sense of fairness and a commitment to his craft. He demonstrated an innate ability to grasp complex issues and turn them into informative and lively prose, which all New Yorkers could enjoy.

Covering business issues for a New York audience is demanding work. We are an informed and involved public. Jerry set a standard for us by regularly delving into areas other reporters missed and uncovering important stories that might have been ignored.

Whether the story concerned the budget, taxes, or the impact of Federal aid, Jerry told us in clear and concise language what the effect would be on our city and our State. He made a difference for many people by improving our understanding and broadening the public debate. The young journalists who follow him would do well to emulate the qualities and character of Jerry Cahill.

While I stand here wishing him all the very best things in his future endeavors, I do so with some regret. That is because without his voice, the public affairs of our State and our Nation will be less enlightened.

Mr. President, Godspeed to Jerome Cahill, newspaperman.

SOVIET AGGRESSION IN THE BALTIC STATES

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, for the third time in the last 51 years, Moscow has begun to implement military occupation of the Baltic States.

This is the conclusion reached by the chargés d'affaires of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia in the face of the brutal military action taken against the Baltic citizens in recent days.

The Lithuanian Red Cross, which has appealed for international medical assistance, reported that, as of Sunday, 13 civilians have been killed and over 160 wounded.

[1] Footnotes at end of article.

Mr. President, expectations are that the tragedy that is continuing in Lithuania, will also be played out in Latvia and Estonia. Soviet troop movements have occurred in both republics, and the Soviet Defense Ministry announced last week that Soviet paratroopers would be sent there as well.

As occurred in Lithuania, anti-independence groups in Latvia and Estonia are threatening to take over the democratically elected governments. These groups, which include the local Communist parties, Soviet military organizations and other anti-independence organizations in Latvia and Estonia, do not have the support of the Latvian and Estonian people.

Despite the risks, the Baltic people and their governments have made it clear that they will not retract their commitment to independence. They are, however, willing to negotiate the means of achieving independence with Moscow.

Tragically, Moscow has responded to their calls for good faith negotiations with a bloody show of force.

What is happening in the Baltic States is not an internal Soviet matter—it is not now, and never has been. Rather, the Soviet annexation of the Baltic States in 1940, like Iraq's annexation of Kuwait, is a blatant violation of international law.

As such, the United States for 51 years, has refused to recognize Soviet occupation of the Baltic States. In keeping with that policy United States opposition to this latest blatant display of Soviet aggression against the Baltic nations must be absolutely clear.

We must insist that the Soviets cease hostilities against the Baltic people, remove their troops from Baltic facilities and government buildings, and initiate good faith negotiations with the democratically elected Baltic governments.

Until that occurs, the Soviets cannot expect to reap the benefits of improved United States-Soviet relations.

Specifically, I believe the Congress should urge the President to halt, or not proceed further with, the issuance of Eximbank insurance coverage and credit guarantees; the consideration of Soviet associate membership status in the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank; or consideration of lifting restrictions on Soviet borrowing at the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

In addition, the United States must do everything possible to strengthen the hand of the democratically elected Baltic governments. We should open closer diplomatic ties with the Baltic governments to pave the way for official recognition of those governments. We should redirect the $900 million in agricultural credit guarantees, recently extended to the Soviet Union, away from the Central Soviet Government and into the Baltic States and other republics which are striving to assert their independence and sovereignty.

In this regard, Mr. President, I am deeply troubled by unconfirmed reports that Moscow has already threatened republics that U.S. grain would be withheld from areas not cooperating with the Kremlin.

In addition, Mr. President, the United States should provide urgently needed medical assistance to the Baltic governments. And, finally, our Government should ask that Soviet aggression against the Baltic people be raised as an urgent issue in the United Nations.

By using military force to assault the Baltic populations, Moscow is now threatening peace throughout the region and stability in Europe.

As stated by the chargés d'affaires of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia:

> The Baltic people have done nothing to warrant the use of force against their nations. Despite their status under international law as occupied countries, they followed the procedures of Soviet law in order to elect democratic governments. They have repeatedly sought to negotiate their differences with Moscow through dialogue. They have pursued their just aspirations for independence through peaceful means, and have maintained order and discipline in the face of provocations and threats. Their attempts to resolve conflicts through reason and dialogue have been met with tanks.

Mr. President, the people of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia must know that the gulf crisis has not weakened our commitment to them, and the Soviet leadership must have no doubt that the use of force against the Baltic people will cause grave damage to United States-Soviet relations.

CRISIS IN THE BALTIC STATES

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, we learned with anguish of Sunday's tragedy in Lithuania; 13 civilian demonstrators were brutally murdered by the Soviet Union. President Bush was right to condemn the killing of these prodemocracy Lithuanians by the Soviet Army. Even as we focus our attention on the crisis in the Persian Gulf, the free world must not turn its back on the Kremlin's desperate attempts to douse the flame of freedom shining in Lithuania and the other independence-minded republics.

It is time for the U.N. Security Council to denounce this most recent use of violence by the Soviet Union against innocent people.

I have today, therefore, sent a letter to Secretary of State James Baker requesting that the United States formally ask the Security Council to take a stand for freedom in Lithuania. The Security Council was decisive and clear in its resolve against Saddam Hussein's ruthless aggression in Kuwait. Now is the time for it to speak out against the Soviet Union's aggression in Lithuania. The Security Council must also demand that the democratically elected Government of Lithuania be restored to full power, and the Kremlin's puppet party, the National Salvation Committee, be denounced as nothing more than a cynical front for the Soviet Government.

Some have argued that the United Nations may not properly consider this issue because the action in the Soviet Union was strictly an internal political matter. I cannot agree. The United States has never recognized the inclusion of the Baltic republics into the U.S.S.R. The Kremlin's attacks against the Lithuanian people should inspire the same anger we display whenever a stronger nation brutally attacks a weaker one.

The United States should take other steps to let President Gorbachev know that we are deeply concerned he is leaning toward a return to the repressive policies that have darkened the Soviet Union's past. First, President Bush should immediately postpone his planned summit with Mr. Gorbachev. Second, the United States must also put on hold its recent agreement to provide the Soviet Union with food credits. The United States, the true beacon of the free world, must never reward efforts to crush human beings' God-given desire to be free.

Within the next few days, the Soviets' actions in Lithuania and the Baltic republics will tell the story behind their professed reforms. We will know whether Mikhail Gorbachev's perestroika merely leads to retrenchment and a return to aggression, or signals a fundamental shift to freedom and democracy; whether we have witnessed a change in principle or in public relations.

I can only hope that this weekend's tragic episode in Vilnius was a mistaken detour along the path to a more open Soviet society.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 2,130th day that Terry Anderson has been held captive in Lebanon.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. McCathran, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. MITCHELL (for himself, Mr. Cranston, Mr. Daschle, Mr. Kerry, Mr. Wirth, Mr. Bingaman, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Lautenberg, Mr. Levin, Mr. DeConcini, Mr. Akaka, Mr. Baucus, Mr. Bryan, Mr. Burdick, Mr. Dixon, Mr. Durenberger, Mr. Gore, Mr. Harkin, Mr. Leahy, Mr. Riegle, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Sarbanes, and Mr. Shelby):

S. 1. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of disability compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for survivors of those who died from service-connected disabilities; to provide for independent scientific review of the available scientific evidence regarding the health effects of exposure to certain herbicide agents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. Simon, Mr. Pell, Mr. Bingaman, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Daschle, Mr. Hollings, Mr. Metzenbaum, Mr. Dodd, Mr. Shelby, Mr. Adams, Mr. Burdick, Mr. Harkin, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Robb, Mr. Sanford, Mr. Bumpers, Ms. Mikulski, Mr. Graham, Mr. Kerry, and Mr. Levin):

S. 2. A bill to promote the achievement of national education goals, to establish a National Council on Educational Goals and an Academic Report Card to measure progress on the goals, and to promote literacy in the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

By Mr. FORD (for Mr. Boren (for himself, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Byrd, Mr. Wirth, Mr. Kerry, Mr. Sanford, Mr. Dodd, Mr. DeConcini, Mr. Bingaman, Mr. Riegle, Mr. Lautenberg, Mr. Adams, Mr. Bradley, and Mr. Harkin)):

S. 3. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for a voluntary system of spending limits for Senate election campaigns, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for Mr. Bentsen (for himself, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Riegle, Mr. Wirth, Mr. Daschle, Mr. Pryor, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Bingaman, Mr. Adams, Mr. Kohl, Mr. Gore, and Mr. Kerry)):

S. 4. A bill to amend titles IV, V, and XIX of the Social Security Act to establish innovative child welfare and family support services in order to strengthen families and avoid placement in foster care, to promote the development of comprehensive substance abuse programs for pregnant women and caretaker relatives with children, to provide improved delivery of health care services to low-income children, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. DODD (for himself, Mr. Wirth, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Packwood, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Jeffords, Ms. Mikulski, Mr. Hatfield, Mr. Metzenbaum, Mr. D'Amato, Mr. DeConcini, Mr. Pell, Mr. Simon, Mr. Adams, Mr. Bradley, Mr. Moynihan, Mr. Kerry, Mr. Inouye, Mr. Burdick, Mr. Biden, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Gore, Mr. Lieberman, Mr. Lautenberg, Mr. Reid, Mr. Sarbanes, Mr. Akaka, Mr. Bingaman, Mr. Cranston, Mr. Daschle, Mr. Exon, Mr. Harkin, Mr. Riegle, and Mr. Bryan):

S. 5. A bill to grant employees family temporary medical leave under certain circumstances, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. Simpson, Mr. Domenice Mr. Murkowski, and Mr. Chafee):

S. 6. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide a voluntary system of flexible fundraising targets for Senate elections, to increase public disclosure of activities of Senators, to reduce special interest influence in Senate elections, to increase competition in politics, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. Simpson):

S. 7. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to increase competition and fairness in politics, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Glenn, Mr. Packwood, Mr. Bentsen, Mr. Warner, Mr. Inouye, Mr. Durenberger, Mr. Ford, Mr. Simpson, Mr. Cochran, Mr. Biden, Mr. Bingaman, Mr. Boren, Mr. Bradley, Mr. Brown, Mr. Bryan, Mr. Burdick, Mr. Cranston, Mr. D'Amato, Mr. Danforth, Mr. DeConcini, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Garn, Mr. Gorton, Mr. Graham, Mr. Grassley, Mr. Hatch, Mr. Helms, Mr. Hollings, Mr. Jeffords, Mr. Johnston, Mrs. Kassebaum, Mr. Kohl, Mr. Lautenberg, Mr. Lieberman, Mr. Lott, Mr. Lugar, Mr. McCain, Ms. Mikulski, Mr. Murkowski, Mr. Nunn, Mr. Pell, Mr. Pressler, Mr. Pryor, Mr. Reid, Mr. Riegle, Mr. Sanford, Mr. Sarbanes, Mr. Simon, Mr. Specter, Mr. Thurmond, Mr. Wirth, Mr. Akaka, Mr. Shelby, Mr. Kerry, Mr. Robb, Mr. Baucus, Mr. Nickles, Mr. McConnell, Mr. Domenici, and Mr. Moynihan):

S. 8. A bill to extend the time for performing certain acts under the internal revenue laws for individuals performing services as part of the Desert Shield operation; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. Simpson):

S. 9. A bill to amend the foreign aid policy of the United States toward countries in transition from communism to democracy; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. Simpson, Mr. Nickles, Mr. D'Amato, Mr. Helms, Mr. Cochran, Mr. Mack, Mr. Exon, Mr. Warner, Mr. McConnell, Mr. Durenberger, Mr. Jeffords, Mr. Lugar, Mr. Burns, Mr. Symms, Mr. Smith, Mr. Cohen, and Mr. Roth):

S. 10. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to phase out the earnings test over a 5-year period for individuals who have attained retirement age, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. Hollings, Mr. Kasten, Mr. Pell, Mr. Hatch, Mr. Inouye, and Mr. Symms):

S. 11. A bill to cut Social Security contribution rates and return Social Security to pay-as-you-go financing, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. DANFORTH (for himself, Mr. Inouye, Mr. Hollings, Mr. Gore, Mr. Lieberman, and Mr. Metzenbaum):

S. 12. A bill to amend title VI of the Communications Act of 1934 to ensure carriage on cable television of local news and other programming and to restore the right of local regulatory authorities to regulate cable television rates, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 13. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude from gross income the gain on certain sales of lands subject to ground leases; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SARBANES (for himself, Ms. Mikulski, Mr. Warner, and Mr. Robb):

S. 14. A bill to assist in the restoration of the Chesapeake Bay, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

S. 1. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of disability compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for survivors of those who died from service-connected disabilities; to provide for independent scientific review of the available scientific evidence regarding the health effects of exposure to certain herbicide agents; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS' COMPENSATION COST-OF-LIVING INCREASE AND AGENT ORANGE ACT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce as the first piece of legislation that will be considered by the Senate in the 102d Congress S. 1, the Veterans Compensation Cost-of-Living Increase and Agent Orange Act of 1991.

Joining me in this effort are three of the most active veterans advocates in the U.S. Senate, ALAN CRANSTON, the chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, TOM DASCHLE, and JOHN KERRY.

S. 1 will improve Federal assistance to disabled veterans and the survivors of veterans who have died from service-connected disabilities by providing a full compensation cost-of-living adjustment or COLA to eligible veterans and their survivors.

As my colleagues know, the U.S. Government provides compensation benefits to service-disabled veterans and their survivors in order to compensate them for the loss of earning capacity due to those disabilities. The monthly compensation paid to each veteran is based on the degree of disability and the number of dependents. In the case of a veteran's survivors, compensation benefits are based on the veteran's service rank.

The compensation and DIC programs are not indexed to any inflation factor as are most other Federal entitlement programs. Veterans and their survivors depend on Congress to enact annual cost-of-living adjustments or COLA's to prevent the erosion of their benefits.

In the closing days of the 101st Congress, legislation that would have provided cost-of-living increase in the veterans disability compensation and survivors benefits programs were derailed in both Houses over controversy with agent orange.

In the Senate, the COLA's were included in S. 2100, the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Amendments of 1990, reported by the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee in July.

There was no opposition to the compensation COLA provisions in S. 2100, but Senators who opposed other provisions, particularly those related to agent orange compensation and research, made it impossible to reach a unanimous consent agreement that would have allowed debate and votes on these issues.

As a result, S. 2100 was never brought to the Senate floor for consideration. Disabled veterans and their survivors were the only recipients of Federal entitlement programs who did not receive a COLA prior to the adjournment of the 101st Congress. That situation requires immediate correction by this Congress.

S. 1 will do that by increasing the monthly rates of disability compensation and of dependency and indemnity compensation [DIC] by 5.4 percent, effective retroactively to January 1, 1991.

In addition, and no less importantly, S. 1 will mandate an independent review of the health effects of veterans exposure to agent orange or other herbicides while serving in the Republic of Vietnam.

For more than a decade, Vietnam veterans and their families have pressed the Federal Government on three fronts related to exposure to agent orange and other herbicides in Vietnam. These individuals have demanded: First, compensation for their disabilities when they are related to exposure; second, answers to their questions about the adverse health effects of exposure and, third, access to VA health care for these disabilities.

Under the leadership of Senator CRANSTON and bolstered by the energy and advocacy of Senators DASCHLE and KERRY, the Senate has several times passed legislation addressing those issues.

In the 101st Congress, the Senate twice approved legislation to provide compensation for veterans suffering from three diseases associated with agent orange exposure and to help resolve the scientific questions about the health effects of veterans' exposure to agent orange or other herbicides.

The agent orange provisions which were at the heart of the dispute over S. 2100 were substantially similar to the agent orange legislation previously passed by the Senate. They are also the basis for the agent orange provisions included in S. 1. These provisions would:

First, codify administrative presumptions of service-connection for the following diseases by reason of service in the Republic of Vietnam: Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma; soft-tissue sarcoma other than osteosarcoma, chondrosarcoma, Kaposi's sarcoma or mesothelioma; and chloracne becoming manifest within 1 year of service in the Republic of Vietnam;

Second, provide for the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to obtain a review by the National Academy of Science of the available scientific evidence regarding the health effects of exposure to dioxin or other chemicals herbicides used in the Vietnam war.

Third, establish a mechanism for the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to prescribe regulations to provide service-connection for other diseases when the Secretary determines, based on sound medical and scientific evidence, including the National Academy of Science's review, that an association exists between exposure and the occurrence of the disease in humans.

Fourth, reinstate through December 31, 1993, the recently expired authority for priority VA health-care for veterans exposed to agent orange or ionizing radiation.

As my colleagues are aware, there is some debate among veterans and their advocates over whether or not agent orange should be considered in conjunction with the retroactive cola or whether veterans are better served by putting off consideration of agent orange for some uncertain time and passing immediately a "clean COLA."

I am of the view that the two issues are important and deserving of immediate consideration.

In addition, Mr. President, the provisions related to agent orange in S. 1, based on provisions that have been twice passed in the last Congress, by themselves are not impediments to the timely passage of the retroactive cost-of-living adjustment if interested Senators work in good faith to reach agreement on the consideration of both issues.

Senator CRANSTON's Veterans' Affairs Committee staff is prepared to start immediately working with interested Senators and other parties to reach such an agreement. I very much hope that agreement can be reached in a short time.

Mr. President, no one questions that America has a special obligation to the men and women who have served the United States in the defense of our Nation. It is in large part their sacrifice and their suffering that has made this country great, which has kept this Nation free.

If for no other reason, this service entitles them to continuing support by the U.S. Government long after actual service has been completed. But, in addition, care for our veterans must be seen to be as important to our national defense as the newest missile or the smartest bomb.

Today, thousands of American troops are massed in Saudi Arabia. Congress has authorized the President to send these men and women into harm's way against a modern army of a brutal dictator. We have in the Middle East the best, most modern military hardware and technology.

But more important, we have the morale, the spirit and the courage of the American men and women who serve us in the Armed Forces, for it is they who operate the hardware and understand the technology. The fact is that every military organization, indeed every human society, rises or falls on human will, human resolve, human courage.

If our Nation fails to meet its obligation to those who served in times of crisis in the past, it will be unable to summon those needed to serve in times of crisis in the future.

So, in addition to providing a measure of economic relief and justice to those who have served before, enactment of S. 1 should also serve as a signal to those who serve in today's Armed Forces that this country recognizes and will meet it most fundamental and sacred obligation to them now and in years to come.

In closing, Mr. President, I hope swift enactment of S. 1 can be accomplished by this Senate. I encourage my colleagues to work with me to that end.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Compensation Cost-of-Living Increase and Agent Orange Act of 1991".

(b) REFERENCES TO TITLE 38.—Whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

TITLE I—COMPENSATION RATE INCREASES

SEC. 101. DISABILITY COMPENSATION.

(a) 5.4-PERCENT INCREASE.—Section 314 is amended—

(1) by striking out "$76" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "$80";

(2) by striking out "$144" in subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "$151";

(3) by striking out "$220" in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "$231";

(4) by striking out "$314" in subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "$330";

(5) by striking out "$446" in subsection (e) and inserting in lieu thereof "$470";

(6) by striking out "$562" in subsection (f) and inserting in lieu thereof "$592";

(7) by striking out "$710" in subsection (g) and inserting in lieu thereof "$748";

(8) by striking out "$821" in subsection (h) and inserting in lieu thereof "$865";

(9) by striking out "$925" in subsection (i) and inserting in lieu thereof "$974";

(10) by striking out "$1,537" in subsection (j) and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,620";

(11) by striking out "$1,911" and "$2,679"in subsection (k) and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,014" and "$2,823", respectively;

(12) by striking out "$1,911" in subsection (l) and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,014";

(13) by striking out "$2,107" in subsection (m) and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,220";

(14) by striking out "$2,397" in subsection (n) and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,526";

(15) by striking out "$2,679" each place it appears in subsections (o) and (p) and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,823";

(16) by striking out "$1,150" and "$1,713" in subsection (r) and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,212" and "$1,805", respectively; and

(17) by striking out "$1,720" in subsection (s) and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,812".

(b) SPECIAL RULE.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs may adjust administratively, consistent with the increases authorized by subsection (a), the rates of disability compensation payable to persons within the purview of section 10 of Public Law 85-857 who are not in receipt of compensation payable pursuant to chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 102. ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR DEPENDENTS.

Section 315(1) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$92" in clause (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "$96";

(2) by striking out "$155" and "$48" in clause (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "$163" and "$50", respectively;

(3) by striking out "$64" and "$48" in clause (C) and inserting in lieu thereof "$67" and "$50", respectively;

(4) by striking out "$74" in clause (D) and inserting in lieu thereof "$77";

(5) by striking out "$169" in clause (E) and inserting in lieu thereof "$178"; and

(6) by striking out "$142" in clause (F) and inserting in lieu thereof "$149".

SEC. 103. CLOTHING ALLOWANCE FOR CERTAIN DISABLED VETERANS.

Section 362 is amended by striking out "$414" and inserting in lieu thereof "$436".

SEC. 104. DEPENDENCY AND INDEMNITY COMPENSATION FOR SURVIVING SPOUSES.

Section 411 is amended—

(1) by striking out the table in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Pay grade	Monthly rate	Pay grade	Monthly rate
E–1	$594	W–4	$852
E–2	612	0–1	752
E–3	629	0–2	776

"[1]If the veteran served as sergeant major of the Army, senior enlisted advisor of the Navy, chief master sergeant of the Air Force, sergeant major of the Marine Corps, or master chief petty officer of the Coast Guard, at the applicable time designated by section 402 of this title, the surviving spouse's rate shall be $875.

"[2]If the veteran served as Chairman or Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Chief of Staff of the Army, Chief of Naval Operations, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, Commandant of the Marine Corps, or Commandant of the Coast Guard, at the applicable time designated by section 402 of this title, the surviving spouse's rate shall be $1,633.";

(2) by striking out "$65" in subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "$68";

(3) by striking out "$169" in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "$178"; and

(4) by striking out "$83" in subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "$87."

SEC. 105. DEPENDENCY AND INDEMNITY COMPENSATION FOR CHILDREN.

(a) DIC for Orphan Children.—Section 413(a) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$284" in clause (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "$299";

(2) by striking out "$409" in clause (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "$431";

(3) by striking out "$529" in clause (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "$557"; and

(4) by striking out "$529" and "$105" in clause (4) and inserting in lieu thereof "$557" and "$110", respectively.

(b) Supplemental DIC for Disabled Adult Children.—Section 414 is amended—

(1) by striking out "$169" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "$178";

(2) by striking out "$284" in subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "$299"; and

(3) by striking out "$144" in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "$151".

SEC. 106. EFFECTIVE DATE FOR RATE INCREASES.

The amendments made by this title shall take effect as of January 1, 1991.

TITLE II—AGENT ORANGE EXPOSURE AND VIETNAM SERVICE

SEC. 201. PRESUMPTION OF SERVICE CONNECTION FOR CERTAIN VETERANS WHO SERVED IN VIETNAM.

Section 312 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) For the purposes of section 310 of this title, and subject to the provisions of section 313 of this title, a disease specified in paragraph (2) of this subsection becoming manifest as specified in such paragraph in a veteran who, during active military, naval, or air service, served in Vietnam during the Vietnam era shall be considered to have been incurred in or aggravated by such service in Vietnam notwithstanding that there is no record of evidence of such disease during the period of such service.

"(2) The diseases referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection are the following:

"(A) Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma becoming manifest to a 10-percent degree of disability or more.

"(B) Each soft-tissue sarcoma becoming manifest to a 10-percent degree of disability or more other than osteosarcoma, chondrosarcoma, Kaposi's sarcoma, or mesothelioma.

"(C) Chloracne or another acneform disease consistent with chloracne becoming manifest to a 10-degree of disability or more within one year after the last date on which the veteran performed active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era.".

SEC. 202. PRESUMPTION OF SERVICE CONNECTION FOR DISEASES ASSOCIATED WITH EFFECTS OF EXPOSURE TO CERTAIN HERBICIDE AGENTS.

(a) Findings.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) It is in the public interest to provide for an independent nonprofit scientific organization which has appropriate expertise and is not connected to the Department of Veterans Affairs to review and evaluate the available scientific evidence regarding associations between diseases and exposure to dioxin and other chemical compounds in herbicides and to make judgments on the degree and probability of such associations, because there is no uniform body of scientific literature on such issues.

(2) The standard of proof required for a scientific conclusion of causation is higher than the standard of proof required for justification of a presumption, for purposes of veterans disability compensation laws, that an adverse health effect is connected, based on sound medical and scientific evidence, to active service in the Armed Forces of the United States.

(b) In General.—(1) Subchapter II of chapter 11 isseded by inserting after section 312 the following new section:

"§312A. Presumption of service connection for diseases associated with effects of exposure to certain herbicide agents

"(a) In General.—(1) For the purposes of section 310 of this title, and subject to section 313 of this title, in the case of a Vietnam veteran who, during Vietnam service, was exposed to an herbicide agent containing dioxin or 2,4-dichlorophenoxyacetic acid or to any other herbicide agent, each disease (if any) listed in regulations prescribed by the Secretary in accordance with this section and identified in such regulations as having positive association with the biological effects of exposure to such herbicide agent shall be considered to have been incurred in or aggravated by such service, notwithstanding that there is no record of evidence of such disease during the period of such service.

"(2) For the purposes of this subsection, a veteran who performed Vietnam service and has a disease referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be presumed to have been exposed during such service to an herbicide agent containing dioxin or 2,4-dichlorophenoxyacetic acid, and may be presumed to have been exposed during such service to any other chemical compound in an herbicide agent, unless there is affirmative evidence to establish conclusively that the veteran was not exposed to any such agent during such service.

"(3) The Secretary may extend the applicability of paragraph (1) of this subsection to the case of any veteran who, during the performance of active military, naval, or air service outside Vietnam, was exposed to an agent of the same type as the herbicide agent referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(b) Diseases to be Prescribed in Regulations.—(1) Whenever the Secretary determines pursuant to this section that there is positive association between any disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam, the Secretary shall prescribe regulations listing each disease having such positive association. In the case of each disease listed in the regulations, the Secretary shall identify the herbicide agent that causes the biological effects with which the disease has positive association. After the Secretary prescribes regulations pursuant to this paragraph, the Secretary shall periodically revise such regulations, as appropriate, to reflect determinations periodically made pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) The Secretary shall periodically (not less often than biennially)—

"(A) determine whether any disease not listed in regulations under this section has positive association with such effects; and

"(B) determine whether any disease listed in such regulations does not have positive association with such effects.

"(3) The Secretary shall make determinations for the purpose of this subsection on the basis of reports received by the Secretary from a contract scientific organization pursuant to this section and all other relevant scientific evidence, information, or analyses available to the Secretary at the time of the determinations.

"(c) Utilization of Contract Scientific Organization.—In prescribing and revising regulations for the purposes of subsection (b), the Secretary shall obtain, by contract, the determinations and estimates of a contract scientific organization as provided in this section.

"(d) Required Activities of Contract Scientific Organizations.—(1) Each contract entered into under subsection (c) of this section shall provide for a contract scientific organization—

"(A) to determine, in the case of each herbicide agent—

"(i) which diseases (if any) have positive association with the biological effects of exposure to such agent, including specifically effects involving porphyrin synthesis, nervous system function, immune function, reproduction, and birth defects, and psychological and psychiatric effects;

"(ii) which diseases (if any) have limited positive association with such biological effects;

"(iii) which diseases (if any) have insubstantial association with such biological effects; and

"(iv) to the extent practicable, the biological basis for the positive, limited positive, and insubstantial associations of diseases referred to in subclauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of this clause with such biological effects; and

"(B) to estimate the extent of the association between each such disease and such biological effects using methods as quantitative and as objective as the relevant available data permit.

"(2) The contract scientific organization shall specifically determine whether there is positive, limited positive, or insubstantial association between the biological effects referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection and the following diseases:

"(A) Lung cancer.

"(B) Each other cancer.

"(e) Required Provisions for First Contract.—(1) The first contract entered into under subsection (c) of this section shall provide for the contract scientific organization—

"(A) to conduct as comprehensive a survey and evaluation as is practicable of the completed and ongoing scientific studies of, and other scientific evidence or information regarding, the effects that herbicide agents have on humans or other animals that have been exposed to such agents; and

"(B) make its determinations and estimates on the basis of the results of such survey and evaluation.

"(2) The contract scientific organization shall conduct the survey and evaluation referred to in paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection through a panel composed of recognized experts in toxicology, medicine, epidemiology, statistics, biochemistry, and related fields. The conduct of such survey shall be subject to appropriate peer review.

"(f) REQUIRED CONTRACT PROVISIONS RELATING TO PERIODIC DETERMINATIONS OF THE SECRETARY.—A contract entered into under subsection (c) of this section in connection with the Secretary's periodic determinations under subsection (b)(2) of this section shall require a contract scientific organization—

"(1) to conduct as comprehensive a survey and evaluation as is practicable of the scientific studies, evidence, and information referred to in subsection (e)(1)(A) of this section that have become available since the last such survey and evaluation under this section; and

"(2) make its determinations and estimates on the basis of the results of such survey and evaluation and all other surveys and evaluations conducted for the purposes of this section.

"(g) REPORTS OF CONTRACT SCIENTIFIC ORGANIZATIONS.—(1) Each contract scientific organization making determinations and estimates under this section shall transmit to the Secretary and the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a written report regarding its determinations and estimates.

"(2) Each report shall contain—

"(A) the name of each disease (if any) determined to have positive association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam and the identity of such agent;

"(B) the name of each disease (if any) determined to have limited positive association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam and the identity of such agent;

"(C) the name of each disease (if any) determined to have insubstantial association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam and the identity of such agent; and

"(D) with respect to each disease named pursuant to clauses (A), (B), and (C) of this paragraph—

"(i) a discussion of the biological basis for the association;

"(ii) the contract scientific organization's estimate of the statistical significance of the association;

"(iii) the contract scientific organization's estimate of the relative risk for such disease in veterans who, during Vietnam service, were exposed to an herbicide agent; and

"(iv) the probability that the estimates referred to in subclauses (ii) and (iii) are correct.

"(3) Estimates and probabilities are not required under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv) of paragraph (2)(D) of this subsection when the available data do not permit meaningful estimates and probabilities.

"(4)(A) If a contract scientific organization determines that a disease has positive association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent used in Vietnam, such organization shall determine whether there is a reasonable basis for concluding that a Vietnam veteran with the highest level of exposure to that herbicide agent in Vietnam was exposed to such agent under the circumstances necessary for such biological effects.

"(B) If a contract scientific organization determines that there is no such reasonable basis, the organization shall state that determination in a report under this subsection and include in such report—

"(i) a description of the evidence that supports such determination;

"(ii) a description of the evidence (if any) that supports alternative conclusions; and

"(iii) a full discussion of the organization's reasons for such determination, including a discussion of the reasons for the organization's determination that the evidence referred to in clause (i) of this subparagraph outweighs the evidence (if any) referred to in clause (ii) of this subparagraph.

"(C) A determination with respect to reasonable basis is not required under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph when the available data do not permit a meaningful determination.

"(5) The first report under this subsection shall be transmitted to the Secretary and the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives on or before the date one year after the date of the enactment of the Veterans' Compensation Cost-of-Living Increase and Agent Orange Act of 1991.

"(h) ACTIONS OF THE SECRETARY AFTER RECEIVING THE FIRST REPORT.—(1) Not later than 60 days after the date on which the Secretary receives the first report under subsection (g) of this section, the Secretary shall—

"(A) for the purpose of subsection (b)(1) of this section—

"(i) determine in accordance with subsection (b)(3) of this section whether there is positive association between any disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam; and

"(ii) if so, issue proposed regulations listing each such disease and specifying such agent;

"(B) transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report containing the scientific basis for including each disease listed in such proposed regulations, and

"(C) if any disease listed in the first report under subsection (g) of this subsection as having positive association is not listed in such proposed regulations—

"(i) include in the report to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs the scientific basis for not including that disease in the proposed regulations; and

"(ii) publish in the Federal Register a notice that such disease is not listed in the proposed regulations despite the report under subsection (g) and include in such notice a discussion of such scientific basis.

"(2) Not later than 60 days after the date on which the Secretary issues any proposed regulations pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall issue final regulations under subsection (b) of this section. Such regulations shall be effective on the date of issuance.

"(i) ACTIONS OF THE SECRETARY AFTER RECEIVING A PERIODIC REPORT.—(1) Upon receiving a contract scientific organization's report after a periodic survey and evaluation conducted for the purpose of subsection (b)(2) of this section, the Secretary shall—

"(A) determine in accordance with subsection (b)(3) of this section whether—

"(i) any disease named in such report not listed in regulations under subsection (b) of this section has positive association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam; and

"(ii) any disease listed in such regulations does not have positive association with such effects; and

"(B) promptly transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report containing the Secretary's determinations under clause (A) of this paragraph and the scientific bases for such determinations.

"(2)(A) Not later than 60 days after transmitting a report to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection, the Secretary shall prescribe or revise regulations, as the case may be, pursuant to subsection (b) of this section as may be necessary to reflect the Secretary's determinations included in that report. The regulations or revisions of regulations, as the case may be, shall take effect 30 days after the date on which the Secretary issues the proposed regulations or revisions, as the case may be.

"(B) If any disease listed in a periodic report under subsection (g) of this section as having positive association is not listed in such regulations or revisions of regulations, as the case may be, the Secretary shall, not later than 60 days after transmitting a report under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, publish in the Federal Register a notice that such disease is not listed in the proposed regulations despite such report and include in such notice a discussion of the scientific basis for not including that disease in such regulations or revisions.

"(j) EFFECT OF REMOVAL OF DISEASE FROM REGULATIONS.—Whenever a disease is removed from regulations pursuant to paragraph (2) of subsection (i) of this section as a result of a determination under paragraph (1)(A)(ii) of such subsection—

"(1) any veteran who was awarded compensation for such disease on the basis of the presumption provided in subsection (a) of this section before the effective date of the removal shall continue to be entitled to receive compensation on such basis; and

"(2) any survivor of a veteran who was awarded dependency and indemnity compensation for the death of a veteran resulting from such disease on the basis of such presumption shall continue to be entitled to receive dependency and indemnity compensation on such basis.

"(k) LIMITATION ON CONTRACT AUTHORITY.—The contract authority provided in this section shall be effective for a fiscal year to such extent or in such amount as is provided for in an appropriation Act.

"(l) TERMINATION OF EFFECTIVENESS OF THIS SECTION.—(1) Subsections (b) through (i) and (k) of this section shall cease to be effective 10 years after the first day of the fiscal year in which a contract scientific organization transmits to the Secretary the first report under subsection (g) of this section.

"(2) Paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not affect the continued effectiveness of—

"(A) subsection (a) of this section and the regulations referred to in such subsection; and

"(B) subsection (j) of this section.

"(m) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section:

"(1) The term 'Vietnam veteran' means a veteran who performed Vietnam service.

"(2) The term 'Vietnam service' means active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

"(3) The term 'herbicide agent' means an agent in an herbicide used in support of United States and allied military operations in Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

"(4) The term 'biological effect', with respect to exposure to an herbicide agent, means—

"(A) each known biological effect of such exposure on humans, including those biological effects resulting from relevant host and environmental factors; and

"(B) each biological effect of such exposure on humans that it is reasonable to infer on the basis of the known biological effects of such exposure on appropriate animal models.

"(5) The term 'positive', with respect to association between a disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam, means that the credible evidence for the association is equal to or outweighs the credible evidence against the association.

"(6) The term 'limited positive', with respect to association between a disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam, means that the credible evidence against the association outweighs the credible evidence for the association but that there is substantial credible evidence for the association.

"(7) The term 'insubstantial', with respect to association between a disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam, means that there is some credible evidence for the association but the evidence is not substantial.

"(8) The term 'relative risk', with respect to a report of a contract scientific organization for the purposes of subsection (g) of this section, shall have the meaning determined by such organization and specified in such report.

"(9) The term 'contract scientific organization', with respect to a contract under this section, means—

"(A) the National Academy of Sciences; or

"(B) in the event that the Secretary determines that the National Academy of Sciences is unwilling to enter into such contract, any other appropriate private nonprofit scientific organization which has appropriate expertise and has no connection with the Department of Veterans Affairs and which the Secretary identifies to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives in a written notification received by such committees at least 90 days before the date on which such contract is entered into.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 312 the following new item:

"312A. Presumption of service connection for diseases associated with effects of exposure to certain herbicide agents.".

(c) Conforming Amendment.—Section 313 is amended by inserting "or 312A" after "section 312" each place it appears.

SEC. 203. RESULTS OF EXAMINATIONS AND TREATMENT OF VETERANS FOR DISABILITIES RELATED TO EXPOSURE TO CERTAIN HERBICIDES OR TO SERVICE IN VIETNAM.

(a) In General.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall compile and analyze, on a continuing basis, all clinical data that (1) is obtained by the Department of Veterans Affairs in connection with examinations and treatment furnished to veterans by the Department after November 3, 1981, by reason of eligibility provided in section 610(e)(1)(A) of title 38, United States Code, and (2) is likely to be scientifically useful in determining the association, if any, between the disabilities of veterans referred to in such section and exposure to dioxin or any other toxic substance referred to in such section or between such disabilities and active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

(b) Annual Report.—The Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives an annual report containing—

(1) the information compiled in accordance with subsection (a);

(2) the Secretary's analysis of such information;

(3) a discussion of the types and incidences of disabilities identified by the Department of Veterans Affairs in the case of veterans referred to in subsection (a);

(4) the Secretary's explanation for the incidence of such disabilities;

(5) other explanations for the incidence of such disabilities considered reasonable by the Secretary;

(6) the Secretary's views on the scientific validity of drawing conclusions from the incidence of such disabilities, as evidenced by the data compiled under subsection (a), about any association between such disabilities and exposure to dioxin or any other toxic substance referred to in section 610(e)(1)(A) of title 38, United States Code, or between such disabilities and active military, naval, or air service, in Vietnam during the Vietnam era; and

(7) the evaluation of such report submitted by the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment pursuant to subsection (c)(2).

(c) Consultation With OTA.—(1) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall consult with the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment before compiling and analyzing any information under this section and shall submit each annual report required by subsection (b) to the Director before submitting such report to the committees referred to in such subsection.

(2) The Director of the Office of Technology Assessment shall review each annual report submitted under paragraph (1) and transmit to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs the Director's evaluation of the content of the report.

(d) First Report.—The first report under subsection (b) shall be submitted one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 204. TISSUE ARCHIVING SYSTEM.

(a) Establishment of System.—For the purpose of facilitating future scientific research on the effects of exposure of veterans to dioxin and other toxic agents in herbicides used in support of United States and allied military operations in Vietnam during the Vietnam era, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall establish and maintain a system for the collection and storage of voluntarily contributed samples of blood and tissue of veterans who performed active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era. The system may be administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs or under a contract awarded by the Secretary, whichever is more cost-effective.

(b) Security of Specimens.—The Secretary shall ensure that the tissue is collected and stored under physically secure conditions and that the tissue is maintained in a condition that is useful for research referred to in subsection (a).

(c) Authorized Use of Specimens.—The Secretary may make blood and tissue available from the system for research referred to in subsection (a) in a manner consistent with the privacy rights and interests of the blood and tissue donors.

(d) Limitations on Acceptance of Samples.—The Secretary may prescribe such limitations on the acceptance and storage of blood and tissue samples as the Secretary considers appropriate consistent with the purpose specified in the first sentence of subsection (a).

(e) Consultation Requirements.—(1) To the extent provided under any agreement entered into by the Secretary and the National Academy of Sciences, the Secretary shall consult with the National Academy of Sciences regarding the establishment and maintenance of the tissue archiving system under this section, including any limitation to be prescribed under subsection (d).

(2) In the event that the National Academy of Sciences does not enter into an agreement for consultation under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall consult with the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment on the establishment and maintenance of the tissue archiving system under this section, including any limitation to be prescribed under subsection (d).

(f) Contract Authority Subject to Appropriation.—The contract authority provided in this section shall be effective for a fiscal year to such extent or in such amount as is provided for in an appropriation Act.

SEC. 205. SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH FEASIBILITY STUDIES PROGRAM.

(a) Establishment of Program.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall establish a program to provide for the conduct of studies of the feasibility of conducting additional scientific research on—

(1) health hazards resulting from exposure to dioxin;

(2) health hazards resulting from exposure to other toxic agents in herbicides used in support of United States and allied military operations in Vietnam during the Vietnam era; and

(3) health hazards resulting from active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

(b) Program Requirements.—(1) Under the program established pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary shall, pursuant to criteria prescribed pursuant to paragraph (2), award contracts or furnish financial assistance to non-Government entities for the conduct of studies referred to in subsection (a).

(2) The Secretary shall prescribe criteria for (A) the selection of entities to be awarded contracts or to receive financial assistance under the program, and (B) the approval of studies to be conducted under such contracts or with such financial assistance.

(c) Report.—The Secretary shall promptly report the results of studies conducted under the program to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

(d) Consultation With the National Academy of Sciences.—To the extent provided under any agreement entered into by the Secretary and the National Academy of Sciences (1) the Secretary shall consult with the National Academy of Sciences regarding the establishment and administration of the program under subsection (a) and (2) the National Academy of Sciences shall review the studies conducted under contracts awarded pursuant to the program and the studies conducted with financial assistance furnished pursuant to the program. The agreement shall require the National Academy of Sciences to submit to the Secretary and the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives any recommendations that the National Academy of Sciences considers appropriate regarding any studies reviewed under the agreement.

(e) AUTHORITY SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION.—The authorities to enter into contracts and to furnish financial assistance provided in this section shall be effective for a fiscal year to such extent or in such amount as is provided for in an appropriation Act.

SEC. 206. OUTREACH SERVICES.

Section 1204(a) of the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1988 (division B of Public Law 100-687; 102 Stat. 4125) is amended—

(1) in clause (1), by striking out ", as such information on health risks becomes known";

(2) by redesignating clauses (1) and (2) as clauses (A) and (B), respectively;

(3) by inserting "(1)" after "PROGRAM.—"; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall annually furnish updated information on health risks described in paragraph (1)(A) to veterans referred to in paragraph (1).".

SEC. 207. REPORT RELATING TO RESEARCH ON TREATMENTS FOR EXPOSURE TO DIOXIN AND OTHER TOXIC AGENTS.

Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report containing a discussion of the research being conducted to identify and develop treatments for physiological absorption of dioxin and other toxic agents similar to the toxic agents in herbicides used in support of United States and allied operations in Vietnam during the Vietnam era, including research relating to exposure to dioxin and other toxic agents outside Vietnam.

SEC. 208. EXTENSION OF HEALTH-CARE ELIGIBILITY BASED ON AGENT ORANGE OR IONIZING RADIATION EXPOSURE.

Section 610(e)(3) is amended by striking out "December 31, 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1993".

SEC. 209. DEFINITIONS.

In this title—

(1) the terms "veteran", "service-connected", "active military, naval, or air service", and "Vietnam era" shall have the meanings given those terms in paragraphs (2), (16), (24), and (29), respectively, of section 101 of title 38, United States Code;

(2) the term "disability" refers to a disability within the meaning of chapter 11 of such title; and

(3) the term "soft-tissue sarcoma" means any sarcoma other than osteosarcoma, chondrosarcoma, Kaposi's sarcoma, and mesothelioma.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, this past Saturday the U.S. Congress authorized the President to send American troops to battle if necessary to achieve an Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait. Our Nation is facing one of the most difficult times in our history, with over 400,000 American men and women poised to make whatever sacrifice is required of them. Regardless of the differences we may have about certain aspects of our policy in the Persian Gulf, one of the points on which we must all agree is that our men and women in the gulf deserve our unfailing support.

The need for us to support our troops means more than providing them the best weapons we have to offer. It means providing them the health care and assistance we have always promised them. It means ensuring service-disabled veterans receive timely cost-of-living adjustments. And it means giving veterans the benefit of the doubt if they are harmed by chemical or biological warfare.

If called to battle, many of our troops will come home wounded. Some of those wounds will be readily apparent, but there will be others we will not be able to see. It may be years before some of the wounds appear. Nevertheless, we must be ready and willing to address them.

This weighs heavily on the minds of some of us because we have not yet come to terms with the wounds of the last war, Vietnam—the wounds we could not see when American troops came home then. So far, we have failed to give agent orange and PTSD victims the total benefit of the doubt. As we contemplate the tragic possibility of sending a new generation of Americans to war, we need to rededicate ourselves to healing the wounds of previous wars. For if we fail to meet our commitments to the men and women who serve us in war, how can we expect them to fight the next one?

And if we believe the Vietnam-era issues of agent orange and post-traumatic stress disorder are controversial now, I suggest we start thinking about all the difficult issues surrounding chemical and biological warfare that could emerge from a war in the Persian Gulf.

Mr. President, one of my biggest disappointments during the 101st Congress came last October when it failed to enact S. 2100, the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Amendments of 1990, which included a 5.4-percent COLA for service-disabled veterans. S. 2100 also contained a number of other provisions, including an increase in VA physicians' and dentists' pay; a provision to protect the VA medical care budget from automatic budget cuts; compensation for veterans suffering as a result of their exposure to atomic radiation; improved treatment of veterans suffering from post traumatic stress disorder; and a package of compensation and scientific research to address the outstanding issues related to veterans' exposure to agent orange.

The failure to enact S. 2100 resulted from a silent filibuster in the closing days of the 101st Congress orchestrated by those who objected to some of the benefits authorized in the bill. Negotiations to break the impasse failed, and veterans became the only Federal beneficiaries whose COLA's were denied.

The legislation the majority leader, Senator CRANSTON, Senator KERRY, and I are introducing today will rectify this situation. S. 1 will ensure that service-disabled veterans receive a 5.4-percent COLA retroactive to January 1, 1991. If the House and Senate act quickly and responsibly, veterans will receive their first COLA check, including a catch-up lump sum payment, on March 1.

This COLA is critical, for many service-disabled veterans and their families depend on their disability checks to meet their basic needs. Withholding their COLA makes them the undeserving losers in a high-stakes political battle over which they have no control.

S. 1 will also ensure that we finally address some of the outstanding issues related to veteran's exposure to agent orange. The bill includes the agent orange provisions contained in S. 2100 and reported by the Veterans' Affairs Committee unanimously last year. Those provisions are almost identical to the agent orange bill the Senate passed twice in 1989, once by a vote of 92 to 8. They are also nearly identical to the agent orange provisions passed by the House Veterans' Affairs Committee and the full House last year.

In an effort to expedite smooth passage of agent orange legislation at the earliest possible date, the lead authors of last year's Senate bill are working with members of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee to reach an agreement that is satisfactory to all parties. I am optimistic about those negotiations and I sincerely hope in the next few days they can be successful. However, in the absence of an agreement, it will be necessary to press for timely passage of S. 1.

Every single Member of this body and of the other house professes to support the rights of veterans who were injured as a result of their service. Now is the time for us to demonstrate that support in real terms—to stand up and at long last resolve this very serious issue.

The first official agent orange spray mission flew in 1962. The United States left Vietnam in 1975. Since their return, Vietnam veterans have suffered disabilities they believe are related to their exposure to agent orange and many scientific studies substantiate that fact. Many believe their children are also suffering the effects of that exposure. As long as some of us have been in Congress, in my case since 1979, we have tried to ensure that the Government that sent these men and women to war acknowledges and treats their wounds, compensates them for their inability to work, and answers their questions honestly. We have worked for 4 years to pass this modest legislation compensating veterans suffering from two rare cancers and providing for an independent review of scientific evidence related to the health effects of exposure.

For many veterans it has been over 20 years, and they still have no help, no answers from their Government. It is time for that to change. Today we introduce this bill to send that loud, clear message. And to promise America's veterans—all service-disabled veterans, including those disabled by their exposure to agent orange—we will insist that they be treated with the respect and gratitude they deserve.

Mr. President, this legislation would not be possible were it not for four other Members of Congress. First, I want to thank Senator JOHN KERRY who has been my partner throughout the legislative process in the Senate, and Congressman LANE EVANS, who has led the agent orange fight in the House of Representatives. It has been a long struggle, and their dedication to agent orange victims has been unequaled.

Of course, I also want to thank Senator ALAN CRANSTON, the chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, for the resolve he has shown to get this legislation enacted. He has weathered the stormy negotiations, and very few people will ever fully appreciate what a difficult task that has been. I am deeply grateful to him and to his staff for all of their diligent work.

Finally, I sincerely want to thank our majority leader, who has been a strong supporter of this legislation and has shown a tireless commitment to ensuring its consideration and enactment. That commitment has been demonstrated again today by his introduction of S. 1, by showing, as he has, his commitment and the priority Senate Democrats hold, to passing this very significant legislation.

I hope all my colleagues will join us in supporting the earliest possible enactment of this legislation. Our Nation's veterans should not be asked to wait any longer.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following statement on behalf of Mr. CRANSTON:

• Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I congratulate the majority leader, Mr. MITCHELL, on his selection of the proposed Veterans' Compensation Cost-of-Living Increase and Agent Orange Act of 1991 to be the very first bill, S. 1, of the 102d Congress. In making this choice, he acknowledged the very fundamental nature of the Nation's obligation to those who have incurred disabilities during service to the Nation, and their families, as well as to those whose exposure to certain chemicals during their service in Vietnam may have resulted in cancer or other very serious diseases.

This legislation—which is derived from S. 2100 from the 101st Congress, the proposed Veterans Benefits and Health Care Amendments of 1990, as reported by the Committee on Veterans' Benefits on July 12, 1990—would provide a 5.4-percent increase in the rates of disability compensation paid to the more than 2.1 million veterans who have service-connected disabilities and dependency and indemnity compensation [DIC] paid to 323,000 survivors of those who died from service-connected disabilities.

This bill would also provide for an independent scientific review—intended to be conducted by the National Academy of Sciences—of all relevant evidence of the health effects of Vietnam veterans' exposure to agent orange or other herbicides and would establish a procedure whereby VA must determine, using the report of forests independent review, whether presumptions of service-connection should be created for diseases of Vietnam veterans based on whether such diseases have a positive association with such exposure. In addition, the bill would, among other things, codify in title 38, United States Code, the administratively established presumptions of service-connection of chloracne, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, and soft-tissue sarcoma.

Mr. President, as my colleagues are aware, final action on all of the provisions of this legislation should have been achieved last year. On October 15, 1990, the House passed very similar legislation in H.R. 5326, and, through either informal negotiations or formal conference, the differences between the House bill and S. 2100 as reported should have been resolved at that point. However, as my colleagues are aware, because of objections on the other side of the aisle, the Senate was unable to proceed to the consideration of the bill. As a result, service-disabled veterans and the survivors of those who died from service-connected causes did not receive COLA's in their VA compensation benefits. Likewise, the many other beneficial provisions in S. 2100, an omnibus veterans' bill, were not enacted last year.

As I stated at the time, in remarks beginning on page S17727 of the RECORD for October 27, 1990, the inability to enact the compensation COLA and the agent orange and other important veterans' provisions was a bitter disappointment to those of us who had worked so hard to achieve their enactment. More importantly, the non-enactment represented a unique breach in our Nation's commitment to disabled veterans and their families.

Mr. President, we must act as quickly as possible this year to enact these critically important and urgent COLA and agent orange provisions. The COLA provisions, which will take effect as of January 1, 1991, will provide for retroactive payment of the COLA, but it is still important to get the increased amounts into the hands of veterans and survivors as soon as possible. The effects of inflation already have been felt by these individuals.

Likewise, action on the agent orange provisions are overdue and we owe it to those who served in Vietnam to provide for this most important effort to resolve the scientific uncertainty regarding the adverse health effects that they may have suffered as a result of their exposure to dioxin or other chemicals in herbicides used in Vietnam.

Mr. President, to that end, extensive informal negotiations have been conducted since the 101st Congress adjourned to arrive at provisions that will be agreeable to the key leaders on this issue in both bodies and both parties. I am pleased to report that a cooperative spirit has prevailed in these discussions and that much progress has been made. For this I am very grateful to my counterpart on the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, Representative SONNY MONTGOMERY, the distinguished Senators from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] and Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], who have been leading advocates in the Senate for action on agent orange, and the ranking minority member of the House Committee, Mr. STUMP, along with others on the two committees. I am very hopeful that we will very soon have an agreement that will enable the Congress quickly to enact the COLA and agent orange provisions. We should also then be able to move swiftly to enact other important provisions—including those to improve and update VA physicians' and dentists' special pay, to revise VA's collective bargaining, discipline, and grievance rules for title 38 health-care personnel, and to improve veterans employment and education programs, and many others.

Mr. President, the need for immediate action on this COLA and agent orange legislation is a matter of great urgency. We must do all we can to make up for the ground we lost at the end of the 101st Congress. Also, through our actions on such important veterans' legislation, we must demonstrate to the American people and most especially our military personnel stationed in the Persian Gulf area, who stand at the ready in this time of great peril, that the Congress remembers all of those who have worn the uniform and that we will stand behind the brave men and women of Operation Desert Shield 100 percent.•

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, last Thursday I came to the floor of the Senate to speak against the rush to war in the Middle East. I argued that too many questions remain unanswered about the ramifications of the looming battle.

Foremost among those questions is the issue of how our Nation treats its veterans.

I pointed out that our VA hospitals have been cutting staff and services these past several years. The hospitals cannot care for those already needing help. I asked my colleagues, if they were ready to spend the money on a new generation of patients?

I reminded my colleagues that cost in human lives is not limited to the battlefield. In the case of Vietnam, thousands of veterans have committed suicide since coming home. The human costs, pain and suffering do not end when the combat ends.

I asked my colleagues if they were ready for another generation of amputees, paraplegics, burn victims and whatever new term will be for combat fatigue, shell shock or PTSD.

I don't believe that we are ready.

I believe that we are a country that is still struggling with agent orange, outreach centers, post traumatic stress disorder and homeless veterans.

At no time was our struggle more apparent than in the final days of the session last year when Congress failed to pass a COLA bill.

That legislation, S. 2100, was critical because it provided the most fundamental of benefits, a cost-of-living increase.

S. 2100 was held up by certain Senators who refused to allow the Senate even to debate the merits of the legislation.

Mr. President, there are 2.2 million veterans with service-connected disabilities and 911,000 survivors of veterans who died from service-connected disabilities who depend on the COLA in order to keep pace with inflation. Because Congress failed to act these people undoubtedly suffered.

This is a new year and a new session and I am pleased to be cosponsoring S. 1, along with the majority leader, Senator MITCHELL; the chairman of the Veterans' Committee, Senator ALAN CRANSTON; and Senator TOM DASCHLE, who has been the most forceful leader on the issue of agent orange in the Congress.

S. 1 is a bill which contains only two of the provisions from last year's omnibus veterans' bill, but they are, in my opinion, the two most important provisions.

S. 1 provides a 5.4-percent COLA for service-disabled veterans retroactive to January 1, 1991. If Congress acts with haste, veterans should receive their COLA check, including retroactive payments, by March 1.

S. 1 also contains provisions relating to agent orange. These provisions are virtually identical to those which the Senate passed last year by a vote of 92-8 and which the House passed in committee. S. 1 will compensate veterans suffering from two rare cancers and provide for an independent review of scientific evidence related to the effects of exposure.

Mr. President, as we approach war in the Middle East, we must stand behind the veteran in this country. The passage of this bill will send a strong message that we value military service to our country. It will send a strong message that we are ready and willing to take care of those who have given so much to their country.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, there are no honorary members among America's veterans. They are the heroes of our times. From the forests of Europe to the beachheads of the Pacific, from the mountains of Korea to the jungles of Vietnam, through the streets of Beirut and now in the sands of Saudi Arabia, our veterans have served with pride and distinction. Throughout our country's history, America's veterans have done what was needed to save our democracy and our way of life.

Those gallant men and women honored their pledge to our Nation. Now, they call upon the Congress to honor our commitment to them. Last year, in the rush to deal with budget battles and S&L scams, Congress set aside our disabled veterans. We adjourned without approving a cost-of-living adjustment for service-connected disabled vets and their families.

There is no group that deserves this modest raise more than these men and women and their families. In these tough economic times, when many of these families are just scraping by, a few extra dollars per paycheck means the difference between living in dignity and living in despair.

As we send so many young men and women over to Saudi Arabia, we must send a message to them and those who have already served so well: We remember you. We honor you. We won't abandon you.

Last session this bill got sidetracked. Today, I urge my colleagues to set aside their differences on unrelated matters and move quickly to give our Nation's severely disabled veterans, their families and their survivors a cost-of-living adjustment.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. SIMON, Mr. PELL, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. DODD, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. ROBB, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. BUMPERS, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. LEVIN):

S. 2. A bill to promote the achievement of national education goals, to establish a National Council on Educational Goals, and an academic report card to measure progress on the goals, and to promote literacy in the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

STRENGTHENING EDUCATION FOR AMERICAN FAMILIES ACT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, at the start of the 102d Congress, the Nation's attention is clearly and properly focused on the crisis in the Persian Gulf. All of us hope that in the few remaining hours before the deadline for war is passed, diplomacy will succeed and the world will be spared from war. But Americans are also suffering at home, and we must not forget our responsibilities here as well.

Too many families have already become victims of the recession. Too many citizens are out of work. Too many young people suffer in inadequate schools. Too many college students cannot obtain financial aid necessary to meet college expenses. Too many adults languish because they lack the literacy skills necessary to get and keep good jobs. Too many American families suffer from inadequate health care. Too many American children and families are already waging a battle against poverty, hunger, homelessness, and lack of opportunity.

So, while we properly focus on war abroad, we must not neglect the urgent needs of Amercia's hard-pressed families at home.

The priority legislation which the Labor and Human Resources Committee will report to the Senate this year covers key needs of these working families in four critical areas: Jobs, education, health care, and children. We will deal with the greatest urgency with the recession. We will focus on the changing work force, the importance of education, the crisis in health care, and the tragic consequences for our future if we fail to help our children develop into productive adults.

I am very pleased that Senator MITCHELL has identified many of these areas as priorities for the Senate Democratic leadership this year.

Today we begin the process of introducing several bills from the priority list of the Democratic leadership. Shortly, Senator DODD will introduce the Family and Medical Leave Act as S. 5. Later in the afternoon, Senator METZENBAUM will introduce the striker replacement legislation as S. 55. I am pleased to cosponsor each of these bills.

Now, however, I am here to focus on education and to introduce the Strengthening Education for American Families Act which Senator MITCHELL has designated as S. 2.

In doing so, I want to commend particularly Senator PELL, the chairman of our Education Subcommittee, who has been the principal architect of our education agenda, Senator SIMON, the chairman of our Employment and Productivity Subcommittee, who is the principal sponsor of the literacy initiative included in S. 2, Senator BINGAMAN, the principal sponsor of the education report card initiative in the bill, and of course Senator MITCHELL, who this morning by placing such a high priority on education legislation has signaled an intention to make the 102d Congress the Education Congress.

We all know where we are in education: Our schools are in a state of crisis.

A decade after the so-called effort to reform began, our schools have improved too little. Consider a few of the facts:

One out of four students drops out of school before graduation;

Nearly one-third of the Nation's secondary school students are enrolled in a math or science course taught by a teacher not qualified to teach that course;

In an international study of 13-year-olds, U.S. students ranked last in math proficiency—yet 68 percent of the students said they were "good at mathematics."

Nearly 30 million Americans are illiterate.

A year ago, the White House and the Governors set out an ambitious set of education goals for the Nation by the year 2000. These goals call for preparing children to be ready to start school. They call for increases in the high school graduation rate, for high levels of competency in challenging subjects, for making our students first in the world in math and science, for eliminating illiteracy, and for freeing our schools from drugs and violence.

Setting goals is the easy part. The hard part is achieving them. School districts cannot do this alone. Students cannot do it alone. States cannot do it alone. And the Federal Government cannot simply lay down "feel good" goals, wash its hands, and walk away.

We must identify effective education programs, and find efficient ways to pay for them. We must ensure that knowledge of our education goals is widespread, and that the commitment to achieve them is strong.

When he ran for President, George Bush said he wanted to be the "Education President." But since he took office in 1989, education has become the phantom of the domestic agenda. The summit meeting with the Governors in Charlottesville 1 year ago, and the establishment of the national goals were commendable, but there has been no followup.

It is not just a matter of money. It is also a question of political will. We must not falter. The Nation's commitment to these goals must be more than lip service. But so far, we have not really started to get down to work.

When he ran for President, George Bush promised to "wipe out illiteracy in 8 years." Despite the commitment of Barbara Bush to this key issue, progress has been slow. The President must move more aggressively to honor his commitment.

Today, I am introducing the Strengthening Education for America's Families Act of 1991. This legislation will strengthen our dedication to the national goals and expand our efforts to achieve them.

Title I of the bill codifies the goals that the President and the Governors agreed to last year. The legislation also specifies what the Federal Government will do to help achieve these goals.

Title II of this legislation establishes a mechanism to monitor the progress toward the goals. The Governors and the President established a monitoring commission to chart the Nation's progress. The commission is chaired by Colorado Gov. Roy Romer and he is making a commendable effort to carry out these responsibilities.

But the commission is making fitful progress at best. It has no staff. It has a tiny budget. It depends on the U.S. Department of Education for the meager resources it has.

In addition, the commission's decisions rest on the views of politically elected officials—all of whom have a stake in demonstrating that we are making progress. It is difficult to believe that this group will be able to provide the careful, independent view we need.

Finally, this legislation authorizes a series of literacy initiatives to improve coordination and service delivery at the Federal, State, and local levels. These provisions passed the Senate by a vote of 99 to 0 in the last Congress. Unfortunately, they were never enacted into law. Literacy is one of the Nation's principal education goals. These provisions are needed now, and they will help us meet those goals more quickly.

Today, we are introducing two other bills that we will consider in this Congress. The first is a bill authored by Senator PELL and myself that authorizes a number of activities designed to increase Federal support for teachers and teaching. This legislation was approved by the Labor Committee in the last Congress but was never enacted.

In addition, I am cosponsoring legislation introduced by Senators BINGAMAN and PELL that would establish a commission to study the possibility of extending the school year. Most other industrialized nations have a much longer school year than the United States and this commisson will consider whether or not an extended school year in the United States is desirable and feasible.

This is not the only education legislation we will consider in this Congress, but it ought to be the first. Before this Congress adjourns, we will also reauthorize the Higher Education Act. We will review Federal activities in research and statistics. We will consider the possiblity of encouraging a national education test. We will consider a comprehensive education reform bill. We will authorize programs for disabled infants and young children, and programs of vocational rehabilitation.

But the legislation we are introducing today is a good start. It addresses major concerns that are critical if we are serious about improving our schools.

I intend to give this initiative prompt consideration in the Labor Committee. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Strengthening Education for American Families Act".

TITLE I—NATIONAL GOALS

SEC. 101. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this title to establish a plan of action for the initial steps that the Federal Government must take in order to assist State and local governments, organizations, and institutions in the joint effort of achieving the national education goals as outlined in this title.

SEC. 102. FAMILY LITERACY AND LIFELONG LEARNING.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) nearly 30,000,000 adults in the United States are lacking literacy skills which limits their ability to read, write, or speak in English or to compute or solve problems effectively; and

(2) the Federal Government has a responsibility to assist State and local governments in providing literacy services to those individuals in need of such services so that they may be full participants in society.

(b) POLICY.—It is the goal of the United States that, by the year 2000, every American will be literate and will possess the knowledge and skills necessary to compete in a global economy and exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship. As part of the joint effort of Federal, State, and local governments, organizations, and institutions in achieving this goal, it is the policy of the Federal Government to take consistent steps—

(1) to provide increased funding for the Adult Education Act so that all eligible individuals who seek such services under such Act will receive such services; and

(2) to expand Federal assistance for literacy programs in order to assist State and local governments, public libraries, organizations and volunteers in providing all individuals lacking literacy skills the opportunity to acquire skills needed to function in society.

SEC. 103. SCHOOL READINESS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that the Federal Government has a long-standing commitment to ensuring that all physically and economically disadvantaged children are ready and able to begin school by providing them with the same opportunities to develop physically and mentally as their more advantaged peers.

(b) POLICY.—It is the goal of the United States that, by the year 2000, all children in America will start school ready to learn. As part of the joint effort of Federal, State, and local governments, organizations, and institutions in achieving this goal, it is the policy of the Federal Government to take consistent steps—

(1) to provide Head Start services to every eligible child who needs such services;

(2) to provide sufficient funding for the special supplemental food program for women, infants, and children so that all potentially eligible women, infants, and children have access to the services provided by the program; and

(3) to expand funding for Even Start to allow programs to reach all parts of the United States and to allow each State to fund a sufficient number of programs throughout the State so that approaches are available for local educational agencies, the State educational agency, and other organizations to adopt and implement.

SEC. 104. SCHOOL COMPLETION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that in order for the Nation to regain its economic competitiveness, each individual in the United States must be educated to his or her greatest potential and must be encouraged to finish secondary school.

(b) POLICY.—It is the goal of the United States that, by the year 2000, the high-school graduation rate will increase to at least 90 percent. As part of the joint effort of Federal, State, and local governments, organizations, and institutions in achieving this goal, it is the policy of the Federal Government to take consistent steps—

(1) to expand funding for secondary- school dropout prevention and reentry programs and basic skills programs to allow programs to reach all parts of the United States and to allow each State to fund a sufficient number of programs throughout the State so that approaches are available for local educational agencies, the State educational agency, and other organizations to adopt and implement; and

(2) to collect uniform, reliable data from the States with respect to school completion rates.

SEC. 105. STUDENT ACHIEVEMENT.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) American students are falling behind students in other industrialized nations on tests measuring abilities in all academic subject areas; and

(2) the United States, in seeking to increase student ability and achievement, has traditionally served special populations, such as disadvantaged individuals and individuals with disabilities.

(b) POLICY.—It is the goal of the United States that, by the year 2000, American students will leave grades 4, 8, and 12 having demonstrated competency over challenging subject matter including English, mathematics, science, foreign languages, history, and geography, and every school in America will ensure that all students learn to use their minds well, so they may be prepared for responsible citizenship, further learning, and productive employment in our modern economy. As part of the joint effort of Federal, State, and local governments, organizations, and institutions in achieving this goal, it is the policy of the Federal Government to take consistent steps—

(1) to provide remedial assistance for all disadvantaged children in the United States by increasing the participation of eligible children in programs under chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965;

(2) to fulfill the commitment made by the United States in 1975 to provide 40 percent of the costs of educating children with disabilities;

(3) to reward successful programs in schools with concentrations of disadvantaged children; and

(4) to promote efforts that encourage all students to be involved in activities that promote and demonstrate good citizenship, community service, and personal responsibility.

SEC. 106. MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) students in the United States are falling behind students from other industrialized nations on tests measuring achievement in mathematics and science;

(2) the Federal Government has a significant role in promoting the study of mathematics and science in elementary and secondary schools by providing financial assistance to local educational agencies to improve the general quality of programs for the study of mathematics and science through authorized math and science education programs; and

(3) the Federal Government has indirectly assisted in the postsecondary study of mathematics and science by providing future scientists, mathematicians, and engineers with financial assistance to attend postsecondary institutions, but more incentives are needed to attract high-achieving students into these areas of study.

(b) POLICY.—It is the goal of the United States that, by the year 2000, United States students will be first in the world in mathematics and science achievement. As part of the joint effort of Federal, State, and local governments, organizations, and institutions in achieving this goal, it is the policy of the Federal Government to take consistent steps—

(1) to expand funding for the Excellence in Mathematics, Science, and Engineering Act of 1990 to increase the number of individuals, particularly women and minorities, in graduate and undergraduate programs in mathematics, science, and engineering;

(2) to expand funding for the Dwight D. Eisenhower Mathematics and Science Education Act so that all elementary teachers and all secondary teachers of mathematics and science will have an opportunity for updating and improving their mathematics and science education skills;

(3) to expand funding for such Act so that all elementary school teachers have an opportunity for skill improvement; and

(4) to award scholarships to high-achieving students to pursue the study of mathematics, science, and related subjects at postsecondary institutions.

SEC. 107. SAFE, DISCIPLINED, AND DRUG-FREE SCHOOLS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) use of illicit drugs and alcohol by the youths of the Nation continues to be a major problem that threatens the safety of the children of the Nation and impedes their ability to succeed in school and in their lives; and

(2) more Federal efforts are urgently needed in the areas of drug and alcohol abuse education and prevention.

(b) POLICY.—It is the goal of the United States that, by the year 2000, every school in America will be free of drugs and violence and will offer a disciplined environment conducive to learning. As part of the joint effort of Federal, State, and local governments, organizations, and institutions in achieving this goal, it is the policy of the Federal Government to take steps to ensure that all students receive drug abuse prevention education and counseling services.

SEC. 108. TEACHER RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the success of America's schools depends most heavily on the Nation's teachers;

(2) when teachers have the necessary skills to be highly motivated and committed to excellence, they succeed in not only imparting subject matter knowledge, but also in instilling in their students an appreciation of the value and importance of education;

(3) teachers are significant role models for our Nation's diverse student population; and

(4) teachers, and a diverse teaching faculty, are instrumental in the education of the children of the United States and are key to achieving the national education goals described in section 2(a)(8).

(b) POLICY.—It is the goal of the United States, that by the year 2000, there will be a well qualified and diverse teaching faculty in every school in the Nation. As part of the joint effort of Federal, State, and local governments, organizations, and institutions in achieving this goal, it is the policy of the Federal Government to take consistent steps—

(1) to eliminate nationally identified areas of teacher shortages by assuring access to high quality education and training to individuals desiring to pursue a career in the teaching profession; and

(2) to expand Federal assistance for teacher training and other professional development programs in order to improve the skills of the teaching force and enhance the recruitment and retention of well-qualified professionals in the classroom.

SEC. 109. EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) it is essential to the economic well-being of the United States that all Americans be educated to their fullest potential;

(2) to bring this about, it is necessary to increase college participation by all Americans, especially minorities, and to reduce the imbalance between grants and loans in financing a college education, so that all Americans with the desire and the ability have an equal opportunity to participate in postsecondary education and training, from the undergraduate to the postgraduate level.

(b) POLICY.—It is the goal of the United States that, by the year 2000, no qualified student shall be denied the opportunity for postsecondary education because of financial or other barriers. As part of the joint effort of Federal, State, and local governments, organizations, and institutions in achieving this goal, it is the policy of the Federal Government to take consistent steps—

(1) to increase the participation of low-income, first-generation-in-college, and minority students in postsecondary education;

(2) to expand college assistance to middle income families;

(3) to reduce the reliance on loans as the principal means of financing postsecondary education for students and their parents by increasing the annual appropriations for the Pell Grant program so that the maximum grant provides substantial assistance towards the cost of attending an institution of higher education; and

(4) to enhance the capacity of postsecondary institutions to recruit and retain low-income, first-generation-in-college, and minority students, including graduate students, and to provide those students with a quality education, by increasing the annual appropriations for the TRIO programs to expand the percentage of eligible students served and to more effectively serve the students receiving services from these programs.

TITLE II—NATIONAL COUNCIL ON EDUCATIONAL GOALS

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Academic Report Card Act of 1991".

SEC. 202. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

Congress finds that—

(1) the social well-being, economic stability, and national security of the United States depend on a strong educational system that provides all citizens with the skills necessary to become active members of a productive work force;

(2) despite the many reforms of the educational system that have been implemented since the National Council on Excellence in Education declared our Nation "at risk" in 1983, the United States remains at risk for educational failure;

(3) United States children and youth leave school unprepared to participate productively in the work force, suffer high rates of functional illiteracy, and often display a lack of understanding about the United States and the world, in both a historical and futuristic context;

(4) United States students currently rank far below students of many other countries in educational achievement, particularly in mathematics and the sciences;

(5) although States and localities bear the primary responsibility for elementary and secondary education, rapidly increasing international competitiveness requires that the United States increase efforts to make education a national priority;

(6) the Federal Government has played a vital, leading role in funding important educational programs and research activities and should continue to play the role;

(7) accurate and reliable mechanisms must be available to assess and monitor educational progress;

(8) many schools have shown considerable progress and success in improving achievement, including model schools and schools that have implemented innovative approaches to school structure;

(9) the mechanisms to assess and monitor educational progress, and the national information infrastructure needed to support the mechanisms, do not exist or must be strengthened;

(10) many factors contribute to the performance of a school, including school finance, resources, teaching conditions, and parental involvement, and an analysis of the factors, along with educational achievement, should be included in reports on school performance;

(11) there should be established an independent Council of highly respected, bipartisan, diverse experts to—

(A) study, make recommendations regarding, and monitor progress on meeting national goals for education; and

(B) make recommendations on the educational assessment and information system of the United States;

(12) the Council described in paragraph (11) should have the authority to—

(A) make such recommendations as the Council determines to be necessary to the President, Congress, and the States; and

(B) issue annual reports in the form of a national report card; and

(13) States require Federal assistance to conduct State Summits on Education.

(b) PURPOSE.—Pursuant to the establishment of the national education goals, it is the purpose of this title to establish a bipartisan independent council of highly respected and diverse experts to develop and implement methods to measure progress in attaining the national goals, to make recommendations concerning further progress in attaining such goals, and to annually report on the progress made in reaching such goals.

SEC. 203. NATIONAL COUNCIL ON EDUCATIONAL GOALS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a National Council on Educational Goals (referred to in this Act as the "Council").

(b) COMPOSITION.—The Council shall be composed of 18 members (referred to in this Act as "members"), including—

(1) two members appointed by the President;

(2) six members, not more than three of whom shall be from the same political party, nominated by the Chairperson of the National Governor's Association in consultation with the Vice Chairperson of the Association, and appointed by the President;

(3) five members appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives in consultation with the Minority Leader of the House of Representatives; and

(4) five members appointed by the President Pro Tempore of the Senate on the recommendation of the Majority Leader and Minority Leader of the Senate.

(c) QUALIFICATIONS.—

(1) CONGRESSIONAL APPOINTEES.—Members appointed under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (b)—

(A) shall be appointed on the basis of—

(i) widely recognized experience in, knowledge of, and commitment to, education and educational excellence; and

(ii) training or experience in analyzing educational data;

(B) shall not include elected Federal public officials; and

(C) shall be appointed from among—

(i) individuals who are engaged in the professions of teaching and research;

(ii) individuals with experience in analyzing school performance data who are—

(I) engaged in school administration;

(II) members of school boards;

(III) parents; or

(IV) representatives of parents or parent organizations;

(iii) individuals who are representatives of nonprofit organizations or foundations and businesses that have demonstrated a commitment to the improvement of United States education; and

(iv) other individuals determined to be appropriate by the person appointing the individuals under subsection (b).

(2) NATIONAL GOVERNOR'S ASSOCIATION NOMINEES.—Members nominated under subsection (b)(2) shall be nominated from among—

(A) the Governors; or

(B) individuals with the qualifications described in paragraph (1), or other qualifications as determined to be appropriate by the Chairperson of the National Governor's Association.

(d) TERM.—

(1) PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTEES.—The President shall designate one of the members appointed under subsection (b)(1) to serve a 4-year term, and one to serve a 6-year term.

(2) NATIONAL GOVERNOR'S ASSOCIATION NOMINEES.—Among the members appointed under subsection (b)(2), the Chairperson and the Vice Chairperson of the National Governor's Association shall each designate one appointee to serve a 6-year term, one to serve a 4-year term, and one to serve a 2-year term.

(3) HOUSE APPOINTEES.—Among the members appointed by the Speaker of the House under subsection (b)(3)—

(A) the Speaker shall designate one appointee to serve a 6-year term, one to serve a 4-year term, and one to serve a 2-year term; and

(B) the Minority Leader shall designate one appointee to serve a 4-year term, and one to serve a 2-year term.

(4) SENATE APPOINTEES.—Among the members appointed by the President Pro Tempore of the Senate, under subsection (b)(4)—

(A) the President Pro Tempore of the Senate, in consultation with the Majority Leader of the Senate, shall designate one appointee to serve a 6-year term, one to serve a 4-year term, and one to serve a 2-year term; and

(B) the President Pro Tempore of the Senate, in consultation with the Minority Leader of the Senate, shall designate one appointee to serve a 4-year term, and one to serve a 2-year term.

(5) DATE OF APPOINTMENT.—The initial members shall be appointed not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(6) RETENTION.—In order to retain an appointment to the Council, a member must attend at least 50 percent of the scheduled meetings of the Council in any given year.

(d) CHAIRPERSON.—

(1) INITIAL SELECTION.—During the first 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the members appointed under subsection (b)(2) shall select a Chairperson from among the members appointed under subsection (b)(2).

(2) SUBSEQUENT SELECTION.—If no individual described in paragraph (1) assumes the position of Chairperson of the Council within 60 days of the date of the enactment of this Act, the members shall select a Chairperson from among the members.

(e) VACANCIES.—A vacancy on the Council shall not affect the powers of the Council, but shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(f) COMPENSATION AND TRAVEL.—Members shall serve without compensation, but each member shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for each day the member is engaged in the performance of duties away from the home or regular place of business of the member.

(g) INITIATION.—The Council may begin to carry out the duties of the Council under this Act when—

(1) nine members have been appointed; or

(2) six members have been appointed under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (b).

SEC. 204. FUNCTIONS.

(a) FUNCTIONS.—The Council shall—

(1) compile, inventory, and analyze existing information regarding the educational achievement of United States students and schools, including public and private elementary, secondary, and post-secondary schools;

(2) monitor and report on progress toward meeting national goals and the objectives of the goals, using appropriate and recognized indicators;

(3) establish benchmarks to meet long-term national goals by the year 2000;

(4) identify the information that would best advise the public about the state of schools in the United States;

(5) develop consensus about the indicators on which data will be collected and analyzed for the Report Card described in section 206, and identify data bases that provide the needed information;

(6) make recommendations about additional data that will be needed;

(7) through the interim Council report described in section 205 and the annual Report Card described in section 206, identify gaps in existing educational data and make recommendations for improvements in the methods and procedures of assessing attainment or realization of goals by the Department of Education and any other Federal governmental entity, including suggestions for such changes in laws and regulations as may be required to improve the assessment process, procedures, and organization of the Federal Government; and

(8) through information obtained in the hearing process described in section 207, develop recommendations regarding Federal, State, and local policymaking for meeting the national goals.

(b) PERFORMANCE OF FUNCTIONS.—In carrying out subsection (a)(2), the Council shall—

(1) consider the goals already set forth or recommended by the National Education Summit and other governmental and nongovernmental organizations;

(2) consider the goals of the States developed through the State Summits described in section 209;

(3) report on the progress toward achieving the goals at the national level, including appropriate comparisons of the educational achievement of the United States with other nations;

(4) consider relevant data that affect student performance, including data on—

(A) school readiness;

(B) student achievement in elementary, secondary, and post-secondary education;

(C) school financing and equalization;

(D) the degree and quality of parental involvement;

(E) availability of instructional resources;

(F) the degree of involvement of social service agencies;

(G) school and student performance, including—

(i) attendance and completion rates;

(ii) climate (vandalism, crime, and drugs);

(iii) conditions of teaching including salary and professional development training;

(iv) parent participation; and

(v) school financing;

(H) work force literacy and skills; and

(I) areas of teacher shortages, such as mathematics and science;

(5) report on progress comparing skill attainment or progress within similar bands of school resources; and

(6) consider alternative assessment instruments emphasizing mastery over skill areas rather than specific information.

(c) DATA COLLECTION.—

(1) CONTRACTS.—On the development of the timetable described in section 205(1), the Council shall contract with an eligible entity to generate or collect such data as may be necessary to appropriately assess progress toward the national goals, based on the recommendations of the Council.

(2) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to enter into contracts under paragraph (1) include the National Center for Education Statistics and any entities that meet such eligibility criteria as the Council may establish.

SEC. 205. INTERIM COUNCIL REPORT.

Not later than 1 year after the Council concludes the first meeting of the Council, the Council shall prepare and submit a report to the President, the appropriate committees of Congress, the National Education Goals Panel, and the Governor of each State, that—

(1) establishes a timetable for reporting on progress toward achieving national education goals by the year 2000; and

(2) includes a series of reasonable steps for measuring the implementation and success of each recommendation of the Council.

SEC. 206. ANNUAL REPORT CARD.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 2 years after the date the Council concludes its first meeting of members, the Council shall prepare and submit to the President, the appropriate committees of Congress, and the Governor of each State a National Report Card, that—

(1) shall set forth an analysis of the progress of the United States toward achieving the national education goals; and

(2) may, as determined necessary by the Council based on the findings of the Council and an analysis of the views and comments of all interested parties, including the National Summit on Education and the State Summits, all relevant Federal entities, the National Governor's Association, Congress, and private organizations and citizens—

(A) describe modifications to existing goals;

(B) identify continuing gaps in existing educational data; and

(C) make recommendations for improvement in the methods and procedures of assessing educational attainment and strengthening the national educational assessment and information system by the Department of Education or any other appropriate Federal Government entity.

(b) CONTINUATION.—Based on the timetable established in section 205, the Council shall continue to issue a National Report Card on an annual basis for the duration of the existence of the Council.

(c) FORMAT.—National Report Cards shall be presented in a form that is understandable to parents and the general public.

SEC. 207. POWERS OF THE COUNCIL.

(a) HEARINGS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Council may, for the purpose of carrying out this Act, conduct such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony and receive such evidence, as the Council considers appropriate.

(2) CONDUCT.—In carrying out this Act, the Council shall—

(A) conduct public hearings in different geographic areas of the country, both urban and rural, to receive the reports, views, and analyses of a broad spectrum of experts and the public on—

(i) the status and goals of the current educational system of the United States;

(ii) the need to redefine and redirect educational goals;

(iii) policy recommendations for pursuing the goals at the Federal, State, and local levels; and

(iv) methods that could be implemented to foster higher levels of educational attainment in United States schools; and

(B) receive testimony from—

(i) individuals such as practicing educators, parents, business persons, and elected and appointed public officials; and

(ii) representatives of public and private organizations and institutions with an expertise or interest in improving the quality of the educational system of the United States.

(b) INFORMATION.—The Council may secure directly from any Federal agency such information as may be necessary to enable the Council to carry out this Act. On the request of the Chairperson of the Council, the head of the agency shall furnish the information to the Council.

(c) GIFTS.—The Council may accept, use, and dispose of gifts or donations of services or property.

(d) POSTAL SERVICES.—The Council may use the United States mail in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the Federal Government.

(e) ADMINISTRATIVE AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES.—The Administrator of the General Services Administration shall provide to the Council on a reimbursable basis such administrative and support service as the Council may request.

SEC. 208. ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

(a) MEETINGS.—The Council shall meet on a regular basis, as necessary, at the call of the Chairperson of the Council or a majority of its members.

(b) QUORUM.—Nine members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

(c) VOTING.—The Council shall take all action of the Council by a majority vote of the members attending a duly called and constituted meeting of the Council. No individual may vote or exercise any of the powers of a member by proxy.

(d) OFFICE OF CHAIRPERSON AND VICE CHAIRPERSON.—The Chairperson and Vice Chairperson of the Council shall serve as Chairperson and Vice Chairperson until the expiration of the terms of the Chairperson and Vice Chairperson as members, or until resignation or removal by a majority of the members.

(e) STAFF.—The Chairperson of the Council, in consultation with the Vice Chairperson, shall appoint and fix the compensation of a staff administrator and such support personnel as may be reasonable and necessary to enable the Council to carry out the functions of the Council. The rate of compensation for each staff member shall not exceed the daily equivalent of the rate specified for GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code for each day the staff member is engaged in the performance of duties for the Task Force. The Chairperson of the Council may otherwise appoint and determine the compensation of staff without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title, or of any other provision of law, relating to the number, classification, and General Schedule rates.

(f) PERSONNEL DETAIL AUTHORIZED.—On the request of the Chairperson of the Council, the head of any Federal agency is authorized to detail, without reimbursement, any of the personnel of the agency to the Council to assist the Council in carrying out the duties of the Council. The detail shall be without interruption or loss of civil service status or privilege.

SEC. 209. STATE SUMMITS ON EDUCATION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Education shall make grants to States to pay for the Federal share of—

(1) conducting State Summits on Education;

(2) evaluating progress made toward implementing national goals; and

(3) evaluating the implementation process.

(b) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under subsection (a), a State shall submit an application to the Secretary of Education at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary of Education may require.

(c) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of grants made under this section shall be not more than 50 percent.

(d) REPORT.—Each State receiving a grant under this section shall, on completion of the State Summit, prepare and submit to the Council a report describing—

(1) the educational goals of the State, including changes or additions to the national goals;

(2) a plan for meeting the goals and a timetable for carrying out the plan; and

(3) a plan for evaluating the progress of the State in meeting the goals according to the timetable.

SEC. 210. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out sections 202 through 208 $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1992 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1993 through 2001.

(b) STATE SUMMITS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out section 209 $5,000,000 for the fiscal year 1992 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1993 through 2001.

TITLE III—LITERACY

SEC. 301. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Literacy Act of 1991".

SEC. 302. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) nearly 30,000,000 adults in the United States have serious problems with literacy (the ability to read, write, speak English, compute, and solve problems effectively);

(2) literacy problems are intergenerational and closely associated with poverty and pose a major threat to the economic well-being of the United States;

(3) present public and private literacy programs reach only a small portion of the population in need and often result in only minimal learning gains;

(4) the prevention of illiteracy is essential to stem further growth in national illiteracy rates;

(5) literacy programs generally lack adequate funding, adequate coordination with other literacy programs, and an adequate investment in teacher training and technology;

(6) access to better information about the best practices in the literacy field and more research in order to provide better diagnostic and instructional tools are essential for the improvement of literacy and employability in the United States;

(7) as many as 50,000,000 workers may have to be trained or retrained before the year 2000 while the supply of unskilled workers is increasing and the demand for unskilled labor is decreasing; and

(8) the Adult Education Act is the largest Federal program to provide direct literacy services in the United States and serves only 10 percent of eligible participants, while all public and private literacy programs serve only about 19 percent of those who need help.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this title to provide for a comprehensive effort to enhance and strengthen the nation's efforts to combat literacy to ensure that all Americans can become literate by the year 2000.

SEC. 303. DEFINITION.

For purposes of this title the term "literacy" means the ability to use printed and written information to function in society, to achieve one's goals, and to develop one's knowledge and potential.

PART A—LITERACY: STRATEGIC PLANNING, RESEARCH, AND COORDINATION

SEC. 311. INTERAGENCY TASK FORCE ON LITERACY.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established an Interagency Task Force on Literacy (in this section referred to as the "Task Force").

(b) COMPOSITION.—(1) The Task Force shall consist of—

(A) the Secretary of Education;

(B) the Secretary of Labor;

(C) the Secretary of Health and Human Services;

(D) the Director of the ACTION Agency; and

(E) any other head of an agency that the President considers appropriate.

(2) Each member shall be appointed for as long as such member serves as the head of the appropriate department or agency.

(3) The President is requested to appoint the Chairperson of the Task Force from among its members to serve as Chairperson at the President's discretion.

(c) QUORUM.—One more than ½ of the members of the Task Force shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of transmitting recommendations and proposals to the President, but a lesser number may meet for other purposes.

(d) ABSENCES.—Any member of the Task Force who is unable to attend a meeting of the Task Force shall appoint an appropriate Assistant Secretary from the department of which the member is the Secretary, or in the case of an agency, the second-ranking official of such agency, to represent the member for that meeting.

(e) DUTIES OF THE TASK FORCE.—The Task Force shall—

(1) devise, coordinate, and monitor existing and other government initiatives to—

(A) facilitate the elimination of illiteracy, and

(B) integrate the resources of literacy programs across various departments or agencies of the Federal Government;

(2) solicit information and advice from representatives and experts with experience in literacy-related programs, including members of State and local governments, individuals from education, labor, and business, national literacy organizations, State and local literacy organizations, volunteer organizations, service providers, and community-based organizations;

(3) ensure that appropriate Federal agencies set specific objectives and strategies for meeting the goals of this title and measure the progress of such agencies in meeting such goals;

(4) review and make recommendations regarding ways to achieve uniformity among reporting requirements, the development of performance measures, and the development of standards for program effectiveness for literacy-related Federal programs;

(5) advise the Director of the National Institute for Literacy established pursuant to section 313 on the activities of the Task Force; and

(6) issue a biennial report to Congress on the progress made by the Federal Government and the Nation toward enhancing the literacy skills of its people, including recommendations for legislation required to improve and expand Federal literacy programs.

(f) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Each department and agency that participates in the Task Force shall contribute to the support of the Task Force.

SEC. 312. LITERACY RELATED PROGRAMS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

Section 202 of the Department of Education Organization Act (20 U.S.C. 3412) is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(h) The Assistant Secretary for Vocational and Adult Education, in addition to performing such functions as the Secretary may prescribe, shall have responsibility for coordination of all literacy related programs and policy initiatives in the Department. The Assistant Secretary for Vocational and Adult Education shall—

"(1) coordinate the staff resources and the assistance provided to the Task Force;

"(2) assist in coordinating the related activities and programs of other Federal departments and agencies; and

"(3) assist the Secretary in carrying out the Secretary's responsibilities as a member of the Task Force.".

SEC. 313. NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR LITERACY.

(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to enhance the national effort to eliminate the current problem of illiteracy by the year 2000 by improving research, development and information dissemination through a national research center.

(b) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) far too little is known about how to improve access to, and enhance the effectiveness of, adult literacy programs, assessment tools, and evaluation efforts;

(2) there is no reliable nor central source of information about the existing knowledge base in the area of literacy;

(3) a National Institute for Literacy would provide a national focal point for research, technical assistance and research dissemination, policy analysis, and program evaluation in the area of literacy; and

(4) such an Institute would facilitate a pooling of ideas and expertise across fragmented programs and research efforts.

(c) ESTABLISHMENT.—(1) There is established the National Institute for Literacy (in this section referred to as the "Institute"). The Institute shall be administered under the terms of an interagency agreement entered into by the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Education, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services (in this section referred to as the "Interagency Group"). The head of any other agency designated by the President may be involved in the operation of the Institute as fits the involvement of such agency in accomplishing the purposes of the Institute. The Secretary may include in the Institute any research and development center supported under section 405(d)(4)(A)(ii) of the General Education Provisions Act and any other center, institute, or clearinghouse established within the Department of Education and the purpose of which is determined by the Secretary of Education to be related to the purpose of the Institute.

(2) The Institute shall have offices separate from the offices of any agency or department involved in the operation of the Institute.

(3) The Institute shall be administered by the Interagency Group, which shall seriously consider the recommendations of the Board described in subsection (f) in planning the goals of the Institute and in the implementation of any programs to achieve such goals. The daily operations of the Institute shall be carried out by the Director. If the recommendations of the Board are not followed, the Interagency Group shall provide a written explanation to the Board concerning actions the Interagency Group has taken that includes the Interagency Group's reasons for not following the recommendations of the Board with respect to such actions.

(d) DUTIES.—(1) The Institute is authorized, in order to improve and expand the system for delivery of literacy services, to—

(A) conduct basic and applied research and demonstrations on literacy, including—

(i) how adults learn to read and write and acquire other skills;

(ii) how the literacy skills of parents affect the ability of children to learn literacy skills;

(iii) the assessment of literacy skills and the development of instructional techniques;

(iv) the best methods for assisting adults and families to acquire literacy skills, including the use of technology;

(v) the special literacy needs of individuals with learning disabilities and individuals with limited English proficiency;

(vi) how to effectively reach and teach the most educationally disadvantaged individuals;

(vii) the use of technology and other studies which will advance the literacy knowledge base, use and not duplicate the work of other research services, and build on such research efforts; and

(viii) how to attract, train, and retrain professional and volunteer teachers of literacy;

(B) assist Federal, State, and local agencies in the development, implementation, and evaluation of policy with respect to literacy by—

(i) establishing a national data base with respect to—

(I) literacy and basic skills programs (including programs in Federal departments, State agencies, and local agencies, and programs that are privately supported through nonprofit entities and for profit entities);

(II) assessment tools and outcome measures;

(III) the amount and quality of basic education provided in the workplace by businesses and industries; and

(IV) progress made toward the national literacy goals described in section 102; and

(ii) providing technical and policy assistance to government entities for the improvement of policy and programs relating to literacy and developing model systems for implementing and coordinating Federal literacy programs which can be replicated at the State and local level;

(C) provide program assistance, training, and technical assistance for literacy programs throughout the United States in order to improve the effectiveness of such programs and to increase the number of such programs, which assistance and training shall—

(i) be based on the best available research and knowledge; and

(ii) be coordinated with activities conducted by—

(I) regional educational laboratories supported under section 405(d)(4)(A)(i) of the General Education Provisions Act;

(II) curriculum centers assisted under section 251(a)(8) of the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act; and

(III) other educational and training entities that provide relevant technical assistance;

(D) collect and disseminate information to Federal, State, and local entities with respect to literacy methods that show great promise (including effective methods of assessment, effective literacy programs, and other information obtained through research or practice relating to adult and family learning that would increase the capacity and quality of literacy programs in the United States), using a variety of methods to ensure that the best information is received by State and local providers of literacy services;

(E) review and make recommendations regarding—

(i) ways to achieve uniformity among reporting requirements;

(ii) the development of performance measures; and

(iii) the development of standards for program effectiveness for literacy-related Federal programs; and

(F) provide a toll-free long-distance telephone line for literacy providers and volunteers.

(2) The Institute may enter into contracts or cooperative agreements with, or make grants to, individuals, public or private nonprofit institutions, agencies, organizations, or consortia of such institutions, agencies, or organizations to carry out the activities of the Institute. Such grants, contracts, or agreements shall be subject to the laws and regulations that generally apply to grants, contracts, or agreements entered into by Federal agencies.

(e) LITERACY LEADERSHIP.—(1) The Institute is, in consultation with the Board, authorized to award fellowships, with such stipends and allowances that the Director considers necessary, to outstanding individuals pursuing careers in adult education or literacy instruction, management, research, or innovation in adult education or literacy.

(2) Fellowships awarded under this subsection shall be used, under the auspices of the Institute, to engage in research, education, training, technical assistance, or other activities to advance the field of adult education or literacy, including the training of volunteer literacy providers at the national, State, or local level.

(3) Individuals receiving fellowships pursuant to this subsection shall be known as "Literacy Leader Fellows".

(f) NATIONAL INSTITUTE BOARD.—(1) There is established the National Institute Board (in this section referred to as the "Board") which shall consist of 10 individuals appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate from individuals who are not otherwise officers or employees of the Federal Government and who are chosen from recommendations made to the President by representatives of—

(A) literacy organizations and providers of literacy services, including—

(i) providers of literacy services receiving assistance under the Adult Education Act; and

(ii) nonprofit providers of literacy services;

(B) businesses that have demonstrated interest in literacy programs;

(C) literacy students;

(D) experts in the area of literacy research;

(E) State and local governments; and

(F) organized labor.

(2) The Board shall—

(A) make recommendations concerning the appointment of the Director and staff of the Institute;

(B) provide independent advice on the operation of the Institute; and

(C) receive reports from the Interagency Group and the Director.

(3) The Interagency Group may carry out the duties of the Board until the expiration of the 180-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(4) Except as otherwise provided, the Board established by this subsection shall be subject to the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act.

(5)(A) Each member of the Board shall be appointed for a term of 3 years. Any such member may be appointed for not more than 2 consecutive terms.

(B) Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which the member's predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of that term. A member may serve after the expiration of that member's term until a successor has taken office. A vacancy in the Board shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made. A vacancy in the Board shall not affect the powers of the Board.

(6) A majority of the members of the Board shall constitute a quorum but a lesser number may hold hearings. Any recommendation may be passed only by a majority of its members present.

(7) The Chairperson and Vice Chairperson of the Board shall be elected by the members. The term of office of the Chairperson and Vice Chairperson shall be 2 years.

(8) The Board shall meet at the call of the Chairperson or a majority of its members.

(g) GIFTS, BEQUESTS, AND DEVISES.—The Institute and the Board may accept (but not solicit), use, and dispose of gifts, bequests, or devises of services or property, both real and personal, for the purpose of aiding or facilitating the work of the Institute or the Board, respectively. Gifts, bequests, or devises of money and proceeds from sales of other property received as gifts, bequests, or devises shall be deposited in the Treasury and shall be available for disbursement upon order of the Institute or the Board, respectively.

(h) MAILS.—The Board and the Institute may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the United States.

(i) STAFF.—The Interagency Group, after considering recommendations made by the Board, shall appoint and fix the pay of a Director.

(j) APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN CIVIL SERVICE LAWS.—The Director and staff of the Institute may be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of that title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, except that an individual so appointed may not receive pay in excess of the annual rate of basic pay payable for GS-18 of the General Schedule.

(k) EXPERTS AND CONSULTANTS.—The Board and the Institute may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code.

(l) REPORT.—In the first 2 years in which the Institute receives assistance under this section, the Institute shall submit an annual report to Congress. In succeeding years, the Institute shall submit biennial reports to the Congress. Each report submitted under this subsection shall include—

(1) a comprehensive and detailed description of the Institute's operations, activities, financial condition, and accomplishments in the field of literacy for such fiscal year;

(2) a description of how plans for the operation of the Institute for the succeeding fiscal year will facilitate achievement of the goals of the Institute and the goals of the literacy programs within the Department of Education, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Health and Human Services; and

(3) any additional, minority, or dissenting views submitted by members of the Board.

(m) NONDUPLICATION.—The Institute shall not duplicate any functions carried out by the Secretary of Education pursuant to section 384(a) of the Adult Education Act. This subsection shall not be construed to prohibit the Secretary of Education from delegating such functions to the Institute.

(n) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—(1) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995.

(2) Any amounts appropriated to the Secretary of Education, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, or any other department that participates in the Institute for purposes that the Institute is authorized to perform under this section may be provided to the Institute for such purposes.

SEC. 314. STATE LITERACY RESOURCE CENTERS.

(a) GRANTS FOR STATE LITERACY RESOURCE CENTERS.—Subpart 6 of part B of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1208 et seq.) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new section 354:

"SEC. 354. STATE LITERACY RESOURCE CENTERS.

"(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to assist State and local public and private nonprofit efforts to eliminate illiteracy through a new program of State literacy resource center grants to—

"(1) stimulate the coordination of literacy services,

"(2) enhance the capacity of State and local organizations to provide literacy services, and

"(3) serve as a reciprocal link between the National Institute for Literacy and service providers for the purpose of sharing information, data, research, and expertise and literacy resources.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—From amounts appropriated pursuant to subsection (k), the Secretary is authorized to make grants for purposes of establishing a network of State or regional adult literacy resource centers.

"(c) ALLOTMENT.—(1) From sums available for purposes of making grants under this section for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State having an approved application under subsection (k) an amount which bears the same ratio to such sums as the amount allotted to such State under section 313(b) for the purpose of making grants under section 321 bears to the aggregate amount allotted to all States under such section for such purpose.

"(2) Each State shall contract on a competitive basis with the State or local educational agencies, a State office on literacy, a volunteer organization, a community-based organization, institution of higher education, or another nonprofit entity to operate a State literacy resource center. If the State educational agency does not operate the center, the State educational agency shall be provided the opportunity to comment on the selection of the entity selected to operate the center.

"(d) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds provided under subsection (c)(1) to carry out this section shall be used to carry out activities to—

"(1) upgrade and promote the diffusion and adoption of state-of-the-art teaching methods, technologies and program evaluations;

"(2) develop innovative approaches to the coordination of literacy services within and among States and with the Federal Government and assist in coordinating the delivery of such services by public and private agencies;

"(3) encourage government and industry partnerships, including partnerships among small business, private nonprofit organizations, and community-based organizations;

"(4) encourage innovation and experimentation in literacy activities that will enhance the delivery of literacy services and address emerging problems;

"(5) provide technical and policy assistance to State and local governments and service providers to improve literacy policy and programs and access to such programs;

"(6) provide training and technical assistance to literacy instructors in reading instruction and in—

"(A) selecting and making the most effective use of state-of-the-art methodologies, instructional materials, and technologies such as—

"(i) computer assisted instruction;

"(ii) video tapes;

"(iii) interactive systems; and

"(iv) data link systems; or

"(B) assessing learning style and screening for learning disabilities, and providing individualized remedial reading instruction; or

"(7) encourage and facilitate the training of full-time professional adult educators.

"(e) ALTERNATIVE USES OF EQUIPMENT.—Equipment purchases pursuant to this section, when not being used to carry out the provisions of this section, may be used for other instructional purposes if—

"(1) the acquisition of the equipment was reasonable and necessary for the purpose of conducting a properly designed project or activity under this section;

"(2) the equipment is used after regular program hours or on weekends; and

"(3) such other use is—

"(A) incidental to the use of that equipment under this section;

"(B) does not interfere with the use of that equipment under this section; and

"(C) does not add to the cost of using that equipment under this section.

"(f) LIMITATION.—Not more than 10 percent of any grant received under this section shall be used to purchase computer hardware or software.

"(g) SPECIAL RULE.—(1) Each State receiving funds pursuant to this section may use not more than 5 percent of such funds to establish a State advisory council on adult education and literacy (in this section referred to as the 'State council') pursuant to the provisions of section 332.

"(2) Each State receiving funds pursuant to this section may use such funds to support an established State council to the extent that such State council meets the requirements of section 332.

"(3) Each State receiving funds pursuant to this paragraph to establish or support a State council pursuant to the provisions of section 332 shall provide matching funds on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

"(h) APPLICATIONS.—Each State or group of States, as appropriate, that desires to receive a grant under this section on a regional level, a State level, or both shall submit to the Secretary an application that has been reviewed and commented on by the State council, where appropriate, and that describes how the State or group of States will—

"(1) develop a literacy resource center or expand an existing literacy resource center;

"(2) provide services and activities with the assistance provided under this section;

"(3) assure access to services of the center for the maximum participation of all public and private programs and organizations providing or seeking to provide basic skills instruction, including local educational agencies, agencies responsible for corrections education, service delivery areas under the Job Training Partnership Act, welfare agencies, labor organizations, businesses, volunteer groups, and community-based organizations;

"(4) address the measurable goals for improving literacy levels as set forth in the plan submitted pursuant to section 342; and

"(5) develop procedures for the coordination of literacy activities for statewide and local literacy efforts conducted by public and private organizations, and for enhancing the systems of service delivery.

"(i) PAYMENTS; FEDERAL SHARE.—(1) The Secretary shall pay to each State having an application approved pursuant to subsection (h) the Federal share of the cost of the activities described in the application.

"(2) The Federal share—

"(A) for each of the first 2 fiscal years in which the State receives funds under this section shall not exceed 80 percent;

"(B) for each of the third and fourth fiscal years in which the State receives funds under this section shall not exceed 70 percent; and

"(C) for the fifth and each succeeding fiscal year in which the State receives funds under this section shall not exceed 60 percent.

"(3) The non-Federal share of payments under this section may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services.

"(j) REGIONAL CENTERS.—(1) A group of States may enter into an interstate agreement to develop and operate a regional adult literacy resource center if the States determine that a regional approach is more appropriate for their situation.

"(2) Any State that receives assistance under this section as part of a regional center shall only be required to provide under subsection (i) 50 percent of the funds such State would otherwise be required to provide under such subsection.

"(3) In any fiscal year in which the amount a State will receive under this section is less than $100,000, the Secretary may designate that State to receive assistance under this section as part of a regional center.

"(4) The provisions of paragraph (3) shall not apply to any State which can demonstrate to the Secretary that the total amount of Federal, State, local and private funds expended to carry out the purposes of this section equals or exceeds $100,000.

"(5) In any fiscal year in which paragraph (2) applies, the Secretary may allow certain States that receive assistance as part of a regional center to reserve a portion of such assistance for State literacy services pursuant to this section.

"(k) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1992, and 1993, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1994 and 1995.".

PART B—WORKFORCE LITERACY

SEC. 321. NATIONAL WORKFORCE LITERACY ASSISTANCE COLLABORATIVE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Department of Labor a National Workforce Literacy Assistance Collaborative (in this subsection referred to as the "Collaborative") to improve the basic skills of individuals, especially those individuals who are marginally employed or unemployed with low basic skills and limited opportunity for long-term employment and advancement, by assisting small and medium-sized businesses, business associations that represent small and medium-sized businesses, and labor organizations to develop and implement literacy programs tailored to the needs of the workforce.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—The Collaborative shall—

(1) develop and implement a plan for providing small and medium-sized businesses with the technical assistance required to address the literacy needs of their workforce;

(2) monitor the development of workforce literacy training programs and identify best practices and successful small and medium-sized business program models;

(3) inform businesses and unions of research findings and best practices regarding exemplary curricula, instructional techniques, training models, and the use of technology as a training tool in the workplace;

(4) provide technical assistance to help businesses assess individual worker literacy skill needs, implement workforce literacy training programs, and evaluate training program effectiveness;

(5) promote cooperation and coordination among State and local agencies and the private sector to obtain maximum uses of existing literacy and basic skills training resources;

(6) conduct regional and State small business workforce literacy meetings to increase program effectiveness and accountability;

(7) establish cooperative arrangements with the National Institute for Literacy and other centers involved in literacy and basic skills research and development activities; and

(8) prepare and produce written and video materials necessary to support technical assistance and information dissemination efforts.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out this section $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995.

SEC. 322. GRANTS FOR NATIONAL WORKFORCE LITERACY STRATEGIES.

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) in paragraph (1) by inserting ", in consultation with the Secretary of Labor and the Administrator of the Small Business Administration," after "Secretary";

(B) in subparagraph (B) of paragraph (2)—

(i) by striking "and" and inserting a comma; and

(ii) by inserting after "agencies" the second place such term appears the following: "and any other entity described in paragraph (1) that receives a grant under this subsection"; and

(C) by inserting the following new paragraphs at the end:

"(5) In awarding grants under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to applications from partnerships which include small businesses.

"(6) The Secretary is authorized to award grants under this section for a period not to exceed 3 years.";

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) in paragraph (1) by striking "subsection (c)" and inserting "subsection (e)";

(B) in subparagraph (B) of paragraph (2)—

(i) by striking "and" and inserting a comma; and

(ii) by inserting after "agencies" the second place such term appears the following: "and any other entity described in paragraph (1) that receives a grant under this subsection";

(3) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (e);

(4) by inserting after subsection (b) the following:

"(c) GRANTS FOR NATIONAL WORKFORCE LITERACY STRATEGIES.—(1) Whenever in any fiscal year, appropriations under subsection (e) are equal to or exceed $25,000,000, the Secretary shall reserve not more than $5,000,000 to establish a program of grants to facilitate the design and implementation of national strategies to assist small and medium-sized businesses and unions to effectively provide literacy and basic skills training to workers.

"(2) Grants awarded under this subsection shall provide funds to establish large-scale national strategies in workforce literacy, which may include the following activities:

"(A) Basic skills training that is cost-effective and needed by employees and required by their employers to establish a trainable workforce which can take advantage of further job specific training and advance the productivity of the labor force on an individual, industry, or national level.

"(B) Specific program offerings, which may include—

"(i) English as a second language instruction;

"(ii) communications skill building;

"(iii) reading and writing skill building; and

"(iv) computation and problem solving.

"(C) Appropriate assessments of individual worker's literacy and basic skills needs and appropriate assessments of the skill levels required by business.

"(D) Cooperative arrangements with other organizations involved in providing literacy and basic skills training, including adult education, vocational education, community and junior colleges, community-based organizations, State level agencies, and private industry councils.

"(E) The establishment as appropriate of technology-based learning environments, such as computer-based learning centers.

"(3) To receive a grant under this subsection, a proposal shall be submitted to the Secretary by partnerships described in subsection (a)(1), containing a plan specifying a strategy for designing and implementing workforce literacy and basic skills training for workers, and justifying the national, statewide, or industry-wide importance of this strategy. The proposal shall include—

"(A) a demonstration of need for literacy and basic skills training;

"(B) a description of the business or industry for which the strategy is to be established;

"(C) a statement of specific, measurable goals and participant outcomes;

"(D) a strategy for achieving the goals, including a description of the process to identify literacy and basic skills required by employers and the skills of individual workers, and a description of the specific services to be provided; and

"(E) a description of the costs of the activities to be undertaken.

"(4) The Secretary shall develop a formal process for the submission of proposals and publish an announcement with respect to that process and the availability of funds in the Federal Register.

"(5) Grants under this subsection may be used to fund 70 percent of the cost of programs which meet the requirements of this subsection.

"(6) The Secretary shall give priority to grant proposals described in paragraph (2)(D).

"(7) The Secretary may take into account geographic considerations (such as rural and urban) and national distribution, when awarding grants under paragraph (3) of this subsection.

"(8) The Secretary shall award annually, from amounts available under paragraph (1), no more than 10 grants of not less than $500,000 each.

"(d) EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall reserve not more than 2 percent of any amount appropriated under this section for the purpose of carrying out an independent evaluation of the effectiveness of programs assisted under this section in improving the literacy and basic skills of workers and the productivity of employees, including potential for the replicability or adaption of such programs."; and

(5) in subsection (e) (as redesignated by paragraph (3)) by striking paragraph (1) and inserting the following:

"(1) There are authorized to be appropriated $60,000,000 for fiscal year 1992 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1993, 1994 and 1995 to carry out the provisions of this section.".

PART C—INVESTMENT IN LITERACY

SEC. 331. AMENDMENTS TO THE ADULT EDUCATION ACT.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 313 of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1201b) is amended in subsection (a) by striking "and such sums" and all that follows through "1993" and inserting the following: ", such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1991, $280,000,000 for the fiscal year 1992 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1993, 1994 and 1995".

(b) USE OF FUNDS.—Subsection (a) of section 322 of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1203b(b)) is amended—

(1) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) Grants to States under this subpart shall be used in accordance with State plans (and amendments thereto) approved under sections 341 and 351, to pay the Federal share of the cost of the establishment or expansion of adult education programs to be carried out by local educational agencies, agencies responsible for corrections education, community-based organizations, public or private nonprofit agencies, postsecondary educational institutions, and other institutions that have the ability to provide literacy services to adults and families. Each State educational agency receiving financial assistance under this subpart shall assure direct and equitable access to Federal funds to local educational agencies, public or private nonprofit agencies, community-based organizations, agencies responsible for corrections education, postsecondary educational institutions, and institutions which serve educationally disadvantaged adults. In determining which programs shall receive assistance under this paragraph, the State shall consider—

"(A) the past effectiveness of applicants in providing effective services (especially with respect to recruitment and retention of educationally disadvantaged adults and the learning gains demonstrated by such adults);

"(B) the degree to which the applicant will coordinate and utilize other literacy and social services available in the community; and

"(C) the commitment of the applicant to serve individuals in the community that are most in need of literacy services.";

(2) in paragraph (3)—

(A) by striking the first sentence; and

(B) by inserting after "sources;" the following: "the projected goals of the applicant with respect to participant recruitment, retention, and successful completion of the literacy program";

(3) in paragraph (4)—

(A) by striking "(A)";

(B) by inserting after "adults" the following: ", particularly in areas with a high proportion of adults who do not have a certificate of graduation from a school providing secondary education or its equivalent."; and

(C) by striking subparagraph (B);

(4) by redesignating paragraphs (3) and (4) (as amended by paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection) as paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively; and

(5) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following:

"(3)(A) Grants to States provided under this section shall also be used for competitive 2-year grants to public housing authorities for literacy programs and related activities. Any grant provided under the preceding sentence shall be referred to as a 'Gateway Grant'.

"(B) The Secretary shall, not less often than every 2 years, evaluate any grants made under this paragraph and report the results of such evaluation to the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate.".

(c) STATE ADVISORY COUNCIL.—(1) The heading to section 332 of the Adult Education Act is amended by inserting "and literacy" before the period.

(2) Section 332 of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1205a) is amended—

(A) in the first sentence of subsection (a)(1) by striking "adult education, appointed by the Governor" and inserting "adult education and literacy, appointed by, and responsible to, the Governor";

(B) in the second sentence of subsection (a)(1) by striking all beginning with "consist" through the end period and inserting "consists of—

"(i) representatives of public education;

"(ii) representatives of public and private sector employment;

"(iii) representatives of recognized State labor organizations;

"(iv) representatives of private, voluntary, and community-based literacy organizations;

"(v) the chief administrative officer of a State, or the designee of such individual; and

"(vi) representatives of each of the following State agencies:

"(I) the State educational agency;

"(II) the State job training agency;

"(III) the State human services agency;

"(IV) the State public assistance agency;

"(V) the State library program; and

"(VI) the State economic development agency.

The council shall also include officers of the State government whose agencies provide funding for literacy services or who may be designated by the Governor or the Chairperson of the council to serve whenever matters within the jurisdiction of the agency headed by such an officer are to be considered by the council. The council shall also include classroom teachers who have demonstrated outstanding results in teaching children or adults to read.";

(C) by striking the first sentence of subsection (d) and inserting "One member more than one-half of the members on the council shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of transmitting recommendations and proposals to the Governor, but a lesser number of members may constitute a quorum for the other purposes.";

(D) in subsection (d) by inserting the following new sentence after the first sentence: "The State advisory council shall meet at least 4 times each year."; and

(E) in subsection (f)—

(i) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) meet with the State agencies responsible for literacy training to advise on the development of a State plan for literacy and for adult education that fulfills the literacy and adult education needs of the State, especially with respect to the needs of the labor market, economic development goals, and the needs of the individuals in the State;";

(ii) by amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

"(2) advise the Governor, the State educational agency, and other State agencies concerning—

"(A) the development and implementation of measurable State literacy and adult education goals consistent with section 342, especially with respect to—

"(i) improving levels of literacy in the State so that all appropriate State agencies have specific objectives and strategies for such goals in a comprehensive approach;

"(ii) improving literacy programs in the State; and

"(iii) fulfilling the long-term literacy goals of the State;

"(B) the coordination and monitoring of State literacy training programs in order to progress toward the long-term literacy goals of the State;

"(C) the improvement of the quality of literacy programs in the State by supporting integration of services, staff training, and technology-based learning along with the integration of resources of literacy programs across various agencies of State government; and

"(D) private sector initiatives that would improve adult education programs and literacy programs, especially through public-private partnerships;";

(iii) by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (7); and

(iv) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraphs:

"(3) review and comment on the plan submitted pursuant to section 354(h) and submit such comments to the Secretary;

"(4) track progress on meeting the goals and objectives set forth in paragraph (2);

"(5) recommend model systems for implementing and coordinating State literacy programs for replication at the local level; and

"(6) developing reporting requirements, standards for outcomes, performance measures, and program effectiveness in State programs, that are consistent with those proposed by the Interagency Task Force on Literacy established by section 111 of the National Literacy Act of 1991.".

(d) STATE PLAN.—Subsection (c) of section 342 of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1206a) is amended—

(1) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) describe and provide for the fulfillment of the literacy needs of individuals in the State;";

(2) by striking paragraph (9);

(3) by redesignating paragraphs (2) through (8) as paragraphs (3) through (9), respectively;

(4) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following:

"(2) set forth measurable goals for improving literacy levels, retention in literacy programs, and long-term learning gains of individuals in the State and describe a comprehensive approach for achieving such goals, including the expected outcomes of programs, services, and activities during the 4-year period;";

(5) in paragraph (4) (as redesignated by paragraph (3) of this section)—

(A) by striking "the use of" and inserting "coordination by";

(B) by striking "other than" and inserting "including"; and

(C) by striking "such as";

(6) in paragraph (9) (as redesignated by paragraph (3) of this section), by inserting before the semicolon the following: "and the progress the State has made toward achieving the goals set forth in each State plan subsequent to the initial State plan";

(7) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (12);

(8) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (13) and inserting a semicolon; and

(9) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(14) report the amount of administrative funds spent on program improvements; and

"(15) contain assurances that financial assistance provided pursuant to this title shall be used to assist and expand existing programs, and to develop new programs for adults whose lack of basic skills—

"(A) renders such adults unemployable;

"(B) keeps employed or unemployed adults from functioning independently in society; and

"(C) severely reduces the ability of such adults to positively affect the literacy of their children.".

(e) EVALUATION.—Section 352 of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1207a) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting before the semicolon the following: ", including—

"(A) the number and percentage of local educational agencies, community-based organizations, volunteer groups, and other organizations that are grant recipients; and

"(B) the amount each such grant recipient receives under this Act";

(2) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by striking "before the end" and all that follows through "shall consider" and inserting the following: "evaluate 15 percent of the grant recipients each year so that at the end of such period 60 percent of grant recipients shall have been evaluated once and such evaluations shall consider, at a minimum—";

(B) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) through (D) as subparagraphs (B) through (E), respectively;

(C) by inserting before subparagraph (B) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B) of this paragraph) the following:

"(A) the projected goals of the grant recipient as described in its application under section 322(a)(3);";

(D) by amending subparagraph (D) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B) of this paragraph) to read as follows:

"(D) the success of the grant recipient in recruiting, retaining, and assisting participants in reaching desired literacy goals and obtaining subsequent work experience; and"; and

(E) by striking "and" at the end;

(3) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting "; and"; and

(4) by adding at the end the following:

"(4) biennially submit a report to the Interagency Task Force on Literacy established by section 311 of the National Literacy Act of 1991 describing—

"(A) how the State will or has met the literacy goals established in its State plan; and

"(B) progress being made in reaching its literacy goals, coordination of workplace literacy services, and building a high quality delivery system for adult literacy programs.".

(f) TEACHER TRAINING.—(1) Section 353 of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1208) is amended by—

(A) striking "and" at the end of subsection (a)(1)(B);

(B) striking the period at the end of subsection (a)(2) and inserting a semicolon and "and"; and

(C) inserting at the end of subsection (a) the following:

"(3) training professional teachers, volunteers, and administrators, with particular emphasis on training—

"(A) full-time professional adult educators;

"(B) minority adult educators;

"(C) educators of adults with limited English proficiency; and

"(D) teachers to recognize and more effectively serve illiterate individuals with learning disabilities, and with a reading ability below the fifth grade level.".

(2) Section 353 of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1208), as amended by paragraph (1) of this subsection, is further amended—

(A) in subsection (a) by striking "10" and inserting "15"; and

(B) by amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) SPECIAL RULE.—At least ⅔ of the 15 percent reserved pursuant to subsection (a) shall be used to carry out the provisions of paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a).".

SEC. 332. TARGETED ASSISTANCE.

(1) redesignating paragraphs (5) and (6) as paragraphs (6) and (7), respectively; and

(2) inserting the following new paragraph (5) after paragraph (4):

"(5) programs of training to enhance the ability of teachers and school counselors to identify, particularly in the early grades, students with reading and related problems which place such students at risk for illiteracy in their adult years;".

SEC. 333. AMENDMENTS TO THE EVEN START PROGRAM.

(a) AMENDMENT TO PART HEADING.—The heading for part B of chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2741 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"PART B—EVEN START FAMILY LITERACY PROGRAM".

(b) STATE GRANT PROGRAM.—Section 1052 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2742) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking "local educational agencies or consortia of such agencies" and inserting "eligible entities";

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) by inserting "(1)" before "In"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) In any fiscal year in which this subsection applies, no State shall award a grant under this part for an amount less than $75,000.

"(3) In any year in which this subsection applies, each State that receives a grant under this part may use not more than 5 percent of assistance provided under the grant for costs of—

"(A) administration; and

"(B) the provision of technical assistance for program improvement and replication to eligible entities that receive grants under this part, which assistance may be provided through grant or contract.";

(3) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d);

(4) by inserting immediately after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) RESERVATION.—From amounts appropriated for purposes of carrying out this part, the Secretary may reserve an amount equal to not more than 2 percent of such amounts or the amount reserved for such purposes in the fiscal year 1991, whichever is greater, for purposes of—

"(1) carrying out the evaluation required by section 1058; and

"(2) providing technical assistance for program improvement and replication to eligible entities that receive grants under this part, which may be provided through grant or contract."; and

(5) by amending subsection (d) (as redesignated by paragraph (3)) to read as follows:

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—For the purpose of this part:

"(1) The term 'eligible entity' means—

"(A) a local educational agency applying in collaboration with a community-based organization, public agency, institution of higher education, or other nonprofit organization; or

"(B) a community-based organization, or other nonprofit organization of demonstrated quality applying in collaboration with a local educational agency.

"(2) The terms 'Indian tribe' and 'tribal organization' have the respective meanings given such terms in section 4 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act.

"(3) The term 'State' includes each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.".

(c) ALLOCATION.—Section 1053 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2743) is amended by amending subsection (a) to read as follows:

"(a) RESERVATION FOR MIGRANT PROGRAMS AND TERRITORIES.—(1) In each fiscal year in which section 1052(a) applies, the Secretary shall first reserve for programs consistent with the purpose of this part—

"(A) for migrant children, an amount equal to 3 percent of the amount appropriated for purposes of carrying out this part, which programs shall be conducted through the Office of Migrant Education; and

"(B) for allocations to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and Palau (until the Compact of Free Association with Palau takes effect pursuant to section 101(a) of Public Law 99-658), and to Indian tribes and tribal organizations, an amount comparable to their relative need.

"(2) In each fiscal year in which section 1052(b) applies, the Secretary shall first reserve for programs consistent with the purpose of this part, an amount equal to 5 percent of the amount appropriated for purposes of carrying out this part, of which—

"(A) amounts shall be allocated for programs for migrant children, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and Palau (until the Compact of Free Association with Palau takes effect pursuant to section 101(a) of Public Law 99-658), and Indian tribes and tribal organizations, according to their relative need; and

"(B) in no case shall the amount reserved for programs for migrant children be less than the amount reserved for such programs in the preceding fiscal year.".

(d) FEDERAL SHARE LIMITATION.—Section 1054 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2744) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking "local educational agencies" and all that follows through "nonprofit organizations," and inserting "an eligible entity";

(2) in paragraph (2) of subsection (b), by inserting after "counseling," the following: "other developmental and support services,"; and

(3) in subsection (c)—

(A) by redesignating paragraphs (1) through (4) as subparagraphs (A) through (D), respectively, and by moving such subparagraphs 2 ems to the right so that they are indented 6 ems from the left margin;

(B) by striking "(c) FEDERAL SHARE LIMITATION.—" and all that follows through "may be—" and inserting the following:

"(c) FEDERAL SHARE.—

"(1) LIMITATION.—The Federal share under this part may be—";

(C) in subparagraph (A) (as redesignated by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph), by striking "local educational agency" and inserting "eligible entity";

(D) by moving the matter following subparagraph (D) (as redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection) 2 ems to the right, so that it is indented 4 ems from the left margin;

(E) by striking the last sentence and inserting the following: "The remaining cost may be provided in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, and may be obtained from any source other than funds made available for programs under this chapter."; and

(F) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) SPECIAL RULE.—The Secretary may waive, in whole or in part, the requirement that all or part of the remaining cost described in paragraph (1) be obtained from sources other than funds made available under this chapter if an eligible entity—

"(A) demonstrates that it otherwise would not be able to participate in the program under this part; and

"(B) negotiates an agreement with the Secretary with respect to the amount of the remaining cost to which the waiver would be applicable.".

(e) ELIGIBLE PARTICIPANTS.—Section 1055 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2745) is amended—

(1) by striking "Eligible" and inserting the following: "(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), eligible";

(2) in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) (as designated by paragraph (1)), by striking "(aged 1 to 7," and inserting "(from birth to age 7,"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(b) CONTINUATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR CERTAIN PARTICIPANTS.—Any family participating in the program under this part that becomes ineligible for such participation as a result of 1 or more members of the family becoming ineligible for such participation, may continue to participate in the program until all members of the family become ineligible for participation, which—

"(1) in the case of a family in which ineligibility was due to the child or children of such family attaining the age of 8, shall be when the parent or parents become ineligible due to educational advancement; and

"(2) in the case of a family in which ineligibility was due to the educational advancement of the parent or parents of such family, shall be when all children in the family attain the age of 8.".

(f) APPLICATIONS.—Section 1056 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2746) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking "a local educational agency" and inserting "an eligible entity"; and

(2) in subsection (b), by striking "the local educational agency" and inserting "the eligible entity".

(g) SELECTION PROCESS.—Section 1057 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2747) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by redesignating paragraphs (1) through (7) as subparagraphs (A) through (F), respectively;

(B) by inserting "(1)" before "The";

(C) in paragraph (1) (as designated by subparagraph (B) of this paragraph)—

(i) by amending subparagraph (B) (as redesignated by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph) to read as follows:

"(B) demonstrate that the area to be served by such program has a high percentage or a large number of children and adults who are in need of such services as indicated by high levels of poverty, illiteracy, unemployment, limited English proficiency, or other need-related indicators.";

(ii) in subparagraph (E) (as redesignated by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph), by striking "the local educational agency's" and inserting "the eligible entity's"; and

(iii) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) The review panel shall give priority for grants under this subsection to proposals which—

"(A) make the demonstration described in paragraph (1)(B); and

"(B) demonstrate an ability to operate an effective program.";

(2) by amending subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c) DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE.—(1) In approving grants under this part pursuant to section 1052(a), the Secretary shall ensure a representative distribution of assistance among the States and among urban and rural areas of the United States.

"(2) In approving grants under this part pursuant to section 1052(b), the review panel shall ensure a representative distribution of assistance between urban and rural areas of the State."; and

(3) in paragraph (1) of subsection (d), by striking "local educational agency" each place it appears and inserting "eligible entity".

(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 1059 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2749) is amended to read as follows:

"There are authorized to be appropriated $60,000,000 for the fiscal year 1992, and such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year 1993 to carry out the provisions of this part.".

SEC. 334. FAMILY LITERACY PUBLIC BROADCASTING PROGRAM.

(a) PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.—(1) The Secretary is authorized, subject to the availability of appropriations, to enter into a contract with the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to arrange for the production and dissemination of family literacy programming and accompanying materials which would assist parents in improving family literacy skills and language development. In producing and developing such programming, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting shall work in cooperation with local public broadcasting stations to avoid duplication of efforts.

(2) After the program described in paragraph (1) is produced, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting shall arrange to have audio and video instructional media materials for distribution at sites chosen from among—

(A) State and local libraries operating literacy programs, and

(B) nonprofit entities serving hard-to-serve populations (such as illiterate parents, economically disadvantaged parents, offenders and their families, unemployed parents, learning disabled parents, and non-English speaking parents) including community-based organizations, volunteer organizations and other nongovernmental entities.

(3) The audio and video instructional media materials described in paragraph (2) shall be used at sites described in paragraph (2), and on a loan basis, distributed to families.

(4) One year after distribution of the audio and video instructional media materials, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting shall report to the Congress on the distribution and use of the audio and video instructional media materials produced pursuant to this subsection and such audio and video instructional media materials' contribution in promoting literacy.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1992 to carry out the provisions of subsection (i), of which $100,000 shall be reserved for reproducing and distributing programming or audio and video instructional media materials.

PART D—BUSINESS LEADERSHIP FOR EMPLOYMENT SKILLS

SEC. 341. EDUCATION PROGRAMS FOR COMMERCIAL DRIVERS.

Part C of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1211 et seq.) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new section 373:

"SEC. 373. EDUCATION PROGRAMS FOR COMMERCIAL DRIVERS.

"(a) PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants on a competitive basis to pay the Federal share of the costs of establishing and operating adult education programs which increase the literacy skills of eligible commercial drivers so that such drivers may successfully complete the knowledge test requirements under the Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986.

"(b) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of the costs of the adult education programs authorized under subsection (a) shall be 50 percent. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require States to meet the non-Federal share from State funds.

"(c) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive a grant under this section include—

"(1) private employers employing commercial drivers in partnership with agencies, colleges, or universities described in paragraph (2);

"(2) local educational agencies, State educational agencies, colleges, universities, or community colleges;

"(3) approved apprentice training programs; and

"(4) labor organizations, the memberships of which includes commercial drivers.

"(d) REFERRAL PROGRAM.—Grantees shall refer individuals who are identified as having literacy skill problems to appropriate adult education programs as authorized under this Act.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) The term 'approved apprentice training programs' has the meaning given such term in the National Apprenticeship Act of 1937.

"(2) The term 'eligible commercial driver' means a driver licensed prior to the requirements of the Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986.

"(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1992 and 1993.".

PART E—BOOKS FOR FAMILIES

SEC. 351. INEXPENSIVE BOOK DISTRIBUTION PROGRAM.

(a) PRIORITY.—Section 1563(b) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2963) is amended by—

(1) striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (4); and

(3) by adding the following new paragraph after paragraph (2):

"(3) beginning in fiscal year 1992 and each fiscal year thereafter, the contractor will give priority in the selection of additional local programs to programs and projects which serve children and students with special needs including, but not limited to—

"(A) low-income children (particularly such children in high poverty areas);

"(B) children at-risk for school failure;

"(C) disabled children;

"(D) emotionally disturbed children;

"(E) foster children;

"(F) homeless children;

SEC. 352. LIBRARY LITERACY PROGRAMS.

Section 601 of the Library Services and Construction Act (20 U.S.C. 375) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) In awarding grants under this section the Secretary shall give priority to programs and services which—

"(1) will be delivered in areas of greatest need which have highest concentrations of adults who do not have a secondary education or its equivalent, and which—

"(A) have few community or financial resources to establish the program described under this section without Federal assistance, or

"(B) have low per capita income, unemployment or underemployment; and

"(2) coordinate with literacy organizations and community based organizations providing literacy services.".

PART F—VOLUNTEERS FOR LITERACY

SEC. 361. LITERACY CHALLENGE GRANTS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Part C of title I of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. 4991 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"LITERACY CHALLENGE GRANTS

"SEC. 125. (a) The Director is authorized to award challenge grants to eligible public agencies and private organizations to pay the Federal share of the costs of establishing, operating or expanding community or employee literacy programs or projects that include the use of full-time or part-time volunteers as one method of addressing illiteracy.

"(b) Each eligible organization desiring a grant under this section shall submit to the ACTION Agency an application in such form and accompanied by such information as the Director may reasonably require. Each such application shall—

"(1) describe the activities for which assistance is sought,

"(2) contain assurances that the eligible organization will provide from non-Federal sources the non-Federal share of the cost of the program or project,

"(3) provide assurances, satisfactory to the Director, that the literacy project will be operated in cooperation with other public and private agencies and organizations interested in, and qualified to, combat illiteracy in the community where the project is to be conducted, and

"(4) contain such other information and assurances as the Director may reasonably require.

"(c)(1)(A) The Federal share of the cost of a program or project authorized by this section administered by a public agency, a nonprofit organization other than an organization described in paragraph (2), or a private, for-profit organization shall not exceed—

"(i) 80 percent in the first fiscal year;

"(ii) 70 percent in the second fiscal year; and

"(iii) 60 percent in the third fiscal year.

"(B) The non-Federal share paid by a private, for-profit organization shall be in cash.

"(2) The Federal share of the cost of a program or project administered by a nonprofit or community-based organization shall not exceed—

"(A) 90 percent in the first fiscal year;

"(B) 80 percent in the second fiscal year; and

"(C) 70 percent in the third fiscal year.

"(3) The non-Federal share provided by a public agency or a nonprofit or community-based organization may be provided in cash, or in kind, fairly evaluated, and may include the use of plant, equipment, and services.".

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 501(c) of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973) Act (42 U.S.C. 5081) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3) and in addition to the amounts authorized to be appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) there is authorized to be appropriated $2,500,000 for the fiscal year 1992 and such sums as may be necessary for 1993 for Literacy Challenge Grants under section 125.

"(3) No funds shall be appropriated pursuant to paragraph (2) in any fiscal year unless—

"(A) the funds available in such fiscal year for the VISTA Program under part A of title I are sufficient to provide the years of volunteer service specified for such fiscal year under section 501(d)(1) for the VISTA Program; and

"(B) the funds available in such fiscal year for the VISTA Literacy Corps under part A of title I are sufficient to provide at least the same years of volunteer service as were provided in the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.".

PART G—LITERACY FOR INCARCERATED INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 371. MANDATORY EDUCATION FOR INCARCERATED ADULTS.

Section 321 of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1203) is amended—

(1) by striking "From" and inserting the following:

"(a) PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.—Subject to subsection (b), from"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b) MANDATORY LITERACY PROGRAM.—(1) Before the expiration of the 2-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subsection, each State correctional system and each local jail or detention center with an inmate population shall have in effect a mandatory functional literacy program in at least 1 major correctional facility.

"(2) Provided that adequate funds are available before the expiration of the 5-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, each State correctional system and each local jail or detention center with an over 150 inmate population shall have in effect a functional literacy program in each correctional facility.

"(3) Each mandatory functional literacy program required by paragraphs (1) and (2) shall include—

"(A) a requirement that each individual incarcerated in a State corrections system, or in a local jail or detention center with an over 150 inmate population, who is serving a sentence of at least 1 year, and who is not functionally literate participate in such program until such individual—

"(i) achieves functional literacy;

"(ii) is granted parole;

"(iii) completes his or her sentence; or

"(iv) is released pursuant to a court order;

"(B) a prohibition on granting parole to any individual described in subparagraph (A) who refuses to participate in such program;

"(C) adequate opportunities for appropriate educational services and testing of all inmates for functional literacy upon reception; and

"(D) an inmate participation incentive program which may include—

"(i) better housing opportunities;

"(ii) monetary incentives for achievement; and

"(iii) positive reports from the education department to the parole authorities for inmates who participate and progress in the literacy program.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'functional literacy' means either—

"(A) an eighth grade equivalence in reading on a nationally recognized standardized test;

"(B) functional competency or literacy on a nationally recognized criterion-referenced test; or

"(C) a combination of subparagraphs (A) and (B).

"(5) Any individual serving a life sentence without parole, or who is terminally ill, or under a sentence of death shall not be required to participate in a mandatory functional literacy program.

"(6) The Secretary shall waive the application of paragraph (3)(B) in any case in which a court order requires early release of an individual due to a constitutional consideration.

"(7) Each State facility and jail required to participate in this program shall make an annual report to the Secretary on the results of its mandatory literacy program. Such report shall include the—

"(A) number of individuals tested for eligibility;

"(B) number of individuals eligible for the program;

"(C) number of individuals participating in the program;

"(D) numbers of hours of instruction per week; and

"(E) sample data on achievement of students.

"(8) Parole agencies are encouraged to make educational recommendations for those being released who do not have a marketable job skill or a high school diploma.

"(9) Jails with less than a 150 inmate population are encouraged to develop mandatory functional literacy programs as described in paragraph (3).".

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues today in cosponsoring S. 2, the Strengthening Education for American Families Act.

Education is the foundation upon which this country was built. Yet since the National Council on Excellence in Education declared our Nation "at risk" in 1983, that foundation has eroded, placing this Nation at even greater risk.

A 1985 study of 8th graders in 20 countries found that the United States ranked 10th in arithmetic, 12th in algebra, 16th in geometry, and 18th in measurements.

A 1986 study of college-bound high school seniors in 13 industrialized countries found that American students ranked 9th in physics, 11th in chemistry, and last in biology.

A recent National Assessment of Educational Progress test found that half of American 17-year-olds cannot handle junior high level math problems and only 7 percent were ready for college science courses.

According to a report released last year by the National Assessment of Educational Progress, high school seniors lack the most basic understanding in geography.

The NAEP survey found that only 58 percent of high school seniors could locate Jerusalem on a regional map, only 42 percent could identify Nigeria on a map of Africa, and 64 percent of the students did not know that Saudi Arabia borders on the Persian Gulf and the Red Sea.

It is time we devoted more effort and more resources to strengthening education for American families. For this reason, education has been designated as a high priority in the 102d Congress.

In 1989, Senate Democrats, House Democrats, and Democratic Governors joined together in announcing national education goals. The President and the Nation's Governors have since announced similar goals as well.

Title I of S. 2 establishes eight national education goals. But goals alone cannot be the answer. We need to continually measure performance toward those goals and to let Americans know what progress is achieved in attaining those goals.

Title II of S. 2 establishes a National Council on Educational Goals based on the concepts developed by Senator BINGAMAN through hearings and meetings with academic experts. The Council will monitor the goals, analyze education data, and issue an annual report card on progress made.

Title III of S. 2 is of critical importance in attaining one of the eight goals. This section embodies legislation authored by Senator SIMON last year that will help this Nation end illiteracy by the year 2000.

Studies have found that by the end of the decade, people with less than a high school diploma will be able to fill only about 14 percent of all jobs, as opposed to 40 percent today. And, the jobs that are in the middle of the skill distribution today will be the least skilled occupations of the future.

But as many as 23 to 27 million Americans are functionally illiterate today. These people face a future where jobs will demand increasingly higher level skills. We cannot abandon them. No American should be left behind as we futher enter an age that is ever more technologically sophisticated.

S. 2 is the guideline for our education agenda. It is not the full agenda. It is the beginning. If we do not identify where we want to go and what we want to achieve, we have no direction and our efforts are empty. This legislation sets the path that we will follow.

For each of the national education goals established in title 1 of S. 2, we will work on legislation during this Congress.

Currently, about 20 percent of those children eligible to participate in Head Start are enrolled in a preschool program. Ensuring that all children start school ready to learn is one of the most important goals for this Nation. I hope that we can expand Head Start this year to involve more eligible children.

Another important goal involves substantially reducing the high school dropout rate. One out of every four high school students drops out today. I hope that we can expand current dropout demonstration programs and other programs designed to prevent high school students from dropping out.

A number of studies have estimated that we will need about 2 million new teachers before the year 2000. Other studies have found that 20 percent of new teachers leave during their first year of teaching and over half leave before their sixth year. For those teachers that stay, in a number of fields, they are not qualified to teach the courses for which they were hired.

If we want our children to learn, we have to make sure that teachers can teach. Along with the goal of ensuring a diverse teaching faculty and a well qualified teacher before every classroom, we will be working on teacher training and recruitment legislation this year.

One of the most controversial education issues that will be addressed this year involves the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act. It is no secret that the cost of obtaining a higher education has risen during this decade at over twice the rate of inflation.

We need to ensure that no qualified student is precluded from higher education because of the cost alone. No high school student who studies hard and achieves should ever feel that college is out of reach. No American family should ever fear that their child's hard work in school will go for nothing.

Given Federal budget constraints, the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act will be no easy task. However, following hearings and related studies, the Labor and Human Resources Committee will begin drafting legislation later this year.

Strengthening education for American families is not a partisan issue. Nor do I believe we should play partisan politics with it.

I hope that all of my colleagues will join with us today in supporting S. 2 which will make our progress measurable and put into place efforts to make all Americans literate.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues, Senators KENNEDY, PELL, BINGAMAN, and our majority leader, in sponsoring S. 2, the Strengthening Education for American Families Act of 1991. I am particularly pleased that title III of this bill is the National Literacy Act, a bill I introduced in the 101st Congress, which received unanimous support in the Senate last February, with a vote of 99 to 0. The National Literacy Act will launch the first comprehensive and coordinated Federal effort to create, expand and improve the resources available to help millions of Americans learn to read.

President Bush, in his State of the Union address, announced six key education goals upon which he and the governors have agreed. One of those goals—"Every American adult must be a skilled, literate worker and citizen"—is a simple but important objective that we should have addressed long ago. Nevertheless, we now have a Presidential commitment toward ending illiteracy in our Nation. The National Literacy Act provides the structure, the strategies, and the means to put action behind our words. Indeed, the National Literacy Act provides the foundation necessary to mobilize a comprehensive national campaign for literacy.

Mr. President, the National Literacy Act includes: The creation of an Interagency Task Force for Literacy, the National Institute for Literacy, State Literacy Resource Centers, a Family Literacy Public Broadcasting Program, and a Literacy Challenge Grant Program in the ACTION Agency; and the expansion and improvement of the Adult Education Act, including the Workplace Literacy Program, and the Even Start Family Literacy Program.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR LITERACY

While there are a number of existing Federal programs that help to address the problem of illiteracy, resources are scarce and dispersed among numerous Federal agencies. Furthermore, the programs that do exist are not coordinated and are delivered in a fragmented fashion. We simply have no national policy as it relates to literacy. There is no clear consensus on what works most effectively in literacy programs, and what we do know is not well disseminated or utilized, particularly because of a lack of sufficient training for the large number of part-time adult educators and volunteers.

To address these needs the National Literacy Act creates an Interagency Task Force on Literacy and the National Institute for Literacy. The Task Force is composed of the Secretaries of Labor, Education, and Health and Human Services, and the Director of the ACTION Agency. It will coordinate the various literacy functions of the Federal Government and monitor the progress in meeting the literacy goals of this act.

The National Institute for Literacy will serve as an important focal point for expertise and leadership in literacy. The Institute will coordinate literacy efforts with the State Literacy Resource Centers also created in this act. The Institute is authorized to conduct research and policy analysis, operate a toll-free hotline for literacy providers, develop a data base on literacy, disseminate information, and provide training and technical assistance to literacy providers. The Institute will be administered by an interagency group composed of the Secretaries of Education, Labor, and Health and Human Services. It is authorized at $10 million in fiscal year 1992.

ADULT EDUCATION PROGRAMS

The primary Federal program that exists to reduce illiteracy is the Adult Education Act. Currently, it is funded at about $200 million, about 1 percent of the Department of Education's total budget. It serves only 10 percent of those estimated to be in need. Across the country, all the public and private literacy programs combined provide services to about 19 percent of those who need help.

In an effort to meet more of the demand for literacy services, this bill increases the authorizations for the Adult Education Basic State Grant by $80 million over fiscal year 1991 appropriations. The existing program is also amended to ensure "direct and equitable access" to AEA funds by nonprofit and community-based organizations. Today, the majority of States in our country do not fund these organizations, irrespective of their success in serving illiterate populations. This change will allow these organizations in each State to compete for adult education funds based on the effectiveness of their programs.

WORKPLACE LITERACY PROGRAMS

The existing Workplace Literacy Program is amended to create a new section for "Programs of National Significance." The authorization for the Workplace Literacy Program will be increased to $60 million, and of this amount, $5 million will be set-aside for programs of national significance. The national significance grants will be funded at a minimum of $500,000 for large-scale projects intended to address literacy problems of national, statewide or industrywide importance. Also,

$5 million in technical assistance funds are included for the Department of Labor to work with businesses and unions to establish or improve workplace literacy programs.

EVEN START PROGRAM

In 1988, the Congress authorized the Even Start Program to target parents and their children who are in need of literacy services to break the cycle of generational illiteracy, poverty, and unemployment. Under this legislation, the title is changed to the Even Start Family Literacy Program, and the authorization for appropriations is increased. Legislative revisions to this program include: Strengthening the targeting provisions by placing a priority on grants to high poverty areas most in need of funding; increasing accessibility to funds by allowing nonprofit or community-based organizations to apply directly for funds; creating a set-aside for model program replication, grants to Indian tribes and tribal organizations, and the U.S. territories; and changes the eligible age for children to permit services to newborn children.

ACTION AGENCY CHALLENGE GRANTS

Within the ACTION Agency, a Literacy Challenge Grant Program is created to provide $2.5 million in matching funds to public-private partnerships that establish or expand community or employee literacy programs. An emphasis is placed on the use of volunteers, which is in keeping with the mission of ACTION.

Mr. President, we cannot underestimate the scope of the illiteracy problem. Roughly 30 million Americans in this country are being considered illiterate according to commonly used estimates. Of these 30 million, an estimated four million cannot read at all. Another 45 million adults read with only minimal comprehension. Extremely high rates of illiteracy are reported among the welfare population, the unemployed, drug users, criminals, and high school dropouts. It is reported that one-half of all the households that are classified below the poverty level by Federal guidelines cannot read an eighth grade level book.

A major goal of the National Literacy Act is to improve work force literacy. The literacy skills of our current and future work force must be improved if the United States is to remain competitive in domestic and international markets. Our newspapers are replete with dramatic examples of the difficulties American businesses are facing today in hiring literate workers.

The New York Telephone Co. had to test 60,000 people on an entry-level exam to hire just 3,000 people. Eighty-four percent of those tested failed the exam.

IBM offered free college-level algebra courses at a New York State plant and 280 workers signed up, but an achievement test revealed that only 30 workers could read and solve math problems at even the high school level.

Chrysler Corp. had to incorporate graphics on its assembly line because so many workers could not read the words "bad hood fit" on the button they were supposed to push when they detected an ill-fitting hood.

The American Society for Training and Development estimates that American businesses now spend about $1 billion a year on basic education in addition to the billions they spend on teaching specific occupational skills. Within a decade that figure is expected to increase at least tenfold.

The workplace is placing greater demands on employees. The average American worker today must have skills at the ninth through twelfth grade levels, not the fourth grade level typical after World War II. And the standards keep rising. The growth occupations have increasingly shifted to the service and retail sectors, which require high level problem-solving, communication, reading, writing, and math skills. By the year 2000, three out of four jobs will require educational training beyond ninth grade.

Changing demographics suggest that our future work force will rely increasingly on population groups that have disproportionately high rates of illiteracy. Women, immigrants, and blacks, Hispanics, Asians, and other races will account for over 80 percent of the work force growth from 1986 to the year 2000. Minorities, especially blacks and Hispanics, and persons with disabilities, dominate the pool of unskilled, and increasingly unused, labor. It is estimated that 44 percent of black and 56 percent of Hispanic adults are functionally illiterate. The proportion is roughly 16 percent for whites.

Fighting illiteracy is not just an issue of fairness and equity; it is an issue of economics. Our Nation's economic security is directly tied to the quality of the Nation's work force. Over the course of the next decade, some 21 million new labor market entrants, including those from minority groups, will require literacy and basic skills training to enable them to succeed in new jobs. The future growth and prosperity of our economy will be closely linked to our ability to educate and train these individuals.

Combating illiteracy allows us to combat crime. About 75 percent of adult prison inmates are functionally illiterate, and the average person in prison has a third or fourth grade reading level. While it costs only $4,200 a year to send a youth to school, the costs of school failure are much higher if these youth resort to crime and are incarcerated. In fact, it costs $14,000 per year to keep a prisoner in jail, and these costs are exacerbated by extremely high rates of recidivism. The high levels of illiteracy among the prison population virtually guarantees poor success in the job market after release. This is a particularly serious problem considering that about 90 percent of adults presently in prison will be released within the next 5 to 10 years.

One of the aims of the National Literacy Act is to expand literacy services to persons with learning disabilities and facilitate a better understanding of this learning disorder and how to address it. According to a 1987 study by the Federal Interagency Task Force on Learning Disabilities, five to ten percent of the total population have learning disabilities. This means that as many as 12 to 24 million Americans have learning disabilities that hinder their ability to read. Experts estimate that those with learning disabilities are disproportionately represented among high school dropouts, the unemployed, the illiterate, and offenders.

If one thing is clear it is that the problem of illiteracy in this country is of disturbing proportions. It is equally clear that solutions to the problem have been ignored for far too long at the national level.

There is a growing consensus that the national effort to promote literacy and combat illiteracy has been too weak and that more substantial and comprehensive Federal leadership is needed. The goal of substantially reducing illiteracy by the year 2000 is now viewed as a significant, and necessary, step toward ensuring educational and economic opportunity for all Americans, and enhancing our Nation's economic competitiveness. In some respects, the Federal effort in this area has lagged behind State involvement. Some 38 States have implemented literacy initiatives and committed State resources to attack the problem.

As a nation, I believe that we must ensure that all those who need and want literacy services will receive them—without being subjected to waiting lists, inaccurate assessments, overcrowded classrooms, or inferior programs taught by poorly trained adult educators. The National Literacy Act is intended to achieve these objectives.

Mr. President, I am pleased to note that the Literacy Act has received widespread support from most national literacy programs and from numerous State and local literacy programs across the country. A few of these organizations include: the Literacy Network, International Reading Association, Literacy Volunteers of America, United Way of America, ABC/PBS Project Literacy, the American Library Association, American Association of Community and Junior Colleges, American Vocational Association, Correctional Education Association, National Puerto Rican Forum, National Council of La Raza, Laubach Literacy Action, Association for Community Based Education, National Puerto Rican coalition, American Jail Association, Coalition on Human Needs, Council of Chief State School Officers, Association of State Literacy Directors, National Council of State Directors of Adult Education, National Conference of State Legislatures, National Urban League, American Association for Adult and Continuing Education, State Directors of Vocational Education, OIC's of America, Alternative Schools Network, and the Council of Great City Schools.

THE NATIONAL EDUCATION GOALS

Mr. President, in 1949, the Federal Government invested 9 percent of its budget in education. Now, only 2 percent goes for education, if you exclude the school lunch program. It is clearly time to renew the Federal commitment to America's young and old who want to learn.

The National Literacy Act is a beginning, but it is only that. Title I of the Strengthening Education for American Families Act also lays out a number of other actions that the Federal Government must take if the national education goals are going to be reached. For example, the goals call for all children to start school ready to learn by the year 2000. One of the Nation's best hopes for meeting this goal is the highly successful Head Start Program. Yet the program only serves about 20 percent of eligible 3-, 4-, and 5-year-olds.

Virtually all Head Start Programs have waiting lists. Recently, I was in Rock Island, IL, visiting a program in a poor area there. To deal with the demand, I found out that they have one group of children on Monday, another group on Tuesday, another on Wednesday, and so on. I asked the director what it would mean if she could serve all of the kids every day. She answered, "You can't believe what a difference that would make."

We must do better. This bill establishes our commitment to do just that, to "provide Head Start services to every eligible child who needs such services." Head Start funding increased in fiscal year 1991, but it must continue to increase substantially if, by the year 2000 all students truly will enter school ready to learn.

In other areas as well, this bill establishes specific Federal commitments to do our part to achieve the national goals. On school dropout prevention, student achievement, science and math, violence and drugs, and teacher recruitment, programs are cited as vehicles for making real progress towards goals that have so far been 99 percent rhetoric, particularly on the part of the Federal Government.

The bill also establishes goals for higher education, neglected for the most part by the Governors and the President. Over the past decade, our major grant program for poor students has lost half of its purchasing power, forcing these students to borrow, or, too often, to forgo their dreams. In the past, grants were the major form of Federal student aid, 75 percent in the mid-1970's. Now, two-thirds of Federal aid is loans. This trend must be reversed. Excessive loans not only discourage needy students from starting or finishing college, they pose an unreasonable hardship for those not entering high-paying professions, more often women and minorities. Furthermore, a large loan burden twists career goals, giving a student one more reason to become a lawyer instead of a teacher.

This legislation provides the foundation for our discussion this year on the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act: Increased enrollment and retention of low-income and minority students; assistance to middle income families; and reduced reliance on loans.

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON EDUCATIONAL GOALS

Mr. President, setting broad goals is not enough. If we are to succeed, there must be a concerted effort to involve the American people in the campaign to achieve the national education goals. My colleague from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] has been pressing this point home for the past year or so, and title II of this bill is an attempt to really involve the Nation in this effort.

This bill establishes a national council of education experts and leaders, to analyze the Nation's progress toward the national goals, and, perhaps more important, to make recommendations for action at the Federal, State, and local level. The council would work closely with State summits on education, designed to establish goals, plans, and timetables at that level.

The panel established by the National Governors Association, is, frankly, insufficient for the task at hand. The 10 voting members are three Democratic Governors, three Republican Governors, and four members of the administration. Neither the panel nor the administration has asked for any genuine participation by Members of Congress. There are no leaders of education organizations, no teachers, no outside education experts. Senator BINGAMANS' proposal would establish a credible, bipartisan panel of experts. It has a real chance of accomplishing more than just public relations.

Mr. President, when I was in maybe the fourth grade, I remember reading in a geography lesson that the United States has a high standard of living because we have such an abundance of natural resources. I believed that until a few years ago, when I realized that the countries that are increasing their gross national product much faster than we are, are countries with virtually no natural resources. They have invested in their people. That is what we have to do, and this legislation, the Strengthening Education for American Families Act, is an important start.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am very pleased, as the chairman of the Education Subcommittee, to rise today as a cosponsor of the Strengthening Education for American Families Act of 1991. Its introduction as one of the first bills sends a strong signal that education is indeed among the top priorities of the Congress.

The legislation we are introducing today has three major components:

First, it defines a series of national goals in education for all Americans;

Second, it establishes a national academic report card on education that will bring educators, parents, and Congress to the table with Governors and the President in measuring our progress toward meeting the national education goals; and Third, it reintroduces the National Literacy Act, legislation which passed the Senate last year 99 to 0, but which did not become law.

In higher education the task before us is great. In the decades of the sixties and seventies, our Nation committed itself to open the doors of higher education to every young American with the talent, desire, and drive to pursue a college education. How close we came. In 1980, a maximum Pell grant covered 41 percent of the average college cost. The passage of the Middle Income Student Assistance Act in 1978 meant that middle income American families could count on Federal student aid to help ease the tuition crunch.

But today, Mr. President, that dream is fading. A maximum Pell grant covers only 26 percent of the average cost of college. The student loan program is increasingly unavailable to those families for whom it was designed—the middle income. Instead, we now burden our Nation's poorest young people with enormous education debts. The result is a student aid program in trouble and disarray, the middle income increasingly unable to meet the costs of a higher education, and minorities and the poor for whom the dream of a college education remains just that—a dream.

This is a situation we must reverse. We must find a way to restore the opportunity for a college education to every American who has the talent, drive, and desire. That will be my overriding goal during the higher education reauthorization.

At all levels of education, it is without question that quality in education is our primary mission. In higher education, we must make sure that any student who receives Federal aid to attend an institution of higher learning need not worry about the quality of the education that he or she receives. Quality should be a given. And, if institutions do not provide a quality education, they should be ineligible to receive Federal aid.

In elementary and secondary education, the mission to achieve quality in education must be the same. And, through the reauthorization of the Office of Educationalal Research and Improvement, we have a golden opportunity to focus upon excellence in education as never before. We should charge the Office of Education Research and Improvement to identify proven models of educational excellence, and to develop mechanisms for translating that excellence into our Nation's schools. We should ask it as well to examine new ideas, such as fulfilling the human capacity to learn, extending the school year, and periodic testing of students to evaluate what they have learned in the classroom. To my mind this office should serve as the beacon of educational excellence, and it should be on the cutting edge of new, innovative, and even controversial educational ideas, concepts, and programs.

As we begin the 102d Congress, we must focus upon quality and access as a single, inseparable effort. To provide an excellent education without affording every American adequate access to that education runs counter to our democratic responsibilities. Conversely, to focus upon access without ensuring excellence does a disservice to our students, our people, and our Nation.

I want to commend the majority leader for his leadership in making education a priority for the 102d Congress. I want to commend the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KENNEDY, for his distinguished work in education over the years and for the leadership he is taking on this legislation. And, I want to commend Senator SIMON for his extraordinary work in fashioning a strong literacy bill, and Senator BINGAMAN for his tremendous contribution to the legislation on the national academic report card.

We have an ambitious agenda ahead of us, but our work is critical. For, in the words of John Kennedy:

> Our progress as a nation can be no swifter than our progress in education. The human mind is our fundamental resource.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in support of Senate bill number 2, the Educational Improvement Act of 1991. I would particularly like to focus my remarks on title II, the National Academic Report Card Act of 1991.

Over the past decade, we have witnessed a growing concern about educational achievement in the United States. Improving the quality of education of American students has become a top priority of the Nation's Governors as well as the President of the United States. There has been an increasing acceptance that there needs to be a more sustained national effort if the quality of education offered to American students is to improve.

In September 1989, the President and the Governors met at an education summit in Charlottesville. They agreed upon six goals to be achieved by the year 2000:

> All children will start school ready to learn, Ninety percent of high school students will graduate, All students will master basic skills, U.S. students will be first in the world in science and mathematics achievement, Every adult American will be literate, Every school will be drug-free and safe.

These are laudable goals. But there was minimal participation by parents and organizations in setting these goals, in plans for monitoring progress, or implementing programs toward meeting these goals.

Senate bill S. 2, title I, expands significantly on the scope of the National Goals in at least two major areas by incorporating the goals of, "Providing every school in the Nation with a well qualified and diverse teaching faculty," and "Ensuring that no qualified student shall be denied the opportunity for postsecondary education because of financial or other barriers." In addition, the Educational Improvement Act of 1991 includes a title III which addresses improving national literacy. I fully support the efforts of my colleague Senator SIMON in designing a strategy for achieving universal adult literacy by the year 2000.

If we are to improve the quality of American education, there is no doubt that measuring student progress will play a critical role. A joint statement issued at the 1989 education summit stated,

> When goals are set and strategies for achieving them are accepted, we must establish clear measures of performance and then issue annual report cards on the progress of students, schools, the states, and the federal government.

Clearly, establishing national goals will have little meaning unless we are able to assess where we currently stand and to measure our progress in attaining these goals.

There was and is no effective mechanism for measuring individual school performance relative to the established national education goals. It is clear that we need more information about the quality of education as well as more information about the conditions under which education takes place and the conditions of children receiving that education. There is a need to establish effective and direct ways to measure progress toward the national education goals so that policy makers at the local, State, and the Federal levels can begin to effectively and substantively address the issue of improving the quality of American education.

In January 1990, I introduced S. 2034, the National Report Card Act. It established a National Council on Education composed of highly-respected, bipartisan experts to study, evaluate, and report on the progress of the Nation's ecducational achievement, from preschool through postsecondary education. Title II of S. 2 is an evolution of that bill, taking into account further input the Senate Labor Committee received in its hearings last year. It is essentially identical to the version S. 3095 reported by the Labor Committee last October.

Following an initial report analyzing existing information on the educational achievement of U.S. students and schools, the Council would issue annual report cards assessing U.S. educational attainment. Each report card would: First, assess progress toward the national goals; second, identify gaps in existing data and make recommendations for improving the methods of assessing educational attainment; and third, based on input from several sources involved in implementing the goals, make revisions in the strategies for achieving the national educational goals or identify new educational goals or objectives.

This past July, a full 7 months after introduction of my National Report Card Act, the Governors and some of the President's advisors met in Mobile, AL. One of the outcomes of this meeting was the establishment of a competing National Educational Goals Panel, which unfortunately falls well short of the mark for an independent report card. This panel was charged with overseeing the development and implementation of a national education progress reporting system. Their panel would develop and establish appropriate measures to assess progress toward the national education goals established in Charlottesville. Each year, the panel is to report the progress made toward these goals.

Unfortunately, the Governors and the President chose to ignore the need for independence as expressed originally in my Report Card Act. Instead, they set up a panel comprised of six Governors, four administration officials, and four ex-officio Members of Congress—all political office holders. In effect, as the people responsible for making and implementing national and State educational policy, they have made arrangements so that they, and no one else, would be the judge of their own work. This would serve the purpose of shielding those who set the goals from any accountability for achieving those goals.

An additional concern is that the Panel cannot act on any proposal or statement unless 75 percent or 8 out of the 10 Members agree. This effectively gives both the Governors and the administration independent vetoes over any reports issued. Another severely limiting factor in terms of carrying out the Panel's mission is that there is no budget for the Panel to conduct its business nor any mechanism for it to commission data collection, particularly any new data collection. The Department of Education has had the primary responsibility for collecting information on the condition and progress of education in the United States. However, the National Center for Education Statistics—the primary source for Federal data on American education—according to testimony heard over the past 2 years, has long been underfunded in comparison to other general purpose statistical agencies. In summary, the Governors and the President have set up a group—totally ignoring the concept developed in the Report Card Act—to monitor education progress, and this Panel is made up of political officials who will be monitoring their own achievement and do not have funding to carry out their mission.

This past July and September I chaired two hearings of the Labor and Human Resources Subcommittee on Education both of which focused on the National Report Card Act of 1990. Three major conclusions were drawn from these hearings: First, there is a need for a report card that would contain information about school indicators being used to achieve national goals; second, the general public should be meaningfully involved; and third, there should be an independent National Council to monitor progress toward the national goals.

I believe that there is no issue of greater long-term consequence to our Nation's future than the performance of our educational system. I do not believe that two separate groups attempting to assess education progress will benefit the education achievement of our students. Out of last year's hearings came a modified bill, S. 3095, which the Labor Committee reported by a vote of 12 to 4, last October. It is this version which is now incorporated as title II of S. 2, The Educational Improvement Act of 1991. There are three major substantive changes from the original bill introduced last January. These were designed to take into account the current state of affairs.

Instead of two separate panels this bill will create a single Council made up of education "stakeholders", "experts", and "policymakers". In effect the two panels, the one created by the administration and the Governors, and the one I originally envisioned, are combined without substantially affecting the integrity of either panel nor the mission of the Council.

Another change that would affect the collection of data, is a recommendation that after developing its long-range timetable, the Council contract with NCES or any other entity capable of generating and/or collecting the necessary data to appropriately assess the goals based on the Council's recommendations.

A third major change is the authorizing of matching funds for State summits of education. The Council will include in its initial report on recommended indicators, as well as on the subsequent annual reports, an analysis of the submitted State summaries. The state summits are, I believe, vitally important to the success of the long-term national goals. Long-term commitment will come only from a large-scale consensus. The state summit reports will help generate meaningful grassroots discussion about the national goals and will help the Council evaluate the level of local and State commitment to investing in strategies for improving schools. Funding ongoing grassroots deliberation will help keep public momentum behind the process.

This past year saw much wasted time as the administration sought to exercise political control over the assessment process. It was a battle of a policy that demanded administration control versus a bill that asserted the need for an independent council. Even discussions with the National Governors Association failed to reconcile the differences. It is still my very strong conviction that an independent council is of the utmost importance if we are to honestly and credibly assess and report on our success in attaining the national goals on education.

If this nation is to improve the quality of education offered to our students and to improve the quality of our work force it is crucial that we pay close attention to monitoring and measuring student progress and that we sustain this effort over a long period of time. Title II of the Educational Improvement Act of 1991 will set up a monitoring and measuring infrastructure for education that will have a broad base of participation. I urge your consideration and support of this entire bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, although we are faced with immense challenges in the Middle East, we must not lose sight of the domestic challenges facing our Nation. Our domestic policy today is in crises—in fact, the Bush administration has abandoned the helm. Our health care, unemployment and recession, and our public education system, once the pride of this Nation, is failing America's children. The crises we face at home have serious implications for our future and the health of our Nation. Despite the crisis in the Persian Gulf, we cannot avoid our critical domestic needs such as health care, employment, and education.

For this reason, I am pleased to join my colleagues as a cosponsor of Strengthening Education for American Families Act. This bill sets education as one of our Nation's top priorities for the 102d Congress. The education system in the United States needs a dramatic infusion of attention, energy, and resources. Classrooms are overcrowded, teachers are seriously underpaid, materials are dated or in some schools nonexistent, and children are at risk of failing and dropping out of school. Schools are being called upon to be more than just educational institutions; they are being pressed to respond to the social and behavioral problems of at-risk children and their families.

America was founded on the principle of universal education. Public education is one of the main tenants of our democratic ideals and has distinguished us as a nation for over 150 years. Yet today, all children do not have the same educational opportunities, nor do they have an equal chance to go to college. Sadly, all Americans have yet to achieve literacy. It is time for the Federal Government to take responsibility for these failures and exert our leadership in this vital area of national concern. We should declare the 1990's the education decade, and be serious about achieving significant improvements.

In this bill, we set forth eight specific national education goals. These goals must be taken very seriously. We should demand nothing less than the achievement of these goals by the year 2000. Our success will ensure that:

All children in America will start school ready to learn;

The high school graduation rate will increase to at least 90 percent;

American students will leave grades 4, 8, and 12 having demonstrated competency in specific subject matters;

Our students will be first in the world in mathematics and science achievement;

Every American will be literate and will possess the knowledge and skills necessary to compete in a global economy and exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship;

Every school in America will be free of drugs and violence and will offer a disciplined environment conducive to learning;

There will be a well qualified and diverse teaching faculty in every school in the Nation; and

No qualified student shall be denied the opportunity for postsecondary education because of financial or other barriers.

These are ambitious goals, and rightly so. Nothing less than the future of our country is at stake. Although we have much to do, we have already made progress toward some of these objectives. Last year the 101st Congress adopted the Excellence in Math, Science and Engineering Education Act, the Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act reauthorization, and the National and Community Service Act, all of which will help us meet our educational challenges.

S. 2, in addition to setting forth goals for educational achievement, provides two tools necessary to move us closer toward meeting these objectives. Title II of the bill, the National Council on Education and Report Card, will ensure that we have the means to measure our progress toward achieving these goals. This section requires that data concerning educational achievement of the country's students be collected and analyzed, and it charges the Council to make recommendations for pursuing our education goals at the Federal, State, and local levels.

Title III of this measure is similar to the National Literacy Act of 1989 which I supported in the 101st Congress. Illiteracy affects between 23 and 27 million adult Americans. This means that one adult in five does not read well enough to meet their daily needs. These adults are seriously handicapped in the workplace and at home: They cannot read to their children or help them with their school work. Nor can they find decent paying jobs. Eliminating illiteracy is an issue of both social fairness and economics and will help improve our Nation's ailing economy.

The Strengthening Education for American Families Act is an important first step to improving our Nation's education system. We must keep in mind the goals set forth in title I as we consider all education initiatives this session. We must do all we can to meet these goals. To do otherwise would be to surrender to the "rising tide of mediocrity" predicted by the education critics. We must make sure that this prophecy does not come true. It is the greatest legacy we can give our children.

I urge my colleagues to lend their support to this measure.

By Mr. FORD (for Mr. BOREN (for himself, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. FORD, Mr. BYRD, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. KERRY, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. DODD, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. BRADLEY and Mr. HARKIN)):

S. 3. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for a voluntary system of spending limits for Senate election campaigns, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SENATE ELECTION ETHICS ACT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I join the distinguished majority leader, Senator MITCHELL, and the President pro tempore, Senator BYRD, the senior Senator from Oklahoma, Senator BOREN, along with Senator WIRTH, Senator KERRY of Massachusetts, Senator SANFORD, and Senator DODD in introducing S. 3, the Senate Elections Ethics Act of 1991.

Mr. President, with a few notable exceptions, the issue of campaign finance reform may be the most important matter debated in this year. I cannot think of an issue more central to the long-term interests of this institution. Our integrity and ability to function effectively in the future are clearly at stake.

Mr. President, this legislation is essentially the same bill which passed the Senate last year. It may very well not be the final solution, but it will begin the debate. Every issue is on the table. Every issue is subject to debate before the rules committee and the full Senate in the months ahead. And every issue, with one exception, must be negotiable.

Let me repeat what many others have said in the past: There simply can be no real reform without meaningful spending limits. Even the terms of these limits will remain negotiable. But the issue of whether to establish spending limits is not. Americans demand that we put an end to the money chase. Winning Senate campaigns now cost more than an average of $4 million. How many consecutive increases in the cost of running our Senate campaigns will it take before we are willing to impose meaningful spending limits?

I ask the question, Mr. President, how much is too much?

For those who fear the impact of spending limits, I challenge them to go back and look at the record. How many times would the proposed spending limits in this bill have hurt successful challengers? How many times would they have hurt successful incumbents? Go back and look at the record.

The record over the last several years is rather clear. More and more money does not produce competitive elections. Absolute spending levels alone do not produce competitive elections. How many times have comparative spending levels between candidates been more important than absolute spending levels? Go back and look at the record.

Americans are focusing on the way we spend our time and the money we raise more closely than ever before. Some may try to distinguish between the appearance of improper conduct and improper conduct itself. I say to my colleagues here is one issue where perception is reality. Whether or not you can justify the current system of campaign finance—and I do not know who can—the appearances created by the current system alone gives us incentive to change. Now is the time to take advantage of the opportunities before us.

Mr. President, I hope we can move quickly on this issue. I promise as chairman of the Rules Committee I plan to schedule hearings on the campaign finance legislation in early March and proceed to mark up of this bill promptly after the conclusion of the hearings. This is an issue where every Member of the Senate is an expert, and I urge my colleagues to join with me and others in drafting a fair solution in the months ahead.

Mr. President, I will not get into the intricate details of this legislation. Most of us have heard them and debated them. Now is the time to come together, in my opinion, for meaningful result as it relates to improving the integrity and the ability of this institution and its Members.

Mr. President, I send to the desk S. 3 and ask unanimous consent that a copy of S. 3, the Senate Elections Ethics Act of 1991, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—SENATE ELECTION CAMPAIGN SPENDING LIMITS AND BENEFITS

SEC. 101. SENATE SPENDING LIMITS AND PUBLIC BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—FECA is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE V—SPENDING LIMITS AND PUBLIC BENEFITS FOR SENATE ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. For purposes of this title—

"(1) except as otherwise provided in this title, the definitions under section 301 shall apply for purposes of this title insofar as such definitions relate to elections to the office of United States Senator;

"(2) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate who is eligible under section 502 to receive benefits under this title;

"(3) the terms 'Senate Election Campaign Fund' and 'Fund' mean the Senate Election Campaign Fund established under section 506;

"(4) the term 'general election' means any election which will directly result in the election of a person to the office of United States Senator, but does not include an open primary election;

"(5) the term 'general election period' means, with respect to any candidate, the period beginning on the day after the date of the primary or runoff election for the specific office the candidate is seeking, whichever is later, and ending on the earlier of—

"(A) the date of such general election; or

"(B) the date on which the candidate withdraws from the campaign or otherwise ceases actively to seek election;

"(6) the term 'immediate family' means—

"(A) a candidate's spouse;

"(B) a child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate or the candidate's spouse; and

"(C) the spouse of any person described in subparagraph (B);

"(7) the term 'major party' has the meaning given such term in section 9002(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, except that if a candidate qualified under State law for the ballot in a general election in an open primary in which all the candidates for the office participated and which resulted in the candidate and at least one other candidate qualifying for the ballot in the general election, such candidate shall be treated as a candidate of a major party for purposes of this title;

"(8) the term 'primary election' means an election which may result in the selection of a candidate for the ballot in a general election for the office of United States Senator;

"(9) the term 'primary election period' means, with respect to any candidate, the period beginning on the day following the date of the last election for the specific office the candidate is seeking and ending on the earlier of—

"(A) the date of the first primary election for that office following the last general election for that office; or

"(B) the date on which the candidate withdraws from the election or otherwise ceases actively to seek election;

"(10) the term 'runoff election' means an election held after a primary election which is prescribed by applicable State law as the means for deciding which candidate will be on the ballot in the general election for the office of United States Senator;

"(11) the term 'runoff election period' means, with respect to any candidate, the period beginning on the day following the date of the last primary election for the specific office such candidate is seeking and ending on the date of the runoff election for such office;

"(12) the term 'voting age population' means the resident population, 18 years of age or older, as certified pursuant to section 315(e); and

"(13) the term 'expenditure' has the meaning given such term by section 301(9), except that in determining any expenditures made by, or on behalf of, a candidate or candidate's authorized committees, section 301(9)(B) shall be applied without regard to clause (ii) or (vi) thereof.

"CANDIDATES ELIGIBLE TO RECEIVE BENEFITS

"SEC. 502. (a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, a candidate is an eligible candidate if the candidate—

"(1) meets the primary and general election filing requirements of subsections (b) and (c);

"(2) meets the primary and runoff election expenditure limits of subsection (d); and

"(3) meets the threshold contribution requirements of subsection (e).

"(b) PRIMARY FILING REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The requirements of this subsection are met if the candidate files with the Commission a declaration as to whether—

"(A) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees—

"(i) will meet the primary and runoff election expenditure limits of subsection (d); and

"(ii) will only accept contributions for the primary and runoff elections which do not exceed such limits;

"(B) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees will meet the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b); and

"(C) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees will meet the limitation on expenditures from personal funds under section 503(a).

"(2) The declaration under paragraph (1) shall be filed on the date the candidate files as a candidate for the primary election.

"(c) GENERAL ELECTION FILING REQUIREMENT.—(1) The requirements of this subsection are met if the candidate files a certification with the Commission under penalty of perjury that—

"(A) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees—

"(i) met the primary and runoff election expenditure limits under subsection (d); and

"(ii) did not accept contributions for the primary or runoff election in excess of the primary or runoff expenditure limit under subsection (d), whichever is applicable;

"(B) the candidate met the threshold contribution requirement under subsection (e), and that only allowable contributions were taken into account in meeting such requirement;

"(C) at least one other candidate has qualified for the same general election ballot under the law of the State involved;

"(D) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate—

"(i) except as otherwise provided by this title, will not make expenditures which exceed the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b);

"(ii) will not accept any contributions in violation of section 315;

"(iii) except as otherwise provided by this title, will not accept any contribution for the general election involved to the extent that such contribution would cause the aggregate amount of such contributions to exceed the sum of—

"(I) the amount of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), reduced by the amount of voter communication vouchers issued to the candidate; plus

"(II) the amount of contributions from State residents which may be taken into account under section 503(b)(4) in increasing the general election expenditure limit; plus

"(III) the amount which may be maintained in a legal and accounting compliance fund under section 503(c);

"(iv) will deposit all payments received under this title in an account insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation from which funds may be withdrawn by check or similar means of payment to third parties;

"(v) will furnish campaign records, evidence of contributions, and other appropriate information to the Commission; and

"(vi) will cooperate in the case of any audit and examination by the Commission under section 507; and

"(E) the candidate intends to make use of the benefits provided under section 504.

"(2) The declaration under paragraph (1) shall be filed not later than 7 days after the earlier of—

"(A) the date the candidate qualifies for the general election ballot under State law; or

"(B) if, under State law, a primary or runoff election to qualify for the general election ballot occurs after September 1, the date the candidate wins the primary or runoff election.

"(d) PRIMARY AND RUNOFF EXPENDITURE LIMITS.—(1) The requirements of this subsection are met if:

"(A) The candidate or the candidate's authorized committees did not make expenditures for the primary election in excess of the lesser of—

"(i) 67 percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b); or

"(ii) $2,750,000.

"(B) The candidate and the candidate's authorized committees did not make expenditures for any runoff election in excess of 20 percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b).

"(2) The limitations under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) with respect to any candidate shall be increased by the aggregate amount of independent expenditures in opposition to, or on behalf of any opponent of, such candidate during the primary or runoff election period, whichever is applicable, which are required to be reported to the Commission with respect to such period under section 304A(b) (relating to independent expenditures in excess of $10,000).

"(3)(A) If the contributions received by the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees for the primary election or runoff election exceed the expenditures for either such election, such excess contributions shall be treated as contributions for the general election and expenditures for the general election may be made from such excess contributions.

"(B) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to the extent that such treatment of excess contributions—

"(i) would result in the violation of any limitation under section 315; or

"(ii) would cause the aggregate contributions received for the general election to exceed the limits under subsection (c)(1)(D)(iii).

"(e) THRESHOLD CONTRIBUTION REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The requirements of this subsection are met if the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees have received allowable contributions during the applicable period in an amount at least equal to 10 percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b).

"(2) For purposes of this section and section 504(b)—

"(A) The term 'allowable contributions' means contributions which are made as gifts of money by an individual pursuant to a written instrument identifying such individual as the contributor.

"(B) The term 'allowable contributions' shall not include—

"(i) contributions made directly or indirectly through an intermediary or conduit which are treated as made by such intermediary or conduit under section 315(a)(8)(B);

"(ii) contributions from any individual during the applicable period to the extent such contributions exceed $250; or

"(iii) contributions from individuals residing outside the candidate's State to the extent such contributions exceed 50 percent of the aggregate allowable contributions (without regard to this clause) received by the candidate during the applicable period.

Clauses (ii) and (iii) shall not apply for purposes of section 504(b).

"(3) For purposes of this subsection and section 504(b), the term 'applicable period' means—

"(A) the period beginning on January 1 of the calendar year preceding the calendar year of the general election involved and ending on—

"(i) the date on which the certification under subsection (c) is filed by the candidate; or

"(ii) for purposes of section 504(b), the date of such general election; or

"(B) in the case of a special election for the office of United States Senator, the period beginning on the date the vacancy in such office occurs and ending on the date of the general election involved.

"(f) INDEXING.—The $2,750,000 amount under subsection (d)(1) shall be increased as of the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index determined under section 315(c), except that for purposes of subsection (d), the base period shall be the calendar year in which the first general election after the date of the enactment of this title occurs.

"LIMITATIONS ON EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 503. (a) LIMITATION ON USE OF PERSONAL FUNDS.—The aggregate amount of expenditures which may be made during an election cycle by an eligible candidate or such candidate's authorized committees from the following sources shall not exceed $250,000:

"(1) The personal funds of the candidate and members of the candidate's immediate family.

"(2) Personal debt incurred by the candidate and members of the candidate's immediate family.

"(b) GENERAL ELECTION EXPENDITURE LIMIT.—(1) Except as otherwise provided in this title, the aggregate amount of expenditures for a general election by an eligible candidate and the candidate's authorized committees shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(A) $5,500,000; or

"(B) the greater of—

"(i) $950,000; or

"(ii) $400,000; plus

"(I) 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population not in excess of 4,000,000; and

"(II) 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population in excess of 4,000,000.

"(2) In the case of an eligible candidate in a State which has no more than 1 transmitter for a commercial Very High Frequency (VHF) television station licensed to operate in that State, paragraph (1)(B)(ii) shall be applied by substituting—

"(A) '80 cents' for '30 cents' in subclause (I); and

"(B) '70 cents' for '25 cents' in subclause (II).

"(3) The amount otherwise determined under paragraph (1) for any calendar year shall be increased by the same percentage as the percentage increase for such calendar year under section 502(f) (relating to indexing).

"(4)(A) The limitation under this subsection (without regard to this paragraph) shall be increased by the lesser of—

"(i) 25 percent of such limitation; or

"(ii) the amount of contributions described in subparagraph (B).

"(B) Contributions are described in this subsection if such contributions—

"(i) are made after the time contributions have been received in an amount at least equal to the threshold contribution requirement under section 502(e);

"(ii) are in amounts of $100 or less; and

"(iii) are made by an individual who was, at the time the contributions were made, a resident of the State in which the general election is held;

except that the total amount of contributions taken into account under subparagraph (A) with respect to any individual shall not exceed $100.

"(C) Except as otherwise expressly provided, any reference in any provision of law to the general election expenditure limit under this subsection shall be treated as a reference to such limit computed without regard to this paragraph.

"(c) LEGAL AND ACCOUNTING COMPLIANCE FUND.—(1) The limitation under subsection (b) shall not apply to qualified legal and accounting expenditures made by a candidate or the candidate's authorized committees or a Federal officeholder from a legal and accounting compliance fund meeting the requirements of paragraph (2).

"(2) A legal and accounting compliance fund meets the requirements of this paragraph if—

"(A) the only amounts transferred to the fund are amounts received in accordance with the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act;

"(B) the aggregate amount transferred to, and expenditures made from, the fund do not exceed the sum of—

"(i) the lesser of—

"(I) 15 percent of the general election expenditure limit under subsection (b) for the general election for which the fund was established; or

"(II) $300,000; plus

"(ii) the amount determined under paragraph (4); and

"(C) no funds received by the candidate pursuant to section 504(a)(3) may be transferred to the fund.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified legal and accounting expenditures' means the following:

"(A) Any expenditures for costs of legal and accounting services provided in connection with—

"(i) any administrative or court proceeding initiated pursuant to this Act during the election cycle for such general election; or

"(ii) the preparation of any documents or reports required by this Act or the Commission.

"(B) Any expenditures for legal and accounting services provided after the general election for which the legal and accounting compliance fund was established to ensure compliance with this Act with respect to the election cycle for such general election.

"(C) Expenditures for the extraordinary costs of legal and accounting services provided in connection with the candidate's activities as a holder of Federal office other than costs for the purpose of influencing the election of such candidate to Federal office.

"(4)(A) If, after a general election, a candidate determines that the qualified legal and accounting expenditures exceed the limitation under paragraph (2)(B), the candidate may petition the Commission for an increase in such limitation. The Commission shall authorize an increase in such limitation in the amount (if any) by which the Commission determines the qualified legal and accounting expenditures exceed such limitation. Such determination shall be subject to judicial review under section 509.

"(B) Except as provided in section 315, any contribution received or expenditure made pursuant to this paragraph shall not be taken into account for any contribution or expenditure limit applicable to the candidate under this title.

"(5)(A) A candidate shall terminate a legal and accounting compliance fund as of the earlier of—

"(i) the date of the first primary election for the office following the general election for such office for which such fund was established; or

"(ii) the date specified by the candidate.

"(B) Any amounts remaining in a legal and accounting compliance fund as of the date determined under subparagraph (A) shall be transferred—

"(i) to a legal and accounting compliance fund for the election cycle for the next general election;

"(ii) to an authorized committee of the candidate as contributions allocable to the election cycle for the next general election; or

"(iii) to the Senate Election Campaign Fund.

"(d) PAYMENT OF TAXES.—The limitation under subsection (b) shall not apply to any expenditure by the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees for Federal, State, or local taxes on earnings allocable to contributions received by such candidates or committees.

"BENEFITS ELIGIBLE CANDIDATE ENTITLED TO RECEIVE

"SEC. 504. (a) IN GENERAL.—An eligible candidate shall be entitled to—

"(1) the broadcast media rates provided under section 315(b)(3) of the Communications Act of 1934;

"(2) the mailing rates provided in section 3629 of title 39, United States Code;

"(3) payments from the Senate Election Campaign Fund in the amounts determined under subsection (b); and

"(4) voter communication vouchers in the amount determined under subsection (c).

"(b) AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS.—(1) For purposes of subsection (a)(3), except as provided in section 506(d), the amounts determined under this subsection are—

"(A) the independent expenditure amount; and

"(B) in the case of an eligible candidate who has an opponent in the general election who receives contributions, or makes (or obligates to make) expenditures, for such election in excess of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), the excess expenditure amount.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the independent expenditure amount is the total amount of independent expenditures made, or obligated to be made, during the general election period by 1 or more persons in opposition to, or on behalf of an opponent of, an eligible candidate which are required to be reported by such persons under section 304A(b) with respect to the general election period and are certified by the Commission under section 304A(e).

"(3) For purposes of paragraph (1), the excess expenditure amount is the amount determined as follows:

"(A) In the case of a major party candidate, an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) if the excess described in paragraph (1)(B) is not greater than 133⅓ percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), an amount equal to two-thirds of such limit applicable to the eligible candidate for the election; plus

"(ii) if the excess described in paragraph (1)(B) equals or exceeds 133⅓ percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), an amount equal to one-third of such limit applicable to the eligible candidate for the election.

"(B) In the case of an eligible candidate who is not a major party candidate, an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(i) the allowable contributions of the eligible candidate during the applicable period in excess of the threshold contribution requirement under section 502(e); or

"(ii) 50 percent of the general election expenditure limit applicable to the eligible candidate under section 503(b).

"(c) VOTER COMMUNICATION VOUCHERS.—(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall issue nontransferable voter communication vouchers to eligible candidates as provided under section 506(b).

"(2) The aggregate amount of voter communication vouchers issued to an eligible candidate under paragraph (1) shall be equal to 50 percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b) (25 percent of such limit if such candidate is not a major party candidate).

"(3) Voter communication vouchers shall be used by an eligible candidate to purchase broadcast time during the general election period subject to the same conditions under section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 as apply to other broadcast time which may be purchased (without regard to the rates charged for such time), except that each such broadcast shall be at least 1 but not more than 5 minutes in length.

"(d) WAIVER OF EXPENDITURE AND CONTRIBUTION LIMITS.—(1) An eligible candidate who receives payments under subsection (a)(3) which are allocable to the independent expenditure or excess expenditure amounts described in paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (b) may make expenditures from such payments to defray expenditures for the general election without regard to the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b).

"(2) An eligible candidate who receives benefits under this section may make expenditures for the general election without regard to clause (i) of section 502(c)(1)(D) or subsection (a) or (b) of section 503 if any one of the eligible candidate's opponents who is not an eligible candidate either raises aggregate contributions, or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures, for the general election that exceed 133⅓ percent of the general election expenditure limit applicable to the eligible candidate under section 503(b).

"(3) A candidate who receives benefits under this section may receive contributions for the general election without regard to clause (iii) of section 502(c)(1)(D) if—

"(A) a major party candidate in the same general election is not an eligible candidate; or

"(B) any other candidate in the same general election who is not an eligible candidate raises aggregate contributions, or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures, for the general election that exceed 75 percent of the general election expenditure limit applicable to such other candidate under section 503(b).

"(e) USE OF PAYMENTS FROM FUND.—Payments received by a candidate under subsection (a)(3) shall be used to defray expenditures incurred with respect to the general election period for the candidate. Such payments shall not be used—

"(1) except as provided in paragraph (4), to make any payments, directly or indirectly, to such candidate or to any member of the immediate family of such candidate;

"(2) to make any expenditure other than expenditures to further the general election of such candidate;

"(3) to make any expenditures which constitute a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which the expenditure is made; or

"(4) subject to the provisions of section 315(i), to repay any loan to any person except to the extent the proceeds of such loan were used to further the general election of such candidate.

"CERTIFICATION BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 505. (a) IN GENERAL.—(1) The Commission shall certify to any candidate meeting the requirements of section 502 that such candidate is an eligible candidate entitled to benefits under this title. The Commission shall revoke such certification if it determines a candidate fails to continue to meet such requirements.

"(2) No later than 48 hours after an eligible candidate files a request with the Commission to receive benefits under section 506, the Commission shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury whether such candidate is eligible for payments under this title from the Senate Election Campaign Fund or to receive voter communication vouchers and the amount of such payments or vouchers to which such candidate is entitled. The request referred to in the preceding sentence shall contain—

"(A) such information and be made in accordance with such procedures as the Commission may provide by regulation; and

"(B) a verification signed by the candidate and the treasurer of the principal campaign committee of such candidate stating that the information furnished in support of the request, to the best of their knowledge, is correct and fully satisfies the requirements of this title.

"(b) DETERMINATIONS BY COMMISSION.—All determinations (including certifications under subsection (a)) made by the Commission under this title shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 507 and judicial review under section 509.

"PAYMENTS RELATING TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 506. (a) ESTABLISHMENT OF CAMPAIGN FUND.—(1) There is hereby established on the books of the Treasury of the United States a special fund to be known as the 'Senate Election Campaign Fund'.

"(2)(A) There are appropriated to the Fund for each fiscal year, out of amounts in the general fund of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts equal to—

"(i) any contributions by persons which are specifically designated as being made to the Fund;

"(ii) amounts collected under sections 507(g) and 508(d)(3); and

"(iii) any other amounts which may be deposited into the Fund under this title.

"(B) The Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, transfer to the Fund an amount not in excess of the amounts described in subparagraph (A).

"(C) Amounts in the Fund shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

"(3) Amounts in the Fund shall be available only for the purposes of—

"(A) making payments required under this title; and

"(B) making expenditures in connection with the administration of the Fund.

"(4) The Secretary shall maintain such accounts in the Fund as may be required by this title or which the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"(b) PAYMENTS UPON CERTIFICATION.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, except as provided in subsection (d), the Secretary shall promptly pay the amount certified by the Commission to the candidate out of the Senate Election Campaign Fund.

"(c) VOUCHERS.—(1) Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, except as provided in subsection (d), the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue to an eligible candidate the amount of voter communication vouchers specified in such certification.

"(2) Upon receipt of a voter communication voucher from a licensee providing broadcast time to an eligible candidate, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to such licensee from the Senate Election Campaign Fund the face value of such voucher.

"(d) REDUCTIONS IN PAYMENTS IF FUNDS INSUFFICIENT.—(1) If, at the time of a certification by the Commission under section 505 for payment, or issuance or a voucher, to an eligible candidate, the Secretary determines that the monies in the Senate Election Campaign Fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to satisfy the full entitlement of all eligible candidates, the Secretary shall withhold from the amount of such payment or voucher such amount as the Secretary determines to be necessary to assure that each eligible candidate will receive the same pro rata share of such candidate's full entitlement.

"(2) Amounts and vouchers withheld under paragraph (1) shall be paid when the Secretary determines that there are sufficient monies in the Fund to pay all, or a portion thereof, to all eligible candidates from whom amounts have been withheld, except that if only a portion is to be paid, it shall be paid in such manner that each eligible candidate receives an equal pro rata share of such portion.

"(3)(A) Not later than December 31 of any calendar year preceding a calendar year in which there is a regularly scheduled general election, the Secretary, after consultation with the Commission, shall make an estimate of—

"(i) the amount of monies in the fund which will be available to make payments required by this title in the succeeding calendar year; and

"(ii) the amount of payments which will be required under this title in such calendar year.

"(B) If the Secretary determines that there will be insufficient monies in the fund to make the payments required by this title for any calendar year, the Secretary shall notify each candidate on January 1 of such calendar year (or, if later, the date on which an individual becomes a candidate) of the amount which the Secretary estimates will be the pro rata reduction in each eligible candidate's payments (including vouchers) under this subsection. Such notice shall be by registered mail.

"(C) The amount of the eligible candidate's contribution limit under section 502(c)(1)(D)(iii) shall be increased by the amount of the estimated pro rata reduction.

"(4) The Secretary shall notify the Commission and each eligible candidate by registered mail of any actual reduction in the amount of any payment by reason of this subsection. If the amount of the reduction exceeds the amount estimated under paragraph (3), the candidate's contribution limit under section 502(c)(1)(D)(iii) shall be increased by the amount of such excess.

"EXAMINATION AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"SEC. 507. (a) EXAMINATION AND AUDITS.—(1) After each general election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of 10 percent of all candidates for the office of United States Senator to determine, among other things, whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and conditions of eligibility of this title, and other requirements of this Act. Such candidates shall be designated by the Commission through the use of an appropriate statistical method of random selection.

"(2) The Commission may conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of any candidate in a general election for the office of United States Senator if the Commission determines that there exists reason to believe that such candidate may have violated any provision of this title.

"(b) EXCESS PAYMENTS; REVOCATION OF STATUS.—(1) If the Commission determines that payments or vouchers were made to an eligible candidate under this title in excess of the aggregate amounts to which such candidate was entitled, the Commission shall so notify such candidate, and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the excess.

"(2) If the Commission revokes the certification of a candidate as an eligible candidate under section 505(a)(1), the Commission shall notify the candidate, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the payments and vouchers received under this title.

"(c) MISUSE OF BENEFITS.—If the Commission determines that any amount of any benefit made available to an eligible candidate under this title was not used as provided for in this title, the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of such benefit.

"(d) EXCESS EXPENDITURES.—(1) If the Commission determines that any eligible candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by 5 percent or less—

"(A) the primary or runoff expenditure limit under section 502(d); or

"(B) the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b),

the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the amount of the excess expenditures.

"(2) If the Commission determines that any eligible candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by more than 5 percent—

"(A) the primary or runoff expenditure limit under section 502(d); or

"(B) the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b),

the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to three times the amount of the excess expenditures.

"(e) UNEXPENDED FUNDS.—Any amount received by an eligible candidate under this title may be retained for a period not exceeding 120 days after the date of the general election for the liquidation of all obligations to pay expenditures for the general election incurred during the general election period. At the end of such 120-day period, any unexpended funds received under this title shall be promptly repaid to the Secretary.

"(f) LIMIT ON PERIOD FOR NOTIFICATION.—No notification shall be made by the Commission under this section with respect to an election more than three years after the date of such election.

"(g) DEPOSITS.—The Secretary shall deposit all payments received under this section into the Senate Election Campaign Fund.

"CRIMINAL PENALTIES

"SEC. 508. (a) VIOLATIONS.—(1) No person shall knowingly and willfully—

"(A) accept benefits under this title in excess of the aggregate benefits to which the candidate on whose behalf such benefits are accepted is entitled;

"(B) use such benefits for any purpose not provided for in this title; or

"(C) make expenditures in excess of—

"(i) the primary and runoff expenditure limits under section 502(d); or

"(ii) the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b).

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Any officer, employee, or agent of any political committee who knowingly consents to any expenditure in violation of the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(b) USE OF BENEFITS.—(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any benefit under this title, or to whom any portion of any such benefit is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or to authorize the use of, such benefit or such portion other than in the manner provided in this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c) FALSE INFORMATION.—(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

"(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information (including any certification, verification, notice, or report) to the Commission under this title, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Commission or an examination and audit by the Commission under this title; or

"(B) to fail to furnish to the Commission any records, books, or information requested by it for purposes of this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(d) KICKBACKS AND ILLEGAL PAYMENTS.—(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or to accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any benefits received under this title by any eligible candidate or the authorized committees of such candidate.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal benefit in connection with any benefits received by any candidate pursuant to the provisions of this title, or received by the authorized committees of such candidate, shall pay to the Secretary, for deposit into the Senate Election Campaign Fund, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or benefit received.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 509. (a) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this title shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought. It shall be the duty of the Court of Appeals, ahead of all matters not filed under this title, to advance on the docket and expeditiously take action on all petitions filed pursuant to this title.

"(b) APPLICATION OF TITLE 5.—The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to judicial review of any agency action by the Commission.

"(c) AGENCY ACTION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'agency action' has the meaning given such term by section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code.

"PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 510. (a) APPEARANCES.—The Commission is authorized to appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section and under section 509 either by attorneys employed in its office or by counsel whom it may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation it may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

"(b) INSTITUTION OF ACTIONS.—The Commission is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined under this title to be payable to the Secretary.

"(c) INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—The Commission is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to petition the courts of the United States for such injunctive relief as is appropriate in order to implement any provision of this title.

"(d) APPEALS.—The Commission is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which it appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS

"SEC. 511. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after each election, submit a full report to the Senate setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures (shown in such detail as the Commission determines appropriate) made by each eligible candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate;

"(2) the amounts certified by the Commission under section 505 as benefits available to each eligible candidate;

"(3) the amount of repayments, if any, required under section 507 or 506(d)(2), and the reasons for each repayment required; and

"(4) the balance in the Senate Election Campaign Fund, and the balance in any account maintained in the Fund.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) RULES AND REGULATIONS.—The Commission is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct such examinations and investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of such books, records, and information, as it deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on it by this title.

"(c) STATEMENT TO SENATE.—Thirty days before prescribing any rules or regulation under subsection (b), the Commission shall transmit to the Senate a statement setting forth the proposed rule or regulation and containing a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 512. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission such sums as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out its functions under this title."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) Except as provided in this subsection, the amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to elections occurring after December 31, 1993.

(2) For purposes of any expenditure or contribution limit imposed by the amendment made by subsection (a)—

(A) no expenditure made before January 1, 1993, shall be taken into account, except that there shall be taken into account any such expenditure for goods or services to be provided after such date; and

(B) all cash, cash items, and Government securities on hand as of January 1, 1993, shall be taken into account in determining whether the contribution limit is met, except that there shall not be taken into account amounts used during the 60-day period beginning on January 1, 1993, to pay for expenditures which were incurred (but unpaid) before such date.

(c) EFFECT OF INVALIDITY ON OTHER PROVISIONS OF ACT.—If title V of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (as added by this section), or any part thereof, is held to be invalid, all provisions of, and amendments made by, this Act shall be treated as invalid.

SEC. 102. BAN ON ACTIVITIES OF POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title III of FECA (2 U.S.C. 301 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"BAN ON FEDERAL ELECTION ACTIVITIES BY POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES

"SEC. 324. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no person other than an individual or a political committee may make contributions, solicit or receive contributions, or make expenditures for the purpose of influencing an election for Federal office.

"(b) In the case of individuals who are executive or administrative personnel of an employer—

"(1) no contributions may be made by such individuals—

"(A) to any political committees established and maintained by any political party; or

"(B) to any candidate for election to the office of United States Senator or the candidate's authorized committees, unless such individuals certify that such contributions are not being made at the direction of, or otherwise controlled or influenced by, the employer; and

"(2) the aggregate amount of such contributions by all such individuals in any calendar year shall not exceed—

"(A) $20,000 in the case of such political committees; and

"(B) $5,000 in the case of any such candidate and the candidate's authorized committees."

(b) DEFINITION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEE.—(1) Paragraph (4) of section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The term 'political committee' means—

"(A) the principal campaign committee of a candidate;

"(B) any national, State, or district committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee thereof; and

"(C) any local committee of a political party which—

"(i) receives contributions aggregating in excess of $5,000 during a calendar year;

"(ii) makes payments exempted from the definition of contribution or expenditure under paragraph (8) or (9) aggregating in excess of $5,000 during a calendar year; or

"(iii) makes contributions or expenditures aggregating in excess of $1,000 during a calendar year."

(2) Section 316(b)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441b(b)(2)) is amended by striking subparagraph (C).

(c) CANDIDATE'S COMMITTEES.—(1) Section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) For the purposes of the limitations provided by paragraphs (1) and (2), any political committee which is established or financed or maintained or controlled by any candidate or Federal officeholder shall be deemed to be an authorized committee of such candidate or officeholder."

(2) Section 302(e)(3) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) No political committee that supports or has supported more than one candidate may be designated as an authorized committee, except that—

"(A) a candidate for the office of President nominated by a political party may designate the national committee of such political party as the candidate's principal campaign committee, but only if that national committee maintains separate books of account with respect to its functions as a principal campaign committee; and

"(B) a candidate may designate a political committee established solely for the purpose of joint fundraising by such candidates as an authorized committee."

(d) RULES APPLICABLE WHEN BAN NOT IN EFFECT.—For purposes of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, during any period beginning after the effective date in which the limitation under section 324 of such Act (as added by subsection (a)) is not in effect—

(1) the amendments made by subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall not be in effect;

(2) in the case of a candidate for election, or nomination for election, to the United States Senate (and such candidate's authorized committees), section 315(a)(2)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2)(A)) shall be applied by substituting "$1,000" for "$5,000"; and

(3) it shall be unlawful for a multicandidate political committee to make a contribution to a candidate for election, or nomination for election, to the United States Senate (or an authorized committee) to the extent that the making of the contribution will cause the amount of contributions received by the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees from multicandidate political committees to exceed the lesser of—

(A) $825,000; or

(B) the greater of—

(i) $375,000; or

(ii) 20 percent of the sum of the general election spending limit under section 503(b) of FECA plus the primary election spending limit under section 502(d)(1)(A) of FECA (without regard to whether the candidate is an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2)) of FECA).

In the case of an election cycle in which there is a runoff election, the limit determined under paragraph (3) shall be increased by an amount equal to 20 percent of the runoff election expenditure limit under section 502(d)(1)(A) of FECA (without regard to whether the candidate is such an eligible candidate). The $825,000 and $375,000 amounts in paragraph (3) shall be increased as of the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index determined under section 315(c) of FECA, except that for purposes of paragraph (3), the base period shall be the calendar year in which the first general election after the date of the enactment of paragraph (3) occurs. A candidate or authorized committee that receives a contribution from a multicandidate political committee in excess of the amount allowed under paragraph (3) shall return the amount of such excess contribution to the contributor.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to elections (and the election cycles relating thereto) occurring after December 31, 1992.

(2) In applying the amendments made by this section, there shall not be taken into account—

(A) contributions made or received on or before the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(B) contributions made to, or received by, a candidate after such date, to the extent such contributions are not greater than the excess (if any) of—

(i) such contributions received by any opponent of the candidate on or before such date, over

(ii) such contributions received by the candidate on or before such date.

SEC. 103. BROADCAST RATES.

(a) PROVISIONS RELATING TO LOWEST UNIT COST.—Section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) The charges made for the use of any broadcasting station by any person who is an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971) for the United States Senate in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election, to such office shall not exceed—

"(A) during the forty-five days preceding the date of a primary or primary runoff election in which such person is a candidate, 100 percent, and during the general election period (as defined in section 501(5) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971) in which such person is a candidate, 50 percent, of the lowest unit charge of the station, determined at the rate applicable to broadcasts of 30 seconds for the same time of day and day of week; and

"(B) at any other time, the charges made for comparable use of such station by other users thereof."

(b) PREEMPTION RULES; VOUCHERS.—Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315) is amended by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (e) and (f) and by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsections:

"(c)(1) In the case of a legally qualified candidate for Federal office (as defined in section 301(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971), a licensee shall not preempt the use, during any period the rates under subsection (b)(1)(A) or (b)(2) are in effect, of a broadcasting station by such candidate who has purchased such use pursuant to subsection (b).

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply if the program during which the candidate's broadcast was to air is unavoidably preempted.

"(d) A licensee shall—

"(1) accept voter communications vouchers provided to an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act) under section 504(a) of such Act; and

"(2) shall, upon presentation of such vouchers, provide broadcast time to such candidate subject to the same conditions as apply to other broadcast time which may be purchased (without regard to the rates charged for such time), except that no time shall be required to be provided without at least 7 days advance notice."

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended—

(1) by striking "The charges" and inserting:

"(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the charges"; and

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively.

SEC. 104. PREFERENTIAL RATES FOR MAIL.

(a) REDUCED RATES.—Subchapter II of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§3629. Reduced rates for certain Senate candidates

"(a) The rates of postage for matter mailed with respect to a campaign by an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971) shall be—

"(1) in the case of first-class mail matter, one-fourth of the rate currently in effect; and

"(2) in the case of third-class mail matter, 2 cents per piece less than mail matter mailed pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(b) Subsection (a) shall cease to apply to any candidate for any campaign when the total amount paid by such candidate for all mail matter at the rates provided by paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) exceeds 5 percent of the amount of the general election expenditure limit applicable to such candidate under section 503(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971."

(b) AUTHORIZATION.—Section 2401(c) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking "and 3626(a)-(h)" and inserting "3626(a)-(h), and 3629".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 3628 the following new item:

"3629. Reduced rates for certain Senate candidates."

SEC. 105. DISCLOSURE BY NONELIGIBLE CANDIDATES.

Subparagraph (B) of section 318(a)(1) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441d(a)(1)), as amended by section 308, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(iv) If a broadcast or other communication is paid for or authorized by a candidate in the general election for the office of United States Senator who is not an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2)), or the authorized committee of such candidate, such communication shall contain the following sentence: 'This candidate has not agreed to abide by the spending limits for this Senate election campaign set forth in the Federal Election Campaign Act.'."

SEC. 106. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

Title III of FECA is amended by adding after section 304 the following new section:

"REPORTING REQUIREMENTS FOR SENATE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 304A. (a) CANDIDATE OTHER THAN ELIGIBLE CANDIDATE.—(1) Each candidate for the office of United States Senator who does not file a certification with the Commission under section 502(c) shall file with the Commission a declaration as to whether such candidate intends to make expenditures for the general election in excess of the general election expenditure limit applicable to an eligible candidate under section 503(b). Such declaration shall be filed at the time provided in section 502(c)(2).

"(2) Any candidate for the United States Senate who qualifies for the ballot for a general election—

"(A) who is not an eligible candidate under section 502; and

"(B) who either raises aggregate contributions, or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures, for the general election which exceed 70 percent of the general election expenditure limit applicable to an eligible candidate under section 503(b), shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such contributions have been raised or such expenditures have been made or obligated to be made (or, if later, within 24 hours after the date of qualification for the general election ballot), setting forth the candidate's total contributions and total expenditures for such election as of such date. Thereafter, such candidate shall file additional reports (until such contributions or expenditures exceed 133⅓ percent of such limit) with the Commission within 24 hours after each time additional contributions are raised, or expenditures are made or are obligated to be made, which in the aggregate exceed an amount equal to 10 percent of such limit and after the total contributions or expenditures exceed 133⅓ percent of such limit.

"(3) The Commission—

"(A) shall, within 24 hours of receipt of a declaration or report under paragraph (1) or (2), notify each eligible candidate in the election involved about such declaration or report; and

"(B) if an opposing candidate has raised aggregate contributions, or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures, in excess of the applicable general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (e), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which such eligible candidate is entitled under section 504(a).

"(4) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements under this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate in a general election who is not an eligible candidate has raised aggregate contributions, or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures, in the amounts which would require a report under paragraph (2). The Commission shall, within 24 hours after making each such determination, notify each eligible candidate in the general election involved about such determination, and shall, when such contributions or expenditures exceed the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), certify (pursuant to the provisions of subsection (e)) to the Secretary of the Treasury such candidate's eligibility for payment of any amount under section 504(a).

"(b) INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES.—(1)(A) Any person who makes, or obligates to make, independent expenditures during any general, primary, or runoff election period for the office of United States Senator in excess of $10,000 shall report to the Commission as provided in this subsection.

"(B) If 2 or more persons, in cooperation, consultation, or concert with each other, make, or obligate to make, independent expenditures during any general, primary, or runoff election period for the office of United States Senator in excess of $10,000, each such person shall report to the Commission as provided in this subsection with respect to the independent expenditures so made by all such persons.

"(2) Any person referred to in paragraph (1) shall report the amount of the independent expenditures made or obligated to be made not later than 24 hours after the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated first exceeds $10,000. Thereafter, such person shall report independent expenditures not later than 24 hours after each time the additional aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated (and not yet reported under this paragraph) exceeds $10,000.

"(3) Each report under this subsection shall be filed with the Commission and the Secretary of State for the State of the election involved and shall contain—

"(A) the information required by subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii) of section 304; and

"(B) a statement under penalty of perjury by the person making the independent expenditures, or by the person incurring the obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, that identifies the candidate whom the independent expenditures are actually intended to help elect or defeat.

"(4)(A) A person may file a complaint with the Commission if such person believes the statement under paragraph (3)(B) is false or incorrect.

"(B) The Commission, not later than 3 days after the filing of a complaint under subparagraph (A), shall make a determination with respect to such complaint.

"(5) The Commission shall, within 24 hours of receipt of a report under this subsection, notify each eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2)) in the election involved about such report.

"(6) The Commission may make its own determination that a person has made, or has incurred obligations to make, independent expenditures with respect to any election for the United States Senate which in the aggregate exceed the applicable amounts under paragraph (2). The Commission shall notify each eligible candidate in such election of such determination within 24 hours of making it.

"(7) At the same time as a candidate is notified under paragraph (5) or (6) with respect to expenditures during a general election period, the Commission shall, pursuant to subsection (e), certify to the Secretary of the Treasury eligibility to receive benefits under section 504(a).

"(c) Reports on Personal Funds.—(1) Any candidate for the United States Senate who during the election cycle expends more than $250,000 during the election cycle from his personal funds, the funds of his immediate family, and personal loans incurred by the candidate and the candidate's immediate family shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such expenditures have been made or loans incurred.

"(2) The Commission within 24 hours after a report has been filed under paragraph (1) shall notify each eligible candidate in the election involved about each such report.

"(3) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements under this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate for the United States Senate has made expenditures in excess of the amount under paragraph (1). The Commission within 24 hours after making such determination shall notify each eligible candidate in the general election involved about each such determination.

"(d) Candidates for Other Offices.—(1) Each individual—

"(A) who becomes a candidate for the office of United States Senator;

"(B) who, during the election cycle for such office, held any other Federal, State, or local office or was a candidate for such other office; and

"(C) who expended any amount during such election cycle before becoming a candidate for the office of United States Senator which would have been treated as an expenditure if such individual had been such a candidate, including amounts for activities to promote the image or name recognition of such individual, shall, within 7 days of becoming a candidate for the office of United States Senator, report to the Commission the amount and nature of such expenditures.

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any expenditures in connection with a Federal, State, or local election which has been held before the individual becomes a candidate the office of United States Senator.

"(3) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable, make a determination as to whether the amounts included in the report under paragraph (1) were made for purposes of influencing the election of the individual to the office of United States Senator.

"(e) Certifications.—Notwithstanding section 505(a), the certification required by this section shall be made by the Commission on the basis of reports filed with such Commission in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or on the basis of such Commission's own investigation or determination.

"(f) Copies of Reports.—The Commission shall transmit a copy of any report received under this section to the Secretary of the Senate within 2 working days of receipt of such report.

"(g) Definitions.—For purposes of this section, any term used in this section which is used in title V shall have the same meaning as when used in title V."

SEC. 107. OTHER DEFINITIONS.

(a) Election Cycle Defined.—Section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(20) The term 'election cycle' means—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or the authorized committees of a candidate, the term beginning on the day after the date of the most recent general election for the specific office or seat which such candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next general election for such office or seat; or

"(B) for all other persons, the term beginning on the first day following the date of the last general election and ending on the date of the next general election."

(b) Identification.—Section 301(13) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(13)) is amended by striking out "mailing address" and inserting in lieu thereof "permanent residence address".

TITLE II—EXPENDITURES AND CONTRIBUTIONS

Subtitle A—Independent Expenditures

SEC. 201. COOPERATIVE EXPENDITURES NOT TREATED AS INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES.

(a) Treatment of Cooperative Expenditures.—(1) Paragraph (17) of section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(17)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'independent expenditure' shall not include any cooperative expenditure."

(2) Paragraph (9) of section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(9)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) A cooperative expenditure shall be treated as an expenditure made by the candidate on whose behalf, or for whose benefit, the expenditure was made."

(3) Paragraph (8) of section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) A cooperative expenditure shall be treated as a contribution from the person making the expenditure to the candidate on whose behalf, or for whose benefit, the expenditure was made."

(b) Cooperative Expenditure Defined.—Section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431), as amended by section 107(a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(21)(A) The term 'cooperative expenditure' means any expenditure which is made—

"(i) with the cooperation of, or in consultation with, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; or

"(ii) in concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate.

"(B) The term 'cooperative expenditure' includes an expenditure if—

"(i) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between the candidate or the candidate's agent and the person making the expenditure;

"(ii) in the same election cycle, the person making the expenditure is or has been—

"(I) authorized to raise or expend funds on behalf of the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees; or

"(II) serving as a member, employee, or agent of the candidate's authorized committees in an executive or policy-making position; or

"(iii) the person making the expenditure has advised or counseled the candidate or the candidate's agents at any time on the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any advice relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(iv) the person making the expenditure retains the professional services of any individual or other person also providing those services in the same election cycle to the candidate in connection with the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, including any services relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(v) the person making the expenditure has consulted at any time during the same election cycle about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, with—

"(I) any officer, director, employee or agent of a party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions, pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or

"(II) any person whose professional services have been retained by a political party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or

"(vi) the expenditure is based on information provided to the person making the expenditure directly or indirectly by the candidate or the candidate's agents about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs, provided that the candidate or the candidate's agent is aware that the other person has made or is planning to make expenditures expressly advocating the candidate's election.

For purposes of this subparagraph, the person making the expenditure shall include any officer, director, employee, or agent of such person.

"(C) The term 'cooperative expenditure' includes an expenditure if such expenditure—

"(i) is made on behalf of, or for the benefit of, a candidate or authorized committee by a political committee that is established, administered, controlled, or financially supported, directly or indirectly, by a connected organization that is required to register, or pays for the services of a person who is required to register, under section 308 of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 267) or the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611 et seq.); or

"(ii) is made on behalf of, or for the benefit of, a candidate or authorized committee by a political committee that has made a contribution to the candidate or authorized committee."

SEC. 202. EQUAL BROADCAST TIME.

Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) If a licensee permits any person who is a legally qualified candidate for public office to use a broadcasting station other than any use required to be provided under paragraph (2), the licensee shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of the broadcasting station.

"(2)(A) A person who reserves broadcast time the payment for which would constitute an independent expenditure within the meaning of section 301(17) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(17)) shall—

"(i) inform the licensee that payment for the broadcast time will constitute an independent expenditure;

"(ii) inform the licensee of the names of all candidates for the office to which the proposed broadcast relates; and

"(iii) provide the licensee a copy of the statement described in section 304A(b)(3)(B) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(d)(3)(B)).

"(B) A licensee who is informed as described in subparagraph (A) shall—

"(i) if any of the candidates described in subparagraph (A)(ii) has provided the licensee the name and address of a person to whom notification under this subparagraph is to be given—

"(I) notify such person of the proposed making of the independent expenditure; and

"(II) allow any such candidate (other than a candidate for whose benefit the independent expenditure is made) to purchase the same amount of broadcast time immediately after the broadcast time paid for by the independent expenditure; and

"(ii) in the case of an opponent of a candidate for whose benefit the independent expenditure is made who certifies to the licensee that the opponent is eligible to have the cost of response broadcast time paid out of the Federal Election Campaign Fund pursuant to section 504(a)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, afford the opponent such broadcast time without requiring payment in advance and at the cost specified in subsection (b)."

"(3) A licensee shall have no power of censorship over the material broadcast under this section.

"(4) Except as provided in paragraph (2), no obligation is imposed under this subsection upon any licensee to allow the use of its station by any candidate.

"(5)(A) Appearance by a legally qualified candidate on a—

"(i) bona fide newscast;

"(ii) bona fide news interview;

"(iii) bona fide news documentary (if the appearance of the candidate is incidental to the presentation of the subject or subjects covered by the news documentary); or

"(iv) on-the-spot coverage of bona fide news events (including political conventions and activities incidental thereto), shall not be deemed to be use of a broadcasting station within the meaning of this subsection.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall be construed as relieving broadcasters, in connection with the presentation of newscasts, news interviews, news documentaries, and on-the-spot coverage of news events, from their obligation under this Act to operate in the public interest and to afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance.

"(6)(A) A licensee that endorses a candidate for Federal office in an editorial shall, within the time stated in subparagraph (B), provide to all other candidates for election to the same office—

"(i) notice of the date and time of broadcast of the editorial;

"(ii) a taped or printed copy of the editorial; and

"(iii) a reasonable opportunity to broadcast a response using the licensee's facilities.

"(B) In the case of an editorial described in subparagraph (A) that—

"(i) is first broadcast 72 hours or more prior to the date of a primary, runoff, or general election, the notice and copy described in subparagraph (A) (i) and (ii) shall be provided not later than 24 hours after the time of the first broadcast of the editorial, and

"(ii) is first broadcast less than 72 hours before the date of an election, the notice and copy shall be provided at a time prior to the first broadcast that will be sufficient to enable candidates a reasonable opportunity to prepare and broadcast a response."

SEC. 203. ATTRIBUTION OF COMMUNICATIONS.

Section 318(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441d(a)), as amended by section 308, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) A communication described in paragraph (1) that is paid for through an independent expenditure—

"(A) in the case of a television broadcast, shall include during the entire length of the communication a clearly readable video statement covering at least 25 percent of the viewing area of a television screen stating the information required in paragraph (1)(B) and, if the independent expenditure is made by a political committee, stating the name of its connected organization (if any) and the city and State in which such organization is located;

"(B) in the case of any audio broadcast (including a television broadcast), shall include an audio statement at the conclusion of the broadcast stating the information described in paragraph (1)(B) and, if the independent expenditure is made by a political committee, stating the name of its connected organization (if any) and the city and State in which such organization is located; and

"(C) in the case of a newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, mass mailing, or other type of general public political advertising, shall include a statement of—

"(i) the information required in paragraph (1)(B);

"(ii) the following sentence: "The cost of presenting this communication is not subject to any campaign contribution limits."; and

"(iii) the name of the person who paid for the communication including, in the case of a political committee, the names of its president and its treasurer, and the name of its connected organization (if any) and the city and State in which located."

Subtitle B—Expenditures

PART I—PERSONAL LOANS; CREDIT

SEC. 211. PERSONAL CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS.

Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) LIMITATIONS ON PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES.—(1) If a candidate or a member of the candidate's immediate family made any loans to the candidate or to the candidate's authorized committees during any election cycle, no contributions after the date of the general election for such election cycle may be used to repay such loans.

"(2) No contribution by a candidate or member of the candidate's immediate family (as defined in section 501(6)) may be returned to the candidate or member other than as part of a pro rata distribution of excess contributions to all contributors."

SEC. 212. EXTENSIONS OF CREDIT.

Section 301(8)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (i);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting "; or"; and

(3) by inserting at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(iii) with respect to a candidate for the office of United States Senator and the candidate's authorized committees, any extension of credit for goods or services relating to advertising on broadcasting stations, in newspapers or magazines, or by mass mailings (including mass mail fund solicitations), or relating to other similar types of general public political advertising, if such extension of credit is—

"(I) in an amount of more than $1,000; and

"(II) for a period greater than the period (not in excess of 60 days) for which credit is generally extended in the normal course of business after the date on which such goods or services are furnished (the date of the mailing in the case of advertising by a mass mailing)."

PART II—PROVISIONS RELATING TO SOFT MONEY OF POLITICAL PARTIES

SEC. 215. LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS TO STATE POLITICAL PARTY COMMITTEES.

(a) INDIVIDUAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO STATE PARTY.—Paragraph (1) of section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(1)) is amended by striking "or" at the end of subparagraph (B), by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (D), and by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) to the political committee designated by a State committee of a political party in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $20,000; or".

(b) MULTICANDIDATE COMMITTEE CONTRIBUTIONS TO STATE PARTY.—Paragraph (2) of section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2)) is amended by striking "or" at the end of subparagraph (B), by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (D), and by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) to the political committee designated by a State committee of a political party in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $15,000; or".

(c) INCREASE IN OVERALL LIMIT.—Paragraph (3) of section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(3)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The limitation under this paragraph shall be increased (but not by more than $5,000) by the amount of contributions made by an individual during a calendar year to political committees designated by State committees of a political party for purposes of paragraphs (1)(C) and (2)(C)."

SEC. 216. PROVISIONS RELATING TO NATIONAL, STATE, AND LOCAL PARTY COMMITTEES.

(a) EXPENDITURES BY STATE COMMITTEES IN CONNECTION WITH PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGNS.—Section 315(d) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) A State committee of a political party, including subordinate committees of that State committee, shall not make expenditures for activities described in section 325(b) (1) and (2) with respect to the general election campaign of a candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which, in the aggregate, exceed an amount equal to 4 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State, as certified under subsection (e)."

(b) CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE EXCEPTIONS.—(1) Section 301(8)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)(B)) is amended—

(A) in clause (v) by striking the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting "or with respect to a mass mailing of such a listing;";

(B) in clause (xi)—

(i) by striking "direct mail" and inserting "mass mailing"; and

(ii) by striking the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting "and are not made from contributions designated to be spent on behalf of a particular candidate or particular candidates;"; and

(C) by repealing clauses (x) and (xii).

(2) Section 301(9)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(9)(B)) is amended—

(A) in clause (iv) by striking the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting "or with respect to a mass mailing of such a listing;"; and

(B) by repealing clauses (viii) and (ix).

(c) SOFT MONEY OF COMMITTEES OF POLITICAL PARTIES.—(1) Title III of FECA, as amended by section 102, is amended by inserting after section 324 the following new section:

"POLITICAL PARTY COMMITTEES

"SEC. 325. (a) Any amount solicited, received, or expended directly or indirectly by a national, State, district, or local committee of a political party (including any subordinate committee) with respect to an activity which, in whole or in part, is in connection with an election to Federal office shall be subject in its entirety to the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) Any activity which is solely for the purpose of influencing an election for Federal office is in connection with an election for Federal office.

"(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3), any of the following activities during a Federal election period shall be treated as in connection with an election for Federal office:

"(A) Voter registration and get-out-the-vote activities.

"(B) Campaign activities, including broadcasting, newspaper, magazine, billboard, mass mail, and newsletter communications, and similar kinds of communications or public advertising that—

"(i) are generic campaign activities; or

"(ii) identify a Federal candidate regardless of whether a State or local candidate is also identified.

"(C) The preparation and dissemination of campaign materials that are part of a generic campaign activity or that identify a Federal candidate, regardless of whether a State or local candidate is also identified.

"(D) Maintenance of voter files.

"(E) Any other activity affecting (in whole or in part) an election for Federal office.

"(3) The following shall not be treated as in connection with a Federal election:

"(A) Any amount described in section 301(8)(B)(viii).

"(B) Any amount contributed to a candidate for other than Federal office.

"(C) Any amount received or expended in connection with a State or local political convention.

"(D) Campaign activities, including broadcasting, newspaper, magazine, billboard, mass mail, and newsletter communications, and similar kinds of communications or public advertising that are exclusively on behalf of State or local candidates and are not activities described in paragraph (2)(A).

"(E) Administrative expenses of a State or local committee of a political party, including expenses for—

"(i) overhead;

"(ii) staff (other than individuals devoting a substantial portion of their activities to elections for Federal office);

"(iii) meetings; and

"(iv) conducting party elections or caucuses.

"(F) Research pertaining solely to State and local candidates and issues.

"(G) Maintenance of voter files other than during a Federal election period.

"(H) Activities described in paragraph (2)(A) which are conducted other than during a Federal election period.

"(I) Any other activity which is solely for the purpose of influencing, and which solely affects, an election for non-Federal office.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'Federal election period' means the period—

"(A) beginning on the date which is 60 days before the primary election for any regularly scheduled general election for Federal office; and

"(B) ending on the date of the general election.

"(c) TRANSFERS BETWEEN COMMITTEES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the limitations on contributions contained in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 315(a) shall apply to transfers between and among political committees described in subsection (a).

"(2)(A) A national committee may not solicit or accept contributions not subject to the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act.

"(B) Subparagraph (A) and paragraph (1) shall not apply to contributions that—

"(i) are to be transferred to a State committee for use directly for activities described in subsection (b)(3); or

"(ii) are to be used by the committee primarily to support such activities."

(2) Section 315(d) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)), as amended by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) The national committee of a political party, the congressional campaign committees of a political party, and a State or local committee of a political party, including a subordinate committee of any of the preceding committees, shall not make expenditures during any calendar year for activities described in section 325(b) (1) and (2) with respect to such State which, in the aggregate, exceed an amount equal to 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)). This paragraph shall not authorize a committee to make expenditures to which paragraph (3) or (4) applies in excess of the limit applicable to such expenditures under paragraph (3) or (4). No adjustment to the limitation under this paragraph shall be made under subsection (c) before 1992 and the base period for purposes of any such adjustment shall be 1990."

(3) Paragraph (4) of section 315(a) (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(4)) is amended by striking the first sentence thereof.

(d) GENERIC ACTIVITIES.—Section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431), as amended by section 201(b), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(22) The term 'generic campaign activity' means a campaign activity the preponderant purpose or effect of which is to promote a political party rather than any particular Federal or non-Federal candidate."

SEC. 217. RESTRICTIONS ON FUNDRAISING BY CANDIDATES AND OFFICEHOLDERS.

(a) STATE FUNDRAISING ACTIVITIES.—Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by section 211, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) LIMITATIONS ON FUNDRAISING ACTIVITIES OF FEDERAL CANDIDATES AND OFFICEHOLDERS.—(1) For purposes of this Act, a candidate for Federal office (or an individual holding Federal office) may not solicit funds to, or receive funds on behalf of, any Federal or non-Federal candidate or political committee—

"(A) which are to be expended in connection with any election for Federal office unless such funds are subject to the limitations, prohibitions, and requirements of this Act; or

"(B) which are to be expended in connection with any election for other than Federal office unless such funds are not in excess of amounts permitted with respect to Federal candidates and political committees under this Act, or are not from sources prohibited by this Act with respect to elections to Federal office.

"(2) The appearance or participation by a candidate or individual in any activity (including fundraising) conducted by a committee of a political party or a candidate for other than Federal office shall not be treated as a solicitation for purposes of paragraph (1) if—

"(A) such appearance or participation is otherwise permitted by law; and

"(B) such candidate or individual does not solicit or receive, or make expenditures from, any funds resulting from such activity.

"(3) Paragraph (1) shall not apply to the solicitation or receipt of funds, or disbursements, by an individual who is a candidate for other than Federal office if such activity is permitted under State law."

(b) TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS.—Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), if an individual—

"(A) established, maintains, or controls any organization described in section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and

"(B) is a candidate for, or holds, Federal office at any time during any calendar year, such individual may not solicit contributions to, or accept contributions on behalf of, such organization from any person during such calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

"(2) If during any period an individual is a candidate for, or holds, Federal office, such individual may not during such period solicit contributions to, or on behalf of, any organization which is described in section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 if a significant portion of the activities of such organization include voter registration or get-out-the-vote campaigns."

SEC. 218. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Section 304 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) POLITICAL COMMITTEES.—(1) The national committee of a political party and any congressional campaign committee, and any subordinate committee of either, shall report all receipts and disbursements during the reporting period, whether or not in connection with an election for Federal office.

"(2) A political committee (not described in paragraph (1)) to which section 325 applies shall report all receipts and disbursements in connection with a Federal election (as determined under section 325).

"(3) Any political committee to which section 325 applies shall include in its report under paragraph (1) or (2) the amount of any transfer described in section 325(c) and the reason for the transfer.

"(4) Any political committee to which paragraph (1) or (2) does not apply shall report any receipts or disbursements which are used in connection with a Federal election (as determined by the Commission).

"(5) If any receipt or disbursement to which this subsection applies exceeds $200, the political committee shall include identification of the person from whom, or to whom, such receipt or disbursement was made.

"(6) Reports required to be filed by this subsection shall be filed for the same time periods required for political committees under subsection (a)."

(b) REPORT OF EXEMPT CONTRIBUTIONS.—Section 301(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(8)), as amended by section 201, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(D) The exclusions provided in subparagraphs (v) and (viii) of subparagraph (B) shall not apply for purposes of any requirement to report contributions under this Act, and all such contributions in excess of $200 shall be reported."

(c) REPORTING OF EXEMPT EXPENDITURES.—Section 301(9) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(9)), as amended by section 201, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(D) The exclusions provided in subparagraph (iv) of subparagraph (B) shall not apply for purposes of any requirement to report expenditures under this Act, and all such expenditures in excess of $200 shall be reported."

(d) CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES.—Section 301(4) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(4)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"For purposes of this paragraph, the receipt of contributions or the making of, or obligating to make, expenditures shall be determined by the Commission on the basis of facts and circumstances, in whatever combination, demonstrating a purpose of influencing any election for Federal office, including, but not limited to, the representations made by any person soliciting funds about their intended uses; the identification by name of individuals who are candidates for Federal office or of any political party, in general public political advertising; and the proximity to any primary, runoff, or general election of general public political advertising designed or reasonably calculated to influence voter choice in that election."

(e) REPORTS BY STATE COMMITTEES.—Section 304 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434), as amended by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) FILING OF STATE REPORTS.—In lieu of any report required to be filed by this Act, the Commission may allow a State committee of a political party to file with the Commission a report required to be filed under State law if the Commission determines such reports contain substantially the same information."

(f) REPORTS BY LARGE CONTRIBUTORS.—Section 304 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434), as amended by subsection (e), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) REPORTS BY LARGE CONTRIBUTORS.—(1) Any individual who makes contributions subject to the limitations of section 315(a)—

"(A) shall report to the Commission within 7 days after such contributor makes contributions aggregating $10,000 or more during any calendar year; and

"(B) thereafter, shall report to the Commission within 7 days after each time such contributor makes contributions (not yet reported) aggregating $5,000 or more.

Any report shall include identification of the contributor, the name of the candidate or committee to whom the contributions were made, and the amount of the contributions.

"(2) Any candidate for Federal office, any authorized committee of a candidate, or any political committee soliciting contributions subject to the limitations of section 315(a) shall include with such solicitation notice of—

"(A) the requirement to report under paragraph (1); and

"(B) the aggregate limitation on such contributions under section 315(a)(3)."

Subtitle C—Contributions

SEC. 221. LIMITS ON CONTRIBUTIONS BY CERTAIN POLITICAL COMMITTEES.

(a) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF CONTRIBUTIONS THAT MAY BE ACCEPTED.—Section 315(d) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)), as amended by section 216, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by striking "(2) and (3)" and inserting "(2), (3), (6), and (7)"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) A congressional campaign committee of a political party (including any subordinate committee thereof) shall not accept, during an election cycle, contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds which, in the aggregate, exceed 30 percent of the total expenditures which such committee may make pursuant to section 315(d)(3) during that election cycle.

"(7) A national committee of a political party (including any subordinate committee thereof) shall not accept, during an election cycle, contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds which, in the aggregate, exceed an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States, as certified under subsection (e).

"(8)(A)(i) Any expenditure made by a national or State committee of a political party, a congressional campaign committee, or any subordinate committee of the preceding committees, for general public political advertising which clearly identifies a candidate for Federal office by name shall be subject to the limitations of paragraphs (1) and (2).

"(ii) Clause (i) shall not apply to expenditures for mass mailings designed primarily for fundraising purposes which make only incidental reference to any one or more Federal candidates.

"(B) For purposes of paragraph (3), any expenditure by a committee described in subparagraph (A) for any solicitation of contributions which clearly identifies any candidate on whose behalf such contributions are being solicited shall be treated for purposes of this paragraph as an expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of such candidate, except that if more than 1 candidate is identified, such expenditure shall be allocated on a pro rata basis among such candidates."

"(23) The term 'congressional campaign committee' means the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the National Republican Senatorial Committee, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, and the National Republican Congressional Committee."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to elections (and the election cycles relating thereto) occurring after December 31, 1992.

(2) In applying the amendments made by this section, there shall not be taken into account—

(A) contributions made or received on or before the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(B) contributions made to, or received by, a candidate after such date, to the extent such contributions are not greater than the excess (if any) of—

(i) such contributions received by any opponent of the candidate on or before such date, over

(ii) such contributions received by the candidate on or before such date.

SEC. 222. CONTRIBUTIONS THROUGH INTERMEDIARIES AND CONDUITS.

Section 315(a)(8) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(8)) is amended to read as follows:

"(8) For the purposes of this subsection—

"(A) Contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions that are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to a candidate, shall be treated as contributions from the person to the candidate.

"(B) Contributions made directly or indirectly by a person to or on behalf of a particular candidate through an intermediary or conduit, including contributions made or arranged to be made by an intermediary or conduit, shall be treated as contributions from the intermediary or conduit to the candidate if—

"(i) the contributions made through the intermediary or conduit are in the form of a check or other negotiable instrument made payable to the conduit or intermediary rather than the intended recipient; or

"(ii) the conduit or intermediary is—

"(I) a political committee other than an authorized committee;

"(II) an officer, employee, or agent of such a political committee; or

"(III) a person required to register under section 308 of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 267) or the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611 et seq.); or

"(IV) an organization prohibited from making contributions under section 316, or an officer, employee, or agent of such an organization acting on the organization's behalf.

"(C) For purposes of this section—

"(i) the term 'contributions made or arranged to be made' includes—

"(I) contributions delivered to a particular candidate or the candidate's authorized committee or agent; and

"(II) contributions directly or indirectly arranged to be made to a particular candidate or the candidate's authorized committee or agent, including contributions arranged to be made in a manner that identifies directly or indirectly to the candidate or authorized committee or agent the person who arranged the making of the contributions or the person on whose behalf such person was acting; and

"(ii) the term 'acting on the organization's behalf' includes the following activities by an officer, employee or agent of a person described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(IV):

"(I) Soliciting or directly or indirectly arranging the making of a contribution to a particular candidate in the name of, or by using the name of, such a person.

"(II) Soliciting or directly or indirectly arranging the making of a contribution to a particular candidate using other than incidental resources of such a person.

"(III) Soliciting contributions for a particular candidate by substantially directing the solicitations to other officers, employees, or agents of such a person.

"(D) Nothing in this paragraph shall prohibit—

"(i) bona fide joint fundraising efforts conducted solely for the purpose of sponsorship of a fundraising reception, dinner, or other similar event, in accordance with rules prescribed by the Commission, by—

"(I) 2 or more candidates;

"(II) 2 or more national, State, or local committees of a political party within the meaning of section 301(4) acting on their own behalf; or

"(III) a special committee formed by 2 or more candidates, or a candidate and a national, State, or local committee of a political party acting on their own behalf; or

"(ii) fundraising efforts for the benefit of a candidate that are conducted by another candidate.

When a contribution is made to a candidate through an intermediary or conduit, the intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of the contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient."

SEC. 223. CONTRIBUTIONS BY DEPENDENTS NOT OF VOTING AGE.

Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by section 217, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l) For purposes of this section, any contribution by an individual who—

"(1) is a dependent of another individual; and

"(2) has not, as of the time of such contribution, attained the legal age for voting for elections to Federal office in the State in which such individual resides, shall be treated as having been made by such other individual. If such individual is the dependent of another individual and such other individual's spouse, the contribution shall be allocated among such individuals in the manner determined by them."

Subtitle D—Reporting Requirements

SEC. 231. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) PERIODS FOR REPORTING.—(1) Section 304(b)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(2)) is amended by striking "for the reporting period and calendar year," and inserting "for the reporting period and calendar year in the case of committees other than authorized committees of a candidate, and for the reporting period and election cycle in the case of authorized committees of candidates,".

(2) Section 304(b)(4) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(4)) is amended by striking out "for the reporting period and calendar year," and inserting in lieu thereof "for the reporting period and calendar year in the case of committees other than authorized committees of a candidate, and for the reporting period and election cycle in the case of authorized committees of candidates,".

(3) Section 304(b)(3) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(3)) is amended by inserting "(within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees)" after "calendar year" in subparagraphs (A), (F), and (G) thereof.

(4) Section 304(b)(5)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by inserting after "(within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees)" after "calendar year".

(5) Section 304(b)(6)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(6)(A)) is amended by striking out "calendar year" and inserting in lieu thereof "election cycle".

(b) PERSONAL AND CONSULTING SERVICES.—Section 304(b)(5)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by adding before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", except that if a person to whom an expenditure is made is merely providing personal or consulting services and is in turn making expenditures to other persons (not including employees) who provide goods or services to the candidate or his authorized committees, the name and address of such other person, together with the date, amount and purpose of such expenditure shall also be disclosed".

TITLE III—FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

SEC. 301. USE OF CANDIDATES' NAMES.

Section 302(e)(4) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 432(e)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4)(A) The name of each authorized committee shall include the name of the candidate who authorized the committee under paragraph (1).

"(B) A political committee that is not an authorized committee shall not include the name of any candidate in its name in such a context as to suggest that the committee is an authorized committee of the candidate or that the use of the candidate's name has been authorized by the candidate."

SEC. 302. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) OPTION TO FILE MONTHLY REPORTS.—Section 304(a)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A) by striking "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in subparagraph (B) by striking the period at the end thereof and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by inserting the following new subparagraph at the end thereof:

"(C) in lieu of the reports required by subparagraphs (A) and (B), the treasurer may file monthly reports in all calendar years, which shall be filed no later than the 15th day after the last day of the month and shall be complete as of the last day of the month, except that, in lieu of filing the reports otherwise due in November and December of any year in which a regularly scheduled general election is held, a pre-general election report shall be filed in accordance with subparagraph (A)(i), a post-general election report shall be filed in accordance with subparagraph (A)(ii), and a year end report shall be filed no later than January 31 of the following calendar year."

(b) FILING DATE.—Section 304(a)(4)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(4)(B)) is amended by striking "20th" and inserting "15th".

SEC. 303. PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE GENERAL COUNSEL OF THE COMMISSION.

(a) ACTION BY THE COMMISSION THROUGH ITS GENERAL COUNSEL.—(1) Section 306(c) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437c(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), all decisions of the Commission with respect to the exercise of its duties and powers under this Act or under chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be made by the affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission.

"(2) On questions relating to—

"(A) the exercise of the Commission's authority under sections 307(a) (3) and (4);

"(B) a determination under section 309(a)(2) concerning whether there is reason to believe that a person may have committed or may be about to commit a violation of law; and

"(C) a determination to initiate or proceed with an investigation, the general counsel of the Commission shall make a recommendation for action by the Commission, and such action shall be taken upon the affirmative vote of 3 members of the Commission.

"(3) A member of the Commission may not delegate to any person the member's power to vote or any other decisionmaking authority or duty vested in the Commission."

(2) Section 309(a)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(2)) is amended by striking ", by an affirmative vote of 4 of its members,".

(b) VACANCY IN THE OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL.—Section 306(f) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437c(f)) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) In the event of a vacancy in the office of general counsel, the next highest ranking enforcement official in the general counsel's office shall serve as acting general counsel with full powers of the general counsel until a successor is appointed."

(c) PAY OF THE GENERAL COUNSEL.—Section 306(f)(1) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437c(f)(1)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "and the general counsel" after "staff director" in the second sentence thereof; and

(2) by striking the third sentence thereof.

SEC. 304. RETENTION OF FEES BY THE COMMISSION.

Section 306 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437c) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) Fees collected by the Commission for copying and certification of records and provision of other materials to the public shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, but shall be kept in a separate account and shall be available to the Commission, without necessity of an appropriation, for use in carrying out this Act."

SEC. 305. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) BASIS FOR ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDING.—Section 309(a)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(2)) is amended by striking "it has reason to believe that a person has committed, or is about to commit" and inserting "facts have been alleged or ascertained that, if true, give reason to believe that a person may have committed, or may be about to commit".

(b) AUTHORITY TO SEEK INJUNCTION.—(1) Section 309(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(13)(A) If, at any time in a proceeding described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4), the Commission believes that—

"(i) there is a substantial likelihood that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is occurring or is about to occur;

"(ii) the failure to act expeditiously will result in irreparable harm to a party affected by the potential violation;

"(iii) expeditious action will not cause undue harm or prejudice to the interests of others; and

"(iv) the public interest would be best served by the issuance of an injunction, the Commission may initiate a civil action for a temporary restraining order or a temporary injunction pending the outcome of the proceedings described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4).

"(B) An action under subparagraph (A) shall be brought in the United States district court for the district in which the defendant resides, transacts business, or may be found."

(2) Section 309(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (7) by striking "(5) or (6)" and inserting "(5), (6), or (13)"; and

(B) in paragraph (11) by striking "(6)" and inserting "(6) or (13)".

SEC. 306. PENALTIES.

(a) PENALTIES PRESCRIBED IN CONCILIATION AGREEMENTS.—(1) Section 309(a)(5)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(5)(A)) is amended by striking "which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation" and inserting "which is—

"(i) not less than 50 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation (or such lesser amount as the Commission provides if necessary to ensure that the penalty is not unjustly disproportionate to the violation); and

"(ii) not greater than all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation".

(2) Section 309(a)(5)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(5)(B)) is amended by striking "which does not exceed the greater of $10,000 or an amount equal to 200 percent of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation" and inserting "which is—

"(i) not less than all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation; and

"(ii) not greater than 150 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation".

(b) PENALTIES WHEN VIOLATIONS ARE ADJUDICATED IN COURT.—(1) Section 309(a)(6)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(6)(A)) is amended by striking all that follows "appropriate order" and inserting ", including an order for a civil penalty in the amount determined under subparagraph (A) or (B) in the district court of the United States for the district in which the defendant resides, transacts business, or may be found."

(2) Section 309(a)(6)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(6)(B)) is amended by striking all that follows "other order" and inserting ", including an order for a civil penalty which is—

"(i) not less than all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation; and

"(ii) not greater than 200 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has committed, or is about to commit (if the relief sought is a permanent or temporary injunction or a restraining order), a violation of this Act or chapter 95 of chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986."

(3) Section 309(a)(6)(C) of FECA (29 U.S.C. 437g(6)(C)) is amended by striking "a civil penalty" and all that follows and inserting "a civil penalty which is—

"(i) not less than 200 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation; and

"(ii) not greater than 250 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation."

(c) TIME PERIODS FOR CONCILIATION.—Section 309(a)(4)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(4)(A)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i) by striking "30 days" and inserting "15 days";

(2) in clause (i) by striking "90 days" and inserting "60 days"; and

(3) in clause (ii) by striking "at least 15 days" and inserting "no more than 30 days".

SEC. 307. RANDOM AUDITS.

Section 311(b) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 438(b)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" before "The Commission"; and

(2) by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), and subject to the provisions of section 507, the Commission may from time to time conduct random audits and investigations to ensure voluntary compliance with this Act. The subjects of such audits and investigations shall be selected on the basis of criteria established by vote of at least 4 members of the Commission to ensure impartiality in the selection process."

SEC. 308. ATTRIBUTION OF COMMUNICATIONS.

Section 318(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441d(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1)(A) Except as permitted under paragraph (2), if—

"(i) any person makes an expenditure or independent expenditure for the purpose of financing a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, or solicits a contribution by a communication through a broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, mass mailing, or other type of general public political advertising; or

"(ii) an authorized committee registered under section 303 makes a communication of any kind, the requirements of subparagraph (B) shall be met with respect to such communication.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the requirements of this subparagraph are as follows:

"(i) In the case of a broadcast paid for by the candidate, an authorized committee of the candidate, any agent of either, or any other person authorized to make such payment by such candidate or committee, the broadcast shall include a full screen personal appearance by the candidate (or in the case of a radio broadcast, an audio statement by the candidate) in which the candidate states:

"(I) 'I am a candidate for (the office the candidate is seeking) and I have approved the contents of this broadcast'; and

"(II) that the broadcast has been paid for by the candidate, the candidate's authorized committee, or the agent of either, or that the broadcast has been paid for by such other person and authorized by such candidate or committee.

"(ii) In the case of any other communication paid for and authorized by a candidate, an authorized committee of a candidate, or its agents, or any other person authorized by such candidate or committee, the communication shall clearly state that the communication has been paid for by such candidate or authorized committee or by such other person and authorized by such candidate or authorized committee.

"(iii) If the communication is paid for by an independent expenditure, the communication shall clearly state the name of the person who paid for the communication and state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate or candidate's authorized committee.

"(2) The Commission may waive the requirements of paragraph (1) in circumstances in which the inclusion of the required information in a communication would be impracticable."

SEC. 309. FRAUDULENT SOLICITATION OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

Section 322 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441h) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "No"; and

(2) by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) No person shall—

"(1) make a fraudulent misrepresentation that the person is authorized to solicit or accept a contribution to a candidate or political committee; or

"(2) solicit or accept a contribution to a candidate or political committee unless the person—

"(A) intends to, and does, pay over to the candidate or political committee any contribution received; and

"(B) inform the candidate or political committee of the name of the contributor."

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 401. RESTRICTION OF CONTROL OF CERTAIN TYPES OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES BY INCUMBENTS IN OR CANDIDATES FOR FEDERAL OFFICE.

Section 302 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) An incumbent in or candidate for Federal office may not establish, maintain, or control a political committee, other than an authorized committee of the candidate or a committee of a political party."

SEC. 402. POLLING DATA CONTRIBUTED TO A SENATORIAL CANDIDATE.

Section 301(8) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)), as amended by section 218, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) A contribution of polling data to a candidate for the office of United States Senator shall be valued at the fair market value of the data on the date the poll was completed, depreciated at a rate not more than 1 percent per day from such date to the date on which the contribution was made."

SEC. 403. MASS MAILINGS.

Section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431), as amended by section 221(c), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(24) The term 'mass mailing' means newsletters and similar mailings of more than 100 pieces in which the content of the matter mailed is substantially identical, excluding—

"(A) mailings made in direct response to communications from persons to whom the matter is mailed;

"(B) mailings to Federal, State, or local government officials; and

"(C) news releases to the communications media."

SEC. 404. EXTENSION OF TIME PERIOD WHEN FRANKED MASS MAILINGS ARE PROHIBITED.

Section 3210(a)(6) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by striking clause (i) and inserting the following:

"(i) if the mass mailing is mailed during the calendar year of any primary or general election (whether regular or runoff) in which the Member is a candidate for reelection; or"; and

(B) in clause (ii)(II) by striking "fewer than 60 days immediately before the date" and inserting "during the year"; and

(2) in subparagraph (C) by striking "fewer than 60 days immediately before the date" and inserting "during the year".

SEC. 405. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the amendments made by, and the provisions of, this Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act but shall not apply with respect to activities in connection with any election occurring before January 1, 1993.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the Senate Elections Ethics Act of 1991 also be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF SENATE ELECTION ETHICS ACT OF 1991

VOLUNTARY FLEXIBLE SPENDING LIMITS

A system of voluntary flexible spending limits would be established, based on state voting age population, ranging from $950,000 to $5,500,000 for Senate general election campaigns. Primary spending limits amounting to 67% of the general election limit up to $2,750,000 would be established. The general election limit could be increased by up to 25 percent of the spending limit to the extent of $100 contributions received from individuals residing in the candidate's State.

BENEFITS FOR ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

Candidates who raise a threshold amounting to 10% of the general election spending limit in individual contributions of $250 or less (50% in-State) and who agree to voluntarily abide by spending limits would be eligible to receive certain benefits:

A. Broadcast Vouchers: Vouchers amounting to 50% of the general election limit would be provided to purchase television advertising in segments of between one and five minutes.

B. Low Cost Mail: First class mail would be available at one quarter the regular rate for candidate mailings. Third class rates would be 2 cents lower than first class. Candidates would be permitted to spend up to 5 percent of the general election limit on such mailings.

C. Broadcast Rates: Current law lowest unit charge provisions would be modified to require broadcasters to charge eligible candidates during the general election no more than 50% of the lowest unit charge for the same amount of time for the same time of day and day of week. Eligible candidates would be entitled to the lowest unit charge during the 45 day period prior to a primary.

D. Independent Expenditures: Eligible candidates would receive public funds to respond to independent broadcast ads exceeding $10,000 from any source during the general election period.

E. Contingent Public Financing: Eligible candidates would receive additional public funding if an opposing candidate exceeds the spending limits.

PAC LIMITATIONS

Political Action Committees would be prohibited from making contributions or expenditures for the purpose of influencing elections for federal office.

SOFT MONEY

Political party committees would be prohibited from using soft money, not regulated under federal law, for any activities in connection with a federal election. Activities in connection with a federal election include get-out-the-vote activities, voter registration, generic and mixed election activities including general public advertising, and campaign materials, maintenance of voter files and other activities affecting a federal election during a federal election period. Party committee spending on mixed federal-state activities in connection with federal elections would be subject to overall limits.

State party contribution limits would be increased to the amount permitted to national parties. Frederal office holders and candidates would be prohibited from soliciting soft money contributions. The contribution/expenditure exceptions in current law that permit unlimited State party spending for "volunteer activities" that affect a federal election and GOTV for presidential elections would be repealed. State parties would be permitted to spend 4 cents per voter for presidential elections.

BUNDLING

Bundling in excess of the contribution limits would be prohibited by all political committees and lobbyists, and individuals acting on behalf of those entities or on behalf of corporations, labor unions, or trade associations.

BROADCAST RULES

A. Lowest Unit Rate: All eligible candidates would be entitled to purchase television broadcast time during a general election at 50% of the lowest unit charged for same amount of time for the same time of day and day of week. During the 45 day period prior to a primary eligible candiates would be entitled to purchase time at the lowest unit charge.

B. Candidate Accountability: All candidates would be required to appear at the end of their television advertisement conveying the message that the advertisement was paid for by the candidate.

C. Disclosure: Non-eligible candidates would be required to disclose in all advertisements that the candidate has not agreed to spending limits.

D. Vouchers: Vouchers amounting to 50 percent of the general election spending limit would be provided to eligible candidates to purchase prime time television advertisements of at least one minute but not more than five minutes. Broadcast stations would be required to make these longer time periods available to candidates.

INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES

The types of activities and relationships which are expenditures in coordination, consultation or concept with a candidate—and therefore not independent—would be more broadly defined. Under this definition, expenditures by political committees required to register as lobbyists would not be independent and would count against the contribution limit.

Primary spending limits would increase by the amount of independent expenditures intended to assist opponents of a candidate. The general election spending limit would be increased and public funds made available to eligible candidates who are the target of more than $10,000 of independent expenditures from any one source. Broadcast stations would be required to make time available immediately after the independent broadcast for the candidate to respond.

PERSONAL LOANS

Candidates agreeing to spending limits would be prohibited from spending more than $250,000 of their own funds for election to the Senate. Contributions could not be received after an election to repay personal loans of the candidate.

501(C) ORGANIZATIONS

Federal office holders and candidates would be prohibited from raising contributions from any one contributor of more than $5,000 on behalf of any 501(c) organization they establish, maintain or control. Federal office holders and candidates would also be prohibited from raising any funds for 501(c)(3) organizations organized to conduct voter registration or get-out-the-vote drives.

MISCELLANEOUS

Leadership PACs would be prohibited. Individual contributions in excess of $10,000 would have to be reported to the FEC. Dependent children below voting age would not be permitted to contribute to federal election campaigns.

FEC REFORM

With respect to preliminary matters such as decisions to investigate violations the recommendation of the General Counsel would be sustained if supported by the votes of 3 Commissioners. Provisions are included to shorten time periods of FEC action, authorize the FEC to seek court injunctions, and increase minimum penalty amounts for violations of the law.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this marks the fifth consecutive Congress that I have introduced legislation to reform the method by which Senate election campaigns are financed. And although these efforts have been unsuccessful I remain hopeful that legislation will soon be enacted. Certainly, I recognize that controversial legislation some times takes years from inception to final enactment. But eventually support builds up until we reach a point that there really is no choice but to act. That time is now.

Campaign finance reform has been much debated in the past without result. But the situation we face in this Congress is really quite different than anything we have faced in recent years. How many speechs have there been on the Senate floor over the last decade deploring the election finance system and warning ourselves that someday it would reach the point that the faith of the American people in their Congress would be severely undermined? To a far greater extent than in the past, that point has been reached and faith in this institution has been undermined.

In the last few years there has been a significant change in the way the public views this institution and the means by which we run for election. There is far greater public scrutiny of the campaign finance process. And if Members of this body are repulsed by the extent to which we must search for money to fund our campaigns, the process is even more distasteful to the American people.

They see a campaign finance process that with each election cycle is becoming ever more reliant on the endless pursuit of money. Their faith in Congress is eroding. Increasingly the American people have come to see their federal government as no longer responsive to their needs. They believe Congress acts to fulfill commitments to campaign contributors rather than to serve the interests of the people. And they believe we have created a campaign finance system that is stacked against challengers and designed especially to keep self-interested, incompetent incumbents in office forever.

I know the reality is quite different. The men and women who serve in the 102d Congress are as well educated, honest and hard working a group of legislators as have ever served this Nation. They are committed to representing the public interest and feel no more comfortable with the current system by which campaign money must be raised that does the average citizen. And although reelection rates have been high in recent elections in the House, the extent to which Senate and House membership turns over would probably surprise many Americans.

More than half of the Members of the House of Represenatives did not serve in the first year of the Reagan Presidency just a decade ago. And barely half the Senate today served in this body when Jimmy Carter was President.

But the actual integrity and quality of Members of Congress or the facts about their rate of turnover don't get through to the American people. Their perception is to the contrary. And it is understandable that many Americans do not have a favorable impression of this body or the means by which its Members are elected. They see a campaign finance system that places tremendous money demands on those who run for the Senate; a system that overwhelmingly benefits incumbents; and a system dominated by negative campaigning. Indeed, it would be extraordinary if in spite of this the American people still had a favorable impression of the Members who serve in this institution.

It is time to correct this situation.

S. 3, the legislation that is being introduced today by Senator BOREN, myself and others, is almost indentical to S. 137, the campaign finance reform legislation that passed the Senate last year by a vote of 59 to 41. Since this legislation has already garnered the support of a majority of the Senate I believe it is the best place to begin.

It includes the essential elements of true campaign finance reform: First, voluntary spending limits for Senate primary and general election campaigns; Second, limitations on political action committees; and third, prohibitions on the use of soft money to fund party activities that affect Federal elections. It also includes other restrictions on the ability of Federal office holders to raise unlimited amounts of money from interests with a role in Federal legislation.

One thing is clear: the only meaningful way to reform the Senate election finance system is to have limits on campaign spending. Anything less than that avoids the real issues and simply creates the appearance of reform.

In the 1988 Senate elections, incumbent candidates spent, on average, $4 million for their reelection campaigns. That requires raising $13,000 a week, 52 weeks a year, for 6 years. The final numbers have not year been tabulated for the 1990 elections, but the situation undoubtedly has not improved. Spending will continue to escalate still higher until reasonable limits are placed on compaign spending.

We could eliminate PAC's, reduce out-of-State individual contribution amounts, limit the participation of private organizations in the political process, impose special rules on broadcast stations, and make many other changes—but without spending limits we will not have addressed the real problem.

The legislation that is being introduced today directly addresses the problem by establishing a system of voluntary spending limits for Senate campaigns. Senate candidates will be encouraged to agree to such limits by the use of broadcast vouchers, low cost mailing and lower broadcast rates. In addition, contingent public financing will be available to candidates who agree to a spending limit if their opponent exceeds the limit. PAC's will be put out of business. Campaigns will be encouraged to directly address issues, rather than make negative attacks, by two provisions in this legislation. The first requires a candidate for the Senate to appear at the end of the ad to take responsibility for the broadcast. The second provides for broadcast vouchers to be made available to a candidate to be used to purchase air time of at least 1 minute but no more than 2 minutes.

This is a balanced approach that is fair to Democrat and Republican, challenger and incumbent alike. It is a comprehensive effort to restore Senate elections to the people by stopping the spiral of ever increasing spending and distancing wealthy individuals and political action committees from the process. This is real reform of a discredited system.

There are two signficant differences between this legislation and the leadership amendment that passed the Senate last year. First, the amount of the voucher provided to candidates to enable them to get their message across to the public is increased from 20 percent of the general election limit to 50 percent. I believe this is one of the most important elements of this legislation because it gives challengers the resources to mount an effective campaign. If we are truly serious about making Senate election campaigns competitive, candidates must be given access to television to broadcast their message.

I recognize there will be those who will be concerned that taxpayers could be asked to help pay for cleaner more competitive campaigns. But this isn't a novel idea; we have been doing it in Presidential elections since 1976. The cost of this is quite minor and like the presidential system would be financed by the voluntary checkoff on the tax return.

The second change is intended to reduce the single greatest and most rapidly escalating expense of Senate election campaigns—broadcast advertising. This legislation requires broadcast stations to provide broadcast time to eligible Senate candidates at a cost which is no more than 50 percent of the lowest unit rate charged to commercial advertisers for the same amount of time for the same time of day and day of week.

The cost of compaign advertising on television has skyrocketed in recent years—growing more than 10 fold between 1974 and 1988. In the typical competitive Senate campaign more than 50 percent of the cost is attributed to television advertising. Many candidates spend the last few weeks of the campaign in nonstop fundraising simply to turn the money over to television stations.

As the cost of television advertising has skyrocketed for Senate candidates, there has been growing interest in ways to reduce such costs. Many proposals have been made to require broadcast stations to give free time for Federal elections—either to the national parties to parcel out or to individual candidates.

The proposal in this legislation is more modest. It attempts to maintain market factors by relating the cost of election advertising to the cost of commercial time so that candidates still must pay based on the viewership of the programming. I expect this proposal will be resisted by many in the broadcast industry but campaign advertising is a very minor part of their overall advertising—less than 1 percent of total television ad revenues.

While we in Congress deplore the current campaign finance system and struggle to raise funds to mount competitive campaigns, it turns out that many in the broadcast industry have derived substantial benefits from Federal election campaigns. The Federal Communications Commission audited the industry last fall and found that 80 percent of all the television stations it audited had been overcharging political candidates for broadcast time. The law limits candidates to paying no more than the lowest rate paid by commercial advertisers for the same class of ad at the same time. However, in its audit the FCC discovered many candidates have been paying double or even triple that rate. The market has operated to force candidates to pay a premium to get the time they need before an election.

I expect most of the overcharging was inadvertent; the law is not clear and many stations have evidently been confused about what the law requires. Nevertheless, it makes sense to clean up campaigns, make it easier for challengers to reach the public, and reduce campaign costs by limiting what candidates can be charged to put their message on the publicly owned television and radio spectrums.

Although essentialy identical legislation passed the Senate last year, I recognize that many Republicans have strong differences with some of its provisions. We struggled mightily to bridge those differences last year but were unsuccessful. However, this issue is too important and I do not intend to give up until we can find a formula that can attract support from a majority of both Republicans and Democrats in the Senate.

The public is rapidly losing confidence in the Federal election campaign process. They question the integrity of this institution and its members. There is not a Member of this body who does not deplore this situation. Almost every Senator agrees that our campaign finance laws must be rewritten.

We must find a way to put aside our partisan differences to address the problems with the campagn finance system and restore the confidence of the American people in this institution. I intend to give this issue the highest priority in the 102d Congress.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, today on the first legislative day of the 102d Congress, I rise with the distinguished majority leader, the President pro tempore, and the chairman of the Rules Committee to propose a solution to the problem that is eating away at the heart of our democracy—campaign finance.

The year of 1990 will, I believe, go down in history as the year of democracy. Around the world, the people in countries long dominated by tyranny and authoritarianism struggled free to have their voices heard for the first time in decades, or even centuries. The 45-year cold war came to an end.

The significance of this worldwide, and spontaneous fight for democracy rivals the years of 1776 and 1789. In Germany over 77 percent of the people voted in the first election in a reunited country. In countries such as Poland and Nicaragua, people went to the polls to have their voices heard and change the direction of their countries.

Around the world people looked to our country as a model for their new system. The words of Thomas Jefferson were on the lips of democratic leaders from Prague to Managua.

But while all looked to us, our own electoral system—the heart of our democracy—continued to erode. Only 36 percent of the American people came out to vote last November. Why are the citizens of our country so disinterested in their own elected institutions?

The answer is simple. Our electoral system is being distorted by the way we finance campaigns. Overall, Members of Congress are as well entrenched as any dictator. Over 96 percent of the Congress was reelected last November, most facing token opposition. Today the incumbency nest is so well feathered with special advantages and perks that serious challengers are almost an endangered species.

Our process is sick and badly in need of reform. Let there be no doubt by anyone that the American people see the need for reform. Overwhelmingly, the public wants competition returned to elections by ending the spiraling cost of campaigns, and by removing special interests from the process.

No wonder. Today Senate candidates have to spend over $4 million to run for election. Last year, Senate candidates raised over $200 million. In race after race, incumbents could outspend challengers, with only one challenger defeating an incumbent—the lowest number of successful challengers since 1960. In the House of Representatives, incumbents outspent challenges by more than 8 to 1.

Who is in the driver's seat of this process? Not the voters, but special interests dominate today's elections. Special interest political action committees gave over $130 million to congressional candidates. These PAC's know how to play the Washington power game. Last year they gave $16 to House incumbents for every $1 given to challengers. Over half of House candidates received more than half of their campaign money from PAC's—PAC's that will be back asking for special favors now that Congress is in session.

Enough is enough. We have watched our system decline, and the public will not stand it for much longer. I hope all Members are on notice from the November election—if the people do not get reform, they will act to achieve reform themselves by ending permanent incumbency through limiting congressional terms.

But not all is bad news. While democracy sprouted around the world, there was a glimmer of hope here at home. For the first time in 14 years, the Congress passed campaign finance reform legislation. The Senate passed a strong bill with bipartisan support that would meet the public tests for reform: Ending the money chase, getting special interests out of the process, and improving the quality of political debate.

The bill we passed, the Senate Election Ethics Act of 1990, contained the very heart of reform by putting a cap on the runaway costs of campaigns. The bill set spending limits based on the number of voters in each state. Under Supreme Court restrictions from the Buckley versus Valeo case, spending limits must be voluntary, which we provided for with significant incentives to comply.

We also would cut special interest PAC's out of the process. They would no longer be allowed to pollute the political process.

The growing abuse of soft money, or huge contributions from wealthy individuals and organizations funneled through political parties, would be stopped.

Other abuses such as bundling, and special interest groups skirting the law through independent expenditures, would be ended.

We also want to improve the quality of political campaigns by getting away from negative 30 second attack ads that are causing voters to lose interest in our political process. Our bill provides vouchers for complying candidates that can only be used for 1 to 5 minute ads. Also, candidates must claim responsibility for their ads to make sure there are fingerprints on attack ads in the future. Voters will be better informed and hopefully participate more.

While we passed S. 137 last July and came close to resolving this fundamental problem, time ran out in the 101st Congress before we could pass a final House/Senate bill.

Today, I am proposing the bill we passed last year, beginning not anew, but with a bill that went through extensive committee hearings, caucus consideration, and full Senate debate. This is essentially what we passed, and what we should be able to pass again, with strong bipartisan support, very soon.

Mr. President, campaign reform is not an easy issue with simple answers. There is the ever present danger of partisan maneuvering for advantage. The bill we passed, and are proposing today, contains many provisions that Members from our side of the aisle do not want but are willing to accept in order to achieve a bipartisan solution. It also contains ideas and proposals of Republican Senators. In fact, the only change contained in the bill—providing vouchers for broadcast advertising at half the lowest unit rate for complying candidates—is a combination of proposals made by two Senate Republicans.

Our bill is fair; it is true comprehensive reform; and it deserves broad bipartisan support.

On this issue, Mr. President, we can not be Democrats or Republicans first. We are Americans who have been entrusted with the stewardship of this great institution. Everyone of us must accept the responsibility for repairing our electoral process for the good of the country, and to maintain our role as a model democratic system.

Our people are watching. The world is watching. It is time to act and act quickly so that another session of Congress will not pass without the enactment of true campaign finance reform.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for Mr. BENTSEN (for himself, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. KOHL, Mr. GORE, and Mr. KERRY)):

S. 4. A bill to amend titles IV, V, and XIX of the Social Security Act to establish innovative child welfare and family support services in order to strengthen families and avoid placement in foster care, to promote the development of comprehensive substance abuse programs for pregnant women and caretaker relatives with children, to provide improved delivery of health care services to low-income children, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

CHILD WELFARE AND PREVENTIVE SERVICES ACT

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I believe that the bill we are introducing today will provide the foundation for major reform by the 102d Congress of the Nation's child welfare and foster care systems. Its purpose is to emphasize early intervention, and to provide necessary preventive services for families and children before serious damage is done. This bill reflects insights that have been gained through hearings, site visits, and consultation with experts and advocates over the last 2 years.

Today the Nation's child welfare and foster care systems are overwhelmed by a rising tide of reports of child neglect and abuse. Many, if not most, of these reports are the result of parental substance abuse, particularly the epidemic of crack cocaine that has swept the country. Faced with limited funds, but endless emergencies, States have been unable to provide the preventive services that are needed to keep families together, and avoid the need for foster care.

And despite major improvements in recent years in health programs for low income children, there are still far too many children who lack access to the services they need to prevent health problems before they occur.

Mr. President, when we look closely at what is happening to America's children today, we see a disturbing picture.

In 1989, there were more than 2.4 million reports of child abuse and neglect—more than twice the number reported in 1980. And if experience is any guide, we can expect this number to grow even faster as more and more families face the stress of job loss and long-term unemployment.

State foster care rolls are increasing at an alarming rate. New York's caseload increased from 27,000 to more than 60,000 between 1984 and 1989. California's caseload nearly doubled over the last 5 years. Nationally, it is estimated that at the end of 1989 there were 360,000 children living in foster care, 80,000 more than in 1986.

The children entering the child welfare system today are not only more numerous, they are more troubled and more seriously abused than a decade, or even 5 years ago. They are the victims of serious substance abuse, physical or sexual abuse, deprivation, and neglect. Many suffer from physical and mental disabilities as well.

The experts tell us that these increases are due in large part to an increase in substance abuse by pregnant women and parents of young children. According to the American Public Welfare Association, children from families with drug and alcohol problems and babies and infants with drug-addicted mothers pose the most serious problem facing child welfare agencies today.

A study by the GAO for the Finance Committee found that the phenomenon of drug-exposed boarder babies—babies exposed to drugs during pregnancy and left in hospitals by parents unwilling or unable to care for them—is having a profound impact on the child welfare system. Thirty percent of the infants identified by the GAO as drug exposed were placed in foster care. And those infants who go home from the hospital with their drug-abusing parents are at risk of future abuse and neglect. For example, in California the number of children with parental alcohol or drug dependency involved in child protective services cases increased from 67,000 in 1986 to 122,000 in 1988, an 83-percent increase in 3 years. In Illinois, between 1986 and 1988, the number of substance affected infants involved in child abuse and neglect reports increased by 400 percent.

And more than 9 million children lack any public or private health insurance coverage. Over two-thirds of these children live in families with incomes below 185 percent of poverty, or about $23,000 for a family of 4.

These facts do not rest easily on the American conscience. The American people know that if the United States is to continue as a humane, secure, and productive nation, we must commit ourselves to meeting the basic needs of our children. That fact in itself provides a powerful rationale for the measures we propose today.

Our bill has three major objectives.

First, it will redirect the Nation's child welfare system to emphasize the creation of a network of preventive child and family services that will assure help before a crisis develops.

Second, it will promote the creation of comprehensive substance abuse programs for pregnant women and mothers with children.

And third, it will give States the flexibility to provide further help to children whose health needs are currently unmet.

CHILD WELFARE/FOSTER CARE IMPROVEMENTS

First let me discuss our goals for the child welfare system.

Charles Hayward, Secretary of the Delaware Department of Services for Children, Youth, and Their Families, recently told the Committee on Finance:

> Child welfare programs "have become little more than emergency rooms responding—as we will continue to do—to reports of child abuse and neglect. We are using our limited resources to provide the most expensive treatment and intervention approaches in acute family crises. In short, we are doing too little too late. We need to do more. The future of America's children is at stake."

And children themselves know that the system is broken. A recent article in the New York Times told of a 12-year-old girl from Sacramento, CA, who took temporary refuge in a youth shelter last year from an alcoholic mother and a succession of her mother's abusive partners. The child told a reporter, "I don't want to become a system kid. They have no chance."

This bill provides a substantial Federal investment—more than $1.6 billion over 5 years in entitlement matching funds—to help States develop innovative preventive services programs that will give kids a chance. It will help States move away from the traditional approach of waiting until it's too late, when breaking up a family and placing a child in foster care is the only recourse to protect a child from serious harm.

Let me describe more precisely what we mean by this.

Across the country, State and local child welfare agencies are testing new family support programs that try to help families before serious trouble occurs.

As an example, the State of Maryland has set up Family Support Centers in low-income communities, where young men and women who want help in becoming better parents can come, on a voluntary basis, to get a variety of services—health and nutrition counseling, encouragement and assistance in completing their education, training in job skills, and perhaps most importantly—guidance in child-rearing skills so that they can give their children the kind of emotional and physical nurturing they need.

And many States, such as Texas, Oregon, Iowa, Tennessee, New York, Missouri, Michigan, and Pennsylvania, are also beginning to implement a program of family preservation services—intensive, sometimes round-the-clock services whose goal is to deal with family problems so as to prevent unnecessary family breakup through placement in foster care.

These services often include practical concrete services—such as help in finding housing or in paying the heating bill, as well as parent education and skills training, referral for other services, family therapy, and individual mental health support and counseling for both parents and children.

And although further evaluation is needed to help States determine exactly what form these family support and family preservation programs should take in order to be most effective, there is a growing consensus that they can help to prevent family breakup, and they can be less costly than removing children from their homes and placing them in foster care.

Another crucial need of the child welfare system is better integration and coordination with other services for families and children.

As an incentive for State action, the bill provides up to $3 million a year for each of 15 States to conduct pilot projects to improve program coordination—projects that will bring together a whole range of service agencies involved in providing services to families and children, from child welfare to mental health, to education, and even the new welfare reform JOBS program.

In addition, at the Federal level, the bill requires the Secretaries of HHS, Agriculture, and Education, and the Attorney General, to work together to review departmental policies, and to recommend to the Congress both legislative and nonlegislative changes that will remove some of the barriers to service delivery that States now must contend with.

A third major provision in the bill is for enhanced Federal matching—90 percent—for the costs of designing, developing, and installing a comprehensive data information and management system. The Congress and the administration currently lack any credible data that can be used to make decisions about national policy for children. And this is a critical need for elected officials, particularly if the Federal role in funding these programs is to be increased.

The bill also tightens up funding procedures for the foster care program. Under current law, States may claim reimbursement for foster care expenditures, including child placement and administrative costs, for a period of 2 years. Our bill will require States to submit all claims within 1 year of expenditure. Any claims submitted after the 1-year limit would not receive Federal matching.

In addition, the bill includes a number of other significant changes in the child welfare system, including provisions to promote the adoption of disabled and other special needs children, to improve the independent living program for youths who are aging out of foster care, and to improve training for staff who are employed or preparing for employment in state and local child welfare programs.

COMPREHENSIVE SUBSTANCE ABUSE PROGRAMS

The second major component of this bill is designed to promote the creation of comprehensive substance abuse programs for pregnant women and mothers with children.

Dr. Louis Sullivan, Secretary of Health and Human Services, told the Finance Committee last year that "Drugs and alcohol abuse are destroying families and long held American values, and they are even destroying what we had long thought was a natural bonding between mother and infant." "No caring person," he said, "can stand by and watch the devastation that drug abuse has brought upon us."

At the same hearing, Comptroller General Charles Bowsher of the General Accounting Office stated that drug-exposed infants "constitute a growing national problem necessitating medical and social services that will cost billions of dollars in the years to come. One estimate puts the cost of services for drug-exposed children who are significantly impaired to be as high as $750,000 for the first 18 years of life."

The Comptroller General also told the committee that, "despite the demonstrated ability of prenatal care and drug treatment to reduce the number of infants affected by drug abuse, there is a serious shortage of drug treatment capacity for pregnant women." Of the estimated 280,000 pregnant women nationwide in need of treatment, he observed, less than 11 percent receive care.

The problem of substance abuse is complex and extensive—and so cannot be solved simply. But this bill will help by providing additional resources to States for their efforts to aid some of the victims of substance abuse—pregnant women, women with children, and the infants and children who suffer directly or indirectly from this widespread problem.

The new entitlement funds that are provided in this bill will give Governors the flexibility they need to assure coordination of a wide array of essential family and child social services and medical services.

To receive funding, a comprehensive substance abuse program will be required to provide substance abuse prevention, treatment, and followup services, as well as prenatal and pediatric medical services; home visitation; nutritional services; transportation services; child care; and parenting education.

CHILD HEALTH IMPROVEMENTS

Substance abuse, however, is not the only preventable ill that puts children at risk for serious health problems, disability, or death. Diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, polio, measles, and mumps are totally preventable by simple inoculations. Yet despite the clear need for providing immunization, there is evidence that immunization rates are declining. Cases of measles, for example, have increased from 2,822 in 1985 to 17,850 in 1989. Cases of whooping cough more than doubled between 1980 and 1989. Childhood illnesses can also cause serious damage—not to mention discomfort—if gone untreated. Strep throat can lead to rheumatic fever and permanent heart damage; a swimmer's ear can be excruciatingly painful, but speedily relieved with antibiotics. If the family can afford the doctor's bill and medicine.

In 1988, nearly one in five American children under age 17 had no private health insurance or Medicaid coverage. In the past several years, I and others in Congress have worked to address this problem. We expanded Medicaid eligibility to more pregnant women and children in an effort to combat this country's appallingly high rate of infant mortality—higher than that of 18 other countries, and, for black children, higher than the infant mortality rate of much less developed countries, such as Bulgaria and Cuba. We have also expanded Medicaid eligibility to older children—those under age 6 are eligible if the family income is below 133 percent of the Federal poverty level. And, in our most recently enacted budget bill, OBRA 1990, we took a step toward improving adolescent health: Year by year, we will cover older children, over age 6, so that all children under age 19, in families with incomes below the Federal poverty level, will be eligible for Medicaid by the year 2003.

This most recent eligibility expansion was a very significant step in making health care available to children whose family incomes are below the poverty level. But some children will be a little too old to be covered under the phasein schedule; others will be disqualified because their family's income is a little too high—the Federal poverty level is $10,560 for a family of three. To help address these gaps, this bill will enable, but not require States to extend eligibility to older children at a faster rate, or to cover children in families with incomes up to 185 percent of the Federal poverty level.

As described in more detail in the bill summary, the bill also will reduce barriers to Medicaid eligibility for pregnant women by easing limitations on ownership of certain assets; for example, cars, household goods. In addition, the bill will provide greater continuity of coverage for certain children, enable States to pay for home care for children with AIDS or children who are ventilator-dependent, and enable States to cover home visitor services for medically fragile infants.

The bill will build on a provision included in OBRA 1990 prohibiting day limits on hospitalization and requiring reimbursement adjustments for disproportionate share hospitals for extremely long or costly hospital stays by children. After all, Medicaid eligibility is of little value if it does not cover hospitalization in cases of serious illness.

In recognition of the fiscal pressures facing States with deteriorating economic conditions, the bill also will require the Federal Government to use more recent economic data in calculating the Federal matching share for Medicaid.

Although Congress has taken important steps to address the problems of those too poor to afford needed health care, there is still much to be done. The health provisions in this bill are part of a continuing effort to improve access to health care for the Nation's most vulnerable children.

Finally, let me say that although there is no funding offset included in the bill at this point, I can assure Senators that when it is reported by the Committee on Finance all costs associated with the bill will be fully covered. it is my intention, and that of my cosponsors, to adhere to last year's budget agreement that requires the committee to operate on a pay-as-you-go basis. And we will do that.

This bill consolidates child welfare and child health provisions that were introduced last year into a comprehensive package of initiative's for children, adding a major new initiative dealing with substance abuse. Final cost estimates for the new substance abuse program are not yet available, and if we later find that the costs exceed what is financially feasible this year, modifications in the scope of benefits will have to be made. But the need for comprehensive substance abuse programs for pregnant women and mothers with young children is clear, and it is my intention to work toward meeting that need as quickly as possible.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say to my colleagues that during this 102d Congress I intend to do everything I can to enact legislation to meet the critical needs of America's children, and I hope they will join with me in this endeavor. This Congress faces enormous challenges, from the crisis in the Persian Gulf to the threat of debilitating economic recession here at home. But these challenges, awesome as they are, should not deter us from doing our part in assuring a more hopeful future for today's children, and those of generations to come.

I request unanimous consent that the text of S. 4 and a summary appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks, and that the RECORD be left open at this point so that any Senators who may want to add their names as original cosponsors of the bill will be able to do so.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 4

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Child Welfare and Preventive Services Act".

TITLE I—PROVISIONS RELATING TO CHILD WELFARE AND FAMILY SUPPORT

SEC. 101. INNOVATIVE CHILD WELFARE AND FAMILY SUPPORT SERVICES PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part B of title IV of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"INNOVATIVE CHILD WELFARE AND FAMILY SUPPORT SERVICES

"SEC. 429. (a)(1) For the purpose of enabling States to plan, develop, or expand innovative programs of child welfare services and family support services in order to preserve and strengthen families and prevent the need for placement in foster care, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, in addition to amounts otherwise appropriated under this part, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(2) In addition to the amounts authorized to be appropriated under paragraph (1), there is authorized to be appropriated for each of the fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, and 1996, the sum of $8,000,000 to carry out the purposes of subsection (c)(1).

"(b)(1) From the sums appropriated therefore, the Secretary shall, subject to the provisions of this section, pay to each State for each quarter an amount equal to the Federal medical assistance percentage (as defined in section 1905(b)) of the total expenditures during that quarter for the purpose of planning, developing, or expanding an innovative program of child welfare and family support services (in accordance with the requirements of this section) to incorporate any of the following child welfare and family support services:

"(A) Intensive family preservation services designed to help children at risk of foster care placement remain with their families (including adoptive families), where appropriate.

"(B) Reunification services designed to help children return to the families (including adoptive families) from which they have been removed, where appropriate.

"(C) Follow up services designed to sustain and further strengthen families (including adoptive families) after a child has returned home from foster care placement.

"(D) Respite care to provide assistance for any foster care family or adoptive family and, to the extent determined appropriate by the State any other family, of a child with a medical condition or physical, mental, or emotional handicap that requires special assistance (as determined by the Secretary).

"(E) Family support services to strengthen the functioning of a family, including services designed to improve parenting skills.

"(2) The total amount paid to a State under paragraph (1) for a fiscal year may not exceed the sum of—

"(A) the State's allotment under paragraph (3) for the fiscal year; and

"(B) any unexpended portion of the State's allotment for the preceding fiscal year.

"(3)(A) The amount allotted to a State under this paragraph for a fiscal year shall be determined in the manner specified in section 421(a), except that the total amount allotted to all States under this paragraph may not exceed $150,000,000 for fiscal year 1992, $300,000,000 for fiscal year 1993, and $400,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1994, 1995, and 1996.

"(B) The amount allotted to a State under this paragraph for a fiscal year shall remain available for such fiscal year and the succeeding fiscal year.

"(4) Payments to a State under this subsection for any fiscal year shall be made in accordance with the procedures described in section 423(b).

"(5) As a condition of receiving a payment under this section, a State shall provide written assurance (in such form as the Secretary shall prescribe by regulation) that the aggregate amount of funds expended by the State and its political subdivisions from non-Federal resources for the purpose of providing child welfare services (excluding foster care maintenance and adoption assistance payments) shall be maintained at a level of funding that is equal to or exceeds the level of such funding for such services for fiscal year 1990.

"(c)(1)(A) The Secretary shall conduct evaluations of programs under this section according to criteria that the Secretary shall establish.

"(B) In developing the criteria described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall consult with—

"(i) individuals who administer programs under this part and part E of this title;

"(ii) private, nonprofit organizations with an interest in child welfare; and

"(iii) other individuals and organizations with recognized expertise in the evaluation of child welfare services programs or other related programs.

"(C) The Secretary may enter into a contract with one or more independent research organizations to carry out a program evaluation under this subsection.

"(2) Funds expended by a State to conduct evaluations of programs of child welfare and family support services administered by the State shall be deemed expenditures for which payment may be made under subsection (b)(1). Such evaluations shall be conducted in accordance with requirements that the Secretary shall prescribe by regulation.

"(3) Program evaluations conducted pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2) shall—

"(A) use methodologies to measure outcomes with respect to children and families who participate in the programs under this section that enable comparison with similar outcome measurements of children and families who have not received the services offered by the programs under this section; and

"(B) include an assessment of family functioning—

"(i) before the family receives the services offered by a program under this section; and

"(ii) after the family receives such services.

"(4) In carrying out the program evaluations described in paragraph (1), the Secretary shall ensure that an appropriate portion of such evaluations shall use experimental and control groups (of a sample size determined in accordance with appropriate statistical practices).

"(5)(A) The Secretary shall develop procedures to facilitate the coordination of evaluations conducted by the Secretary and by the States.

"(B) Upon request by a State, the Secretary shall provide technical assistance to facilitate the planning and design of program evaluations under this section.

"(6) Beginning with the fiscal year 1994, and annually thereafter, the Secretary shall issue a report to the Congress that includes—

"(A) information concerning the status of evaluations conducted by the Secretary under this subsection;

"(B) findings from the evaluations described in subparagraph (A);

"(C) information concerning the status of evaluations conducted by States under this subsection; and

"(D) a summary of the findings from the State evaluations described in subparagraph (C).

"(7) The Secretary shall, upon completion of a review of the evaluations conducted under this subsection by the Secretary and by States (but not later than February 1, 1996), submit a report to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives that includes recommendations for legislation to improve child welfare and family support services provided under this title to strengthen families, to reduce the number of cases in which it is necessary to remove a child from home and place the child in foster care, and to promote the reunification of families of children who have been placed in foster care.".

(b) STATE PLANS AND REPORTS.—Section 422 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 622) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(c) Not later than January 1, 1992 (with respect to fiscal year 1992), and not later than the July 1 preceding each fiscal year thereafter, each State with an innovative program of child welfare services and family support services (as described in section 429(a)) that intends to provide services that qualify for payments under section 429(b) shall submit to the Secretary for approval, as an amendment to the plan described in subsection (a), a detailed description of the services that such State intends to provide during such fiscal year.

"(d) Not later than July 1, 1992, each State with an innovative program of child welfare services and family support services (as described in section 429(a)) that intends to provide services under such program that qualify for payments under section 429(b), shall submit to the Secretary a report containing a statement of goals that the State expects to achieve during the 5-year period beginning with fiscal year 1992.

"(e) Not later than January 1, 1993, and annually thereafter, each State shall submit to the Secretary a report that summarizes activities carried out with funds made available under this title. Such report shall cover the most recently completed fiscal year, and shall be in such form and contain such information as the Secretary shall require by regulation.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 423(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 623(a)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) For the purposes of this section, the 'amounts expended under the plan' described in paragraph (1) shall not include amounts for which payment is made under section 429(b) for services described in section 429(a).".

SEC. 102. DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS TO IMPROVE COORDINATION OF SERVICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title IV of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting after section 474 the following new section:

"DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS FOR THE COORDINATION OF CHILD AND FAMILY WELFARE FUNDING AND SERVICES

"SEC. 474A. (a) In order to improve the coordination of child and family welfare services, the Secretary shall authorize not more than 15 States to conduct demonstration projects, to be carried out in accordance with this section.

"(b) An application submitted by the Governor of a State shall include a description of the measures to be employed to improve the coordination of the services and benefits provided by child welfare services programs carried out under the State plan under this part with programs which provide services to families and children including some or all of the following programs and services:

"(1) The program of aid and services for needy families with children carried out under the State plan pursuant to part A.

"(2) The child support and spousal support enforcement program carried out under the State plan pursuant to part D.

"(3) The job opportunities and basic skills training program carried out under the State plan pursuant to section 402(a)(19) and part F.

"(4) The special supplemental food program for woman, infants, and children (the WIC program) authorized under section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1786).

"(5) The maternal and child health block grant program under title V.

"(6) Medical assistance furnished under the State plan approved under title XIX.

"(7) Educational programs that provide services to children or families.

"(8) Drug treatment programs and other substance abuse programs.

"(9) Mental health services programs.

"(10) Juvenile justice programs.

"(11) Programs for developmentally disabled individuals.

"(12) Any additional services for children and families that the State determines necessary to meet the needs of all family members in order to carry out the purposes of this section that are approved by the Secretary.

"(c) A demonstration project conducted under this section may be conducted for a period of not more than 3 years.

"(d)(1) Each State that conducts a demonstration project authorized by the Secretary shall, as a part of such demonstration project, conduct an evaluation of the effectiveness of the demonstration project in improving the coordination and the funding of child and family welfare services.

"(2) Amounts expended by the State for the purposes of conducting an evaluation under this subsection shall be deemed amounts expended pursuant to subparagraph (C) of section 474(a)(3).

"(e) Upon completion of a demonstration project under this section, each State shall submit a report concerning the results of the evaluation described in subsection (d) to the Secretary.

"(f) Each State shall submit to the Secretary at such time as the Secretary may prescribe by regulation—

"(1) a description of administrative policies and laws of the Federal Government and the State or a political subdivision of the State, identified by the State as impediments to the coordination of the delivery of the child and family welfare services described in subsection (b); and

"(2) a description of the measures that the State has taken or intends to take to eliminate or reduce impediments described in paragraph (1) that are attributable to administrative policies and laws of the State or a political subdivision of the State.".

(b) PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—Section 474(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 674(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4)(B)(ii) and inserting "; plus"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5) if such State is authorized to conduct a demonstration project pursuant to section 474A, 50 percent of so much of such expenditures (not to exceed $750,000 for each quarter during the period of such demonstration project) to carry out the demonstration project.".

(c) REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATIVE POLICIES AND REGULATIONS.—(1) The Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Education, and the Attorney General of the United States shall review the administrative policies and regulations relating to the funding and delivery of services for families and children (as described in section 474A(b) of the Social Security Act, as added by subsection (a) of this section) of the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Education, and the Department of Justice, respectively, to determine whether changes in such administrative policies and regulations may be made without statutory changes to improve the funding and delivery of such services.

(2) In conducting a review pursuant to paragraph (1), the heads of departments described in paragraph (1) shall consult with appropriate representatives of the governments of States and political subdivisions of States.

(3) Not later than July 1, 1992, the heads of the departments described in paragraph (1) shall collectively (or separately after consultation with the others) issue a report to the Congress that includes—

(A) recommendations for statutory changes, as well as changes in regulations and administrative policies, to improve the coordination of the funding and delivery of child and family welfare services;

(B) a description of the technical assistance that the heads of the departments will make available to the States to improve the coordination of the funding and delivery of child and family welfare services; and

(C) an analysis of the impediments identified pursuant to section 474A(f)(1) of the Social Security Act as they relate to Federal policies and laws.

SEC. 103. FOSTER CARE AND ADOPTION ASSISTANCE.

(a) REQUIREMENTS FOR DOCUMENTATION FOR ADOPTION PLACEMENT PROCEDURES.—Section 475(5) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 675(5)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (C);

(2) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (D) and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by inserting at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(E) with respect to any child who is legally eligible for adoption, a court or administrative body that conducts a case review pursuant to subparagraph (C), shall determine and document—

"(i) the specific measures taken by the State agency responsible for the placement of the child in an adoptive family to make such a placement; or

"(ii) a finding that placement of the child in an adoptive family would be inappropriate.".

(b) DISRUPTED ADOPTIONS.—

(1) Section 471(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 671(a)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1), by inserting "paragraph (18) and" before "section 473";

(B) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (16);

(C) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (17) and inserting "; and"; and

(D) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(18) provides that, at the option of the State, a child whose adoption has been set aside by a court may, for purposes of sections 472 and 473, during any subsequent period of time during which such child would be eligible for assistance under this part as a child in foster care or an adoptive child (but for the adoption or the disruption of the adoption), be deemed to be eligible for such assistance.".

(2) Section 474 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 674) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) For purposes of subsection (a) of this section, a child with respect to whom a State exercises the option described in paragraph (18) of such subsection (a) shall be deemed an eligible child under sections 472 and 473 of this part.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to case reviews conducted on or after October 1, 1993.

(2) The amendments made by subsection (b) shall apply to payments under part E of title IV of the Social Security Act for expenditures made after March 1992.

SEC. 104. STUDY OF REASONABLE EFFORTS REQUIREMENT BY ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall establish an Advisory Committee on Foster Care Placement (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Advisory Committee") to study and make recommendations concerning the requirements under section 471(a)(15) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 671(a)(15)) for each State plan for foster care and adoption assistance.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—(1) The Advisory Committee shall consist of no fewer than 9 members. In appointing members to the Advisory Committee, the Secretary shall include representatives of the following organizations and agencies:

(A) Private, nonprofit organizations with an interest in child welfare (including such organizations that provide child protective services, foster care services, or adoption services).

(B) Hospitals that treat a significant number of boarder babies (as determined by the Secretary).

(C) Agencies of States and political subdivisions thereof responsible for child protective services, foster care services, or adoption services.

(D) Judicial bodies of States and political subdivisions thereof responsible for adjudicating issues of family law (as defined and determined by the Secretary).

(2) Members of the Advisory Committee who are not full-time Federal employees shall, while engaging in the business of the Advisory Committee (including travel time) be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding the daily rate specified at the time of such service under GS-18 of the General Schedule established under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

(3) While away from their homes or regular places of business and on the business and of the Advisory Committee, such members may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in Government service.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than April 1, 1993, the Advisory Committee shall submit a report to the Secretary and to the Congress that includes recommendations for making improvements in the implementation of the requirements under section 471(a)(15).

SEC. 105. CASE REVIEW SYSTEM REQUIREMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 475(5) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 675(5)) is amended by inserting "and most appropriate" before the end parenthesis after "most family like".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect with respect to case reviews conducted on or after April 1, 1992.

SEC. 106. DEMONSTRATION PROJECT TO FACILITATE THE REUNIFICATION OF A CHILD ELIGIBLE TO RECEIVE ASSISTANCE UNDER THE AID TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN PROGRAM WITH HIS OR HER FAMILY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall enter into agreements with not more than 6 States with an approved plan under section 402 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 602) (hereafter in this section referred to as the "State plan") to conduct demonstration projects under this section.

(2) The Secretary shall consider all applications received from States desiring to conduct demonstration projects under this section, and shall approve up to 6 applications involving projects which appear likely to contribute significantly to the achievement of the purpose of this section.

(3) Demonstration projects under this section shall meet such conditions and requirements as the Secretary shall prescribe by regulation. No such project shall be conducted for a period of more than 3 years, and no such project may be conducted after January 1, 1996.

(b) EFFECT OF ACCELERATED AFDC ELIGIBILITY ON FAMILY REUNIFICATION.—For each State conducting a demonstration project under this section, notwithstanding any provision of title IV of the Social Security Act, in order to test the effect on facilitating the reunification of families with children for whom out-of-home placement was determined to be necessary, the Secretary shall establish rules under which the State may deem the family of any such child (who would otherwise be considered a dependent child, as defined in section 406(a) of the Social Security Act, but for the placement of the child outside of the home of the family) to be eligible to receive aid under the State plan (including aid that the State may elect to provide for meeting any special needs) for the month immediately preceding the month during which such child is reunited with the family.

(c) DEMONSTRATION PROJECT EVALUATIONS.—Each State that conducts a demonstration project under this section, shall, after such project has been carried out for one year and again when such project is completed, submit to the Secretary a detailed evaluation of the project and of the contribution of the project to the achievement of the purpose of this section.

(d) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Title IV of the Social Security Act and the regulations promulgated under such title shall apply to demonstration projects conducted under this section to the extent such title is not inconsistent with the purposes of the demonstration projects.

SEC. 107. DATA COLLECTION SYSTEMS.

(a) AUTOMATED DATA COLLECTION SYSTEMS.—Section 474(a)(3) (42 U.S.C. 674(a)(3)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (B);

(2) by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (E); and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraphs:

"(C) 90 percent of so much of such expenditures as are for the planning, design, development, or installation of such statewide mechanized data collection and information retrieval systems (including 90 percent of the full amount of expenditures for hardware components for such systems) that are designed by not later than October 1, 1993—

"(i) to meet the requirements for data collection systems provided in regulations issued pursuant to 479(b)(2); and

"(ii) to have the capability of interfacing with, and retrieving information from, the State data collection system that collects information relating to the eligibility of individuals under part A (for the purposes of facilitating the verification of the eligibility of foster children), as the Secretary determines are likely to provide more efficient, economical, and effective administration of the programs carried out under the State plan approved under part B or the State plan approved under this part;

"(D) 50 percent of so much of such expenditures as are for the operation of a data collection and information system for the purposes of administering programs under the State plan under this part; and;".

(b) OPERATING COSTS.—Section 425(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 625(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) Funds expended by a State for any calendar quarter with respect to the operation of a data collection and information system described in section 474(a)(3)(C) for the purposes of administering programs under this part, shall be deemed to have been expended for child welfare services.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 474A(d)(2) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 102 of this title is amended by striking "subparagraph (C)" and inserting "subparagraph (E)".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to expenditures made—

(1) after September 30, 1991; and

(2) with respect to section 474(a)(3)(C) of the Social Security Act, as added by such subsection, ending on or before September 30, 1993.

SEC. 108. INDEPENDENT LIVING.

(a) ACCUMULATION OF ASSETS.—Section 477 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 677) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (i) as subsection (j); and

(2) inserting after subsection (h) the following new subsection:

"(i) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title and of title XIX, with respect to a child who is included in a program established under subsection (a), an amount of the assets of the child which would otherwise be regarded as resources for the purposes of determination of eligibility for programs under this title or title XIX may be disregarded for the purpose of allowing such child to establish a household. Such amount may not exceed an amount determined by the State agency responsible for the administration of the program as reasonable for the purpose of establishing a household.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall become effective on October 1, 1991.

SEC. 109. DEADLINE FOR SUBMISSION OF STATE CLAIMS FOR REIMBURSEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1132 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320b-2) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by striking "subsection (b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (b) and (c)", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) In the case of claims submitted with respect to expenditures made in carrying out a State plan approved under part E of title IV, subsection (a) shall be applied by substituting 'one-year' for 'two-year' each place it appears.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to payments under part E of title IV of the Social Security Act after fiscal year 1992.

SEC. 110. TRAINING ACTIVITIES.

(a) CHILD WELFARE TRAINEESHIPS.—(1) Title IV of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting after section 426 the following new section:

"CHILD WELFARE TRAINEESHIPS

"SEC. 426A. (a) The Secretary shall approve an application for a grant to a public or nonprofit institution of higher learning to provide traineeships with stipends under section 426(a)(1)(C), only if the application—

"(1) provides assurances that each individual who receives a stipend with such traineeship (hereafter in this section referred to as a 'recipient') shall enter into an agreement with the institution of higher learning under which the recipient shall agree—

"(A) to participate in onsite training at a public or private child welfare agency on a regular basis (as determined by the Secretary) for the period of the traineeship;

"(B) to be employed for a period of years equivalent to the period of the traineeship in a public or private nonprofit child welfare agency in any State after completing the postsecondary education for which the traineeship was awarded (within such period of time as is determined by the Secretary by regulation);

"(C) to provide the institution of higher learning and the Secretary with evidence of compliance with subparagraphs (A) and (B); and

"(D) in the event that the conditions of subparagraph (A) or (B) are not complied with (except as provided in the exceptions to repayment provisions described in subsection (c)), to repay to the Secretary all or part of the amount of the stipend, plus interest, and if applicable, reasonable collection fees (in compliance with regulations that the Secretary shall promulgate);

"(2) provides that an agreement entered into with a recipient shall fully disclose the terms and conditions under which the traineeship with stipend is granted; and

"(3) provides assurances that the institution of higher learning shall—

"(A) provide appropriate support and supervision of recipients;

"(B) enter into agreements with child welfare agencies for the onsite training of recipients;

"(C) develop and implement a curriculum in the field of child welfare services that—

"(i) incorporates the most recent information concerning best practices for the delivery of child welfare services; and

"(ii) incorporates information relating to clause (i) supplied to the institution through consultation with child welfare agencies;

"(D) permit a student who is employed in the field of child welfare services (at the time such student applies for a traineeship) to apply for a traineeship with a stipend if such traineeship furthers the student's progress towards the completion of degree requirements; and

"(E) develop and implement a system that tracks for a period of 3 years, beginning on the date of completion of any student of a child welfare services program of study, the employment record of such student in the field of child welfare services (for the purpose of determining the percentage of students who secure employment in the field of child welfare services and remain employed in such field).

"(b) If the Secretary finds a recipient to be in noncompliance with an agreement entered into under subsection (a)(1)(B), the recipient shall be required to repay a pro rata amount of the stipend received, plus interest, and where applicable, reasonable collection fees, on a schedule and at a rate of interest prescribed by the Secretary by regulation.

"(c) A recipient shall not be considered in violation of the agreement entered into pursuant to subsection (a)(1) during any period in which the recipient satisfies repayment exceptions that may be prescribed by the Secretary by regulation.".

(2) Subparagraph (C) of section 426(a)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 626(a)(1)) is amended by inserting "described in section 426A" after "including traineeships".

(3) The amendments made by this section shall apply to grants awarded on or after September 30, 1991.

(b) TRAINING FOR EMPLOYMENT IN CHILD WELFARE AGENCIES.—In order to improve the capacity of State and local child welfare agencies to administer the programs authorized under parts B and E of title IV of the Social Security Act and to provide services to families and children, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall—

(1) not later than October 1, 1991, publish final regulations establishing detailed guidelines to assist States in using Federal matching funds authorized under Section 474(a)(3) for the purpose of providing training for individuals who are employed or preparing for employment by such agencies; and

(2) not later than January 1, 1992, develop and publish a model staff training program for use by such agencies.

SEC. 111. HEALTH CARE PLANS FOR FOSTER CHILDREN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 475(1)(C) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 675(1)(C)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i) by striking "and addresses" and inserting ", addresses, and telephone numbers",

(2) in clause (vii) by striking "and", and

(3) by redesignating clause (viii) as clause (ix) and inserting after clause (vii) the following:

"(viii) a record indicating that the child's foster care provider was advised (where appropriate) of the child's eligibility for early and periodic screening, diagnostic, and treatment services under title XIX; and".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to case plans established or reviewed on or after October 1, 1991.

SEC. 112. CHILD WELFARE DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

Part E of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 470 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 480. DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to grant States the flexibility and resources necessary to develop innovative policies and appropriate service networks to preserve and strengthen families with children at risk of needing placement outside their home, to reunite children with their families as promptly as possible if an out-of-home placement is found to be necessary, and to place children in adoptive homes or other permanent arrangements, including guardianships and placements with relatives, in a timely fashion if reunification with their families is impossible or is not in the best interest of any such child, and to provide for the evaluation of innovative State programs and the assessment of the impact of such programs on children and families, the Secretary may authorize not more than 10 States to conduct demonstration projects, which may be carried out throughout the State or in limited areas of the State, in accordance with this section.

"(b) CONSIDERATION OF APPLICATIONS.—The Secretary shall consider all applications received from States desiring to conduct demonstration projects under this section.

"(c) CONTENTS OF APPLICATIONS.—

"(1) GENERAL RULES.—Each application by a State to conduct a demonstration project under this section shall—

"(A) propose a project designed to—

"(i) provide, in accordance with paragraph (2), preventive services and assistance to families which have problems that may lead to the removal of a child from the family;

"(ii) promote, in accordance with paragraph (3), the treatment of family problems so as to achieve the reunification of children with their families as promptly as possible after the time it becomes necessary to remove the child from the family;

"(iii) facilitate, in accordance with paragraph (4), the timely and permanent placement of children who are in foster care or who have been abandoned at or shortly after birth;

"(iv) develop, in accordance with paragraph (5), community-based family support services that are provided by trained individuals who live in the community; or

"(v) address, in accordance with paragraph (6), any combination of child welfare services issues;

"(B) specify the area or areas of the State in which the project is to be conducted;

"(C) contain a commitment by the State—

"(i) to carry out the project during a period of not less than 2 and not more than 5 consecutive fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1992; or

"(ii) if the State will not be able to properly plan the project before the beginning of fiscal year 1993, to plan the project during fiscal year 1993 and carry out the project during a period of not less than 4 consecutive fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1994;

"(D) specify the provisions of part B and this part which, but for subsection (g)(1), would prevent the State from conducting the demonstration project;

"(E) identify who will receive services under the project;

"(F) provide assurances that payments to foster families will be sufficient to ensure an adequate number of foster parents; and

"(G) contain such other information as the Secretary may require by regulation.

"(2) PROJECTS TO PREVENT FAMILY DISSOLUTION.—Each application by a State to conduct a demonstration project under this section of the type described in paragraph (1)(A)(i) shall outline the services and procedures the State will offer to prevent family dissolution whenever possible. In addition, each such application by a State shall include the following:

"(A) CASE PLANS.—A commitment by the State to provide each child with a case plan, developed to the extent feasible, in consultation with family members.

"(B) MEASURES TO ASSIST FAMILIES IN ADDRESSING PROBLEMS THAT MAY LEAD TO RE-

MOVAL FROM THE HOME.—A description of the measures to be employed by the State to ensure that families are assisted in addressing the problems that may result in the removal of the child from the home.

"(C) MEASURES TO KEEP PARENTS REQUIRING DRUG OR ALCOHOL TREATMENT WITH THEIR CHILDREN.—A description of the measures to be employed by the State to keep parents and their young children together, where appropriate, while the parent participates in drug or alcohol treatment.

"(D) DRUG AND ALCOHOL TREATMENT MEASURES.—A description of the measures to be employed by the State to ensure that drug and alcohol treatment programs are made available to parents who are substance abusers.

"(E) MEASURES TO COORDINATE FAMILY WELFARE FUNDING AND SERVICES.—A description of the measures to be employed by the State to coordinate the funding of, and the services and benefits provided by, programs which provide services to families with children at risk of being placed in the care of a child welfare, mental health, or juvenile justice agency, including the following programs:

"(i) The State's child welfare services program carried out under the State plan approved under part B.

"(ii) The maternal and child health block grant program under title V.

"(iii) The job opportunities and basic skills training program carried out pursuant to section 402(a)(19) and part F.

"(iv) Medical assistance under the State plan approved under title XIX.

"(v) Drug and other substance abuse treatment programs.

"(vi) Mental health services programs.

"(vii) Any new services for children and families that the State deems necessary to meet the needs of all family members in order to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(viii) Such other programs as the State deems appropriate.

"(3) FAMILY REUNIFICATION PROJECTS.—Each application by a State to conduct a demonstration project under this section of the type described in paragraph (1)(A)(ii) shall include the following:

"(A) DESCRIPTION OF PROPOSED PROCEDURES TO ASSIST FAMILY REUNIFICATION.—A description of how the State will—

"(i) design a treatment plan for addressing the family problems that led to removal of the child from the home;

"(ii) to the extent feasible, involve all family members in executing the plan;

"(iii) coordinate the programs and resources necessary to address the problem that led to removal of the child from the home;

"(iv) reunify the child with the family as soon as possible (consistent with the best interests of the child); and

"(v) implement improvements in laws and procedures so as to ensure timely hearings and decisions.

"(B) REASONS WHY PROPOSED PROCEDURES WOULD RESULT IN EARLIER FAMILY REUNIFICATION.—A discussion of why the particular procedures proposed in the application are likely to result in earlier or more successful family reunification than is achieved under the present policies and procedures of the State.

"(4) PERMANENT PLACEMENT PROJECTS.—Each application by a State to conduct a demonstration project under this section of the type described in paragraph (1)(A)(iii) shall describe how the State will improve its laws and administrative procedures so as to provide, where appropriate, more expeditious, permanent placement of children who are in foster care, are boarder babies, were abandoned at or shortly after birth, have parents addicted to drugs, or were abused.

"(5) FAMILY SUPPORT DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—Each application by a State to conduct a demonstration project under this section of the type described in paragraph (1)(A)(iv) shall include a description of—

"(A) how the State will conduct innovative programs which train individuals who live in a community to provide family support services to other families in the community with children at risk of being placed in foster care, using services which are based on a self-help model; and

"(B) how such programs will be coordinated with other child welfare and family support services available in the area.

"(6) PROJECTS ADDRESSING OTHER CHILD WELFARE ISSUES.—Each application by a State to conduct a demonstration project under this section of the type described in paragraph (1)(A)(v) shall describe a project designed to test an innovative approach to any number of significant child welfare services issues, which may include—

"(A) avoiding out-of-home placements;

"(B) achieving, where appropriate, speedy reunification of families from which it has been necessary to remove a child;

"(C) reducing the time it takes to permanently place children who have been removed from their families when such placement is appropriate;

"(D) where appropriate, permitting children to remain with, or be quickly reunited with, their parents while their parents receive treatment for substance abuse; and

"(E) identifying risk factors which would allow child welfare agencies to identify and offer assistance to families that may need protective services.

"(d) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Within 12 months after the date of the enactment of this section—

"(A) the Secretary shall transmit to each State a detailed explanation of the requirements for participation in the demonstration program established by this section;

"(B) any State interested in conducting a demonstration project under this section shall transmit to the Secretary a letter of intent containing a tentative description of the project; and

"(C) the Secretary shall, subject to paragraph (4), approve not more than 10 applications which meet the applicable requirements of subsection (c).

"(2) DISTRIBUTION OF DEMONSTRATIONS BY STATE POPULATION.—The Secretary, to the extent feasible (in view of the number of approvable applications received), shall provide that in approving applications to conduct demonstration projects under this section that—

"(A) at least 2 and not more than 4 of such applications approved are the applications of States with populations of less than 1.5 million;

"(B) at least 3 and not more than 5 of such applications approved are the applications of States with populations between 1.5 and 7 million; and

"(C) at least 2 and not more than 4 of such applications approved are the applications of States with populations over 7 million.

"(3) DISTRIBUTION OF DEMONSTRATIONS BY REGION.—The Secretary shall provide that in approving applications to conduct demonstration projects under this section that no more than 4 of such applications shall be approved for any one geographical region (as determined by the Secretary) of the country.

"(4) FREEDOM OF STATES TO SELECT AREAS IN WHICH TO CONDUCT DEMONSTRATION.—The Secretary may not, as a condition of approval, require any State to conduct a project under this section in any area of the State not specified in the application therefor.

"(5) CERTIFICATION REQUIRED.—The Secretary shall not approve the application of a State to conduct a demonstration project under this section unless the State certifies that all cost savings resulting from the project will be used to provide child welfare services (within the meaning of section 425(a)(1)) to families.

"(e) GRANTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make grants in accordance with this subsection to each State whose application to conduct a demonstration project under this section is approved by the Secretary, in accordance with a contract prepared by the Secretary (in consultation with the entity or entities selected pursuant to subsection (f)) which specifies the duties of the Secretary, the State, and the entity selected to evaluate the project in achieving the purpose described in subsection (a).

"(2) USE OF GRANTS.—Each State which receives funds under the demonstration program under this section may use such funds to improve the provision of child welfare, foster care, and adoption assistance services in any manner that the State deems appropriate.

"(3) ANNUAL GRANTS.—The Secretary shall make grants to States under paragraph (1) for each fiscal year for which the State is authorized to conduct a demonstration project under this section.

"(4) AMOUNT OF GRANT TO INCLUDE STATE DEMONSTRATION BONUS.—

"(A) CALCULATION OF AMOUNT OF GRANT.—The amount of the grant to be paid under paragraph (1) to a State for a fiscal year shall be an amount equal to the applicable percentage of the sum of—

"(i) the amounts paid to the State for fiscal year 1991 pursuant to sections 423 and 474 (other than for adoption assistance payments under section 473 and for expenses for the proper and efficient administration of the provisions of the State plan relating to adoption assistance);

"(ii) the portion of the amount (if any) by which the amounts appropriated for the fiscal year for payments to States under part B exceed the amounts so appropriated for fiscal year 1991, that would be payable to the State pursuant to such part if the State were not authorized to conduct a demonstration project under this section; and

"(iii) 20 percent of the amount that would have been payable to the State for the immediately preceding fiscal year pursuant to section 423 if the State were not authorized to conduct a demonstration project under this section.

"(B) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE DEFINED.—

"(i) As used in subparagraph (A), the term 'applicable percentage' means, with respect to a State and a fiscal year, the quotient set forth in clause (ii) as determined by the Secretary after taking into account the estimates made under subsection (f)(2)(B) for the fiscal year with respect to the State.

"(ii) The quotient set forth in this clause is—

"(I) the number of children in the areas in which the State is conducting a demonstration project under this section with respect to whom the State would have made foster care maintenance payments under section 472 for the fiscal year if the Secretary had approved the State plan under this part for the fiscal year and the State were not authorized to conduct the project; divided by

"(II) the total number of children in the State with respect to whom the State would have so made such payments for the fiscal year.

"(5) NOTIFICATION TO STATES OF AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—On the 1st day of each fiscal year for which a State is to be made a grant under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall notify the State of the amount of the grant.

"(6) GRANTS TO BE PAID IN EQUAL QUARTERLY INSTALLMENTS.—The Secretary shall pay each grant under paragraph (1) in equal quarterly installments.

"(7) SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENT.—Within 3 months after the end of each fiscal year with respect to which estimates are made under subsection (f)(2)(B) with respect to a State, the Secretary shall—

"(A) take such estimates into account in determining the amount that would have been payable to the State under section 474 for the fiscal year (other than for adoption assistance payments under section 473 and for expenses for the proper and efficient administration of the provisions of the State plan relating to adoption assistance) if the Secretary had approved the State plan under this part for the fiscal year and the State were not authorized to conduct a demonstration project under this section; and

"(B) pay the State the amount (if any) by which—

"(i) the amount determined under subparagraph (A); exceeds

"(ii) the amount paid to the State pursuant to section 474 for fiscal year 1991 (other than for adoption assistance payments under section 473 and for expenses for the proper and efficient administration of the provisions of the State plan relating to adoption assistance).

"(f) EVALUATION OF DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—

"(1) SELECTION OF EVALUATING ENTITY.—The Secretary shall—

"(A) publish in the Commerce Daily a request for applications from entities that are capable of, and interested in performing the functions described in paragraph (2); and

"(B) in time for such an entity to participate in the development of contracts under subsection (e)(1), enter into a contract with 1 or more entities to perform such functions.

"(2) FUNCTIONS OF EVALUATING ENTITY.—The functions of the entity or entities selected by the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (1) are—

"(A) to assist the Secretary and the States in devising a detailed plan for the evaluation of demonstration projects conducted under this section;

"(B) within 30 days after the end of each fiscal year, to submit a report to the Secretary, with respect to each such project, that estimates in accordance with the data collection provisions of the contract described in subsection (e)(1)—

"(i) the number of children in the areas in which the State is conducting a demonstration project under this section with respect to whom the State would have made foster care maintenance payments under section 472 for the fiscal year if the Secretary had approved the State plan under this part for the fiscal year and the State were not authorized to conduct the project; and

"(ii) the average length of time for which such payments would have been so made with respect to such children;

"(C) prepare in accordance with paragraph (3), and submit to the Secretary, with respect to each such project, interim reports that evaluate the costs and benefits of the project; and

"(D) prepare in accordance with paragraph (3), and submit to the Secretary, with respect to each such project, a final report that—

"(i) describes in detail, and documents, the ways in which the project has changed the provision of preventive services, reunification services, adoption assistance services, and other related child welfare and foster care services in the State; and

"(ii) evaluates the costs and benefits of the project.

"(3) EVALUATION REQUIREMENTS.—In evaluating a demonstration project conducted by a State under this section, the entity or entities selected by the Secretary to perform the evaluation shall—

"(A) collect such information as may be necessary to analyze the impact of the project on—

"(i) foster care placement rates;

"(ii) child development and behavior (including academic performance, intellectual development, and health); and

"(iii) family relationships;

"(B) collect such other information on outcomes as the Secretary or the State deems appropriate; and

"(C) use currently acceptable scientific methods.

"(4) DUTY OF STATES TO PROVIDE INFORMATION.—Each State which conducts a demonstration project under this section shall provide the entity or entities selected by the Secretary to evaluate the project with such information with respect to the project and the State programs carried out pursuant to part B and this part as the entity or entities may request under the contract described in subsection (e)(1) entered into by the Secretary, the entity, and the State.

"(5) COSTS OF EVALUATIONS.—The Secretary shall pay the costs incurred during each fiscal year by any State in assisting the evaluation of the demonstration project conducted by the State under this section, to the extent that such costs exceed the amount (estimated by the Secretary) that the State would have expended during the fiscal year to comply with the data reporting requirements of part B and this part if the Secretary had approved the State plans under such parts for the fiscal year and the State were not authorized to conduct the project.

"(g) APPLICABILITY OF PART B AND OTHER SECTIONS OF THIS PART.—During the period in which a State is conducting a demonstration project under this section—

"(1) part B (other than section 427) and the other provisions of this part (other than section 471(a)(1) requiring the State plan to provide for adoption assistance in accordance with section 473, paragraphs (8), (12), (13), (15), and (16) of section 471(a), sections 473, 474 (as it relates to adoption assistance under section 473), and section 479) shall not apply to the State; and

"(2) the State shall, for purposes of section 402(a)(20), be deemed to have in effect a State plan approved under this part.

"(h) PROHIBITION AGAINST IMPAIRMENT OF ENTITLEMENT TO FOSTER CARE BENEFITS.—A State may not carry out a demonstration project under this section in a manner which impairs the entitlement of any qualified child to foster care benefits under a State plan approved under this part.".

TITLE II—PROVISIONS RELATING TO COMPREHENSIVE SUBSTANCE ABUSE PROGRAMS FOR PREGNANT WOMEN AND CARETAKER PARENTS WITH CHILDREN

SEC. 201. COMPREHENSIVE SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT PROGRAMS FOR PREGNANT WOMEN AND CARETAKER PARENTS.

(a) In General.—Part B of title IV of the Social Security Act, as amended by section 101 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR CERTAIN SERVICES FURNISHED UNDER COMPREHENSIVE SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT PROGRAMS

"SEC. 430. (a) For the purpose of enabling States to establish comprehensive programs of substance abuse treatment for certain low-income pregnant women, caretaker parents, and their children, there are authorized to be appropriated for each of the fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, and 1996 such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(b)(1) Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), the Secretary shall pay to each State for each quarter, from the sums appropriated under subsection (a), an amount equal to the Federal medical assistance percentage (as defined in section 1905(b)) of the total amount expended by the State for that quarter in planning, developing, and administering a qualified comprehensive substance abuse treatment program, and in providing non-medical substance abuse treatment support services for qualified individuals under such program.

"(2) The total amount paid to a State under paragraph (1) for a fiscal year may not exceed the sum of—

"(A) the State's allotment under paragraph (3) for the fiscal year; and

"(B) any unexpended portion of the State's allotment for the preceding fiscal year.

"(3)(A) The amount allotted to a State under this paragraph for a fiscal year shall be determined in the manner specified in section 421(a), except that the total amount allotted to all States under this paragraph may not exceed $75,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1992 and 1993, $100,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1994 and 1995, and $125,000,000 for fiscal year 1996.

"(B) The amount allotted to a State under this paragraph for a fiscal year shall remain available for such fiscal year and the succeeding fiscal year.

"(4) Payments to a State under paragraph (1) shall be made in the manner specified in section 423(b).

"(c) As a condition of receiving payment under subsection (b)(1) for a fiscal year, a State shall provide to the Secretary (in such form as the Secretary may prescribe) written assurances that the total amount of funds expended by the State (and any political subdivision thereof) from non-Federal sources for the fiscal year for the purpose of providing non-medical substance abuse treatment support services for the fiscal year will not be less than the total amount expended for such services from such sources for the immediately preceding fiscal year.

"(d) The Secretary shall require each State receiving payments under subsection (b)(1) to report (in such manner and form and at such time as the Secretary determines to be appropriate) such information as may be necessary to permit the Secretary and the Congress to evaluate the operation and effectiveness of comprehensive substance abuse treatment services under this section. Such information shall include the number of individuals participating in such program in the State, any limits imposed by the State on the number of individuals who may enroll in the program, and the number of individuals on any waiting list maintained by the State for participation in the program.

"(e) For purposes of this section:

"(1) The term 'non-medical substance abuse treatment support services' means--

"(A) home visitation services, nutritional services, child care, and parenting education;

"(B) substance abuse prevention and follow-up services (to the extent such services are not furnished under a State plan approved under title XIX); and

"(C) any other services (such as room and board at a residential substance abuse treatment facility for a qualified individual and, where appropriate, the individual's child) that are determined by the State (in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary) to be necessary and appropriate to support the participation of a qualified individual in a qualified comprehensive substance abuse treatment program.

"(2) The term 'qualified individual' means an individual who is—

"(A) a pregnant woman or caretaker parent who is eligible for medical assistance under a State plan approved under title XIX;

"(B) at the option of the State, any other pregnant woman or caretaker parent whose income does not exceed an amount specified by the State; and

"(C) where appropriate, the children of an individual specified in subparagraph (A) or (B).

"(3) The term 'qualified comprehensive substance abuse treatment program' means a program, established by a State, that—

"(A) makes available to qualified individuals (either directly or under arrangements with others) at least the following services:

"(i) substance abuse prevention, treatment, and follow up services (on an outpatient basis and, at the option of the State, in a residential facility);

"(ii) prenatal, gynecological, and pediatric medical services;

"(iii) transportation; and

"(iv) non-medical substance abuse treatment support services;

"(B) provides for appropriate coordination of substance abuse treatment-related medical services furnished to individuals under the program (under title V or XIX) and non-medical substance abuse support services for which payment may be made under this section; and

"(C) is administered by an agency (or agencies) designated by the Governor of the State"

"(4) The term 'caretaker parent' means a parent who personally provides (or expects to provide) care for a child.".

(b) EXCEPTION TO IMD EXCLUSION.—Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (22)(B) by inserting "(other than care and services for any individual who is participating in a qualified comprehensive substance abuse treatment program under section 430 and who would be eligible for medical assistance under this title but for the application of this subparagraph)" after "institution for mental diseases"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Nothing in the parenthetical expression set forth in paragraph (22)(B) may be construed as authorizing payment for room and board.".

(c) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall waive the requirements of section 1902(a)(1) of the Social Security (relating to statewideness) and section 1902(a)(10)(B) of such Act (relating to the amount, duration, and scope of benefits) to the extent the Secretary determines that a waiver of such requirements is necessary and appropriate to enable a State to establish a comprehensive substance abuse treatment program described in section 430 of such Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section.

TITLE III—PROVISIONS RELATING TO CHILD HEALTH

SEC. 301. OPTIONAL COVERAGE OF CHILDREN WITH INCOME BELOW 185 PERCENT OF THE POVERTY LEVEL.

(a) FLEXIBILITY ON INCOME LIMIT.—Section 1902 of the Social Security Act, as amended by section 4601(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, is amended—

(1) in subclauses (VI) and (VII) of subsection (a)(10)(A)(i), by inserting "minimum" before "income level",

(2) in subsection (l)(2)(B), by striking "133 percent" and inserting "a percentage (established by the State, which is not less than 133 percent and not more than 185 percent)"; and

(3) in subsection (l)(2)(C), by striking "100 percent" and inserting "a percentage (established by the State, which is not less than 100 percent and not more than 185 percent)".

(b) FLEXIBILITY ON AGE.—Section 1902(l) of such Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (C),

(B) by inserting "and" at the end of subparagraph (D), and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(E) at the option of the State, children born before October 1, 1983, who have attained 6 years of age but have not attained 19 years of age or a lesser age as selected by the State; and

(2) in paragraph (2)(C) by striking "subparagraph (D)" and inserting "subparagraph (D) or (E)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning on or after January 1, 1992.

SEC. 302. OPTIONAL COVERAGE FOR FOSTER CHILDREN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1902(a)(10)(A)(ii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(10)(A)(ii)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of subclause (X),

(2) by striking the semicolon at the end of subclause (XI) and inserting "; or"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subclause:

"(XII) who are described in subclause (IX) and subsection (z);".

"(z) Individuals described in this subsection are children who have been placed in foster care, including children placed under the auspices of a public child welfare agency, children placed by a private agency under contract to a public agency, and children placed by a licensed private child welfare agency.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall become effective with respect to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning on or after January 1, 1992.

SEC. 303. MODIFICATION OF ASSET TEST FOR PREGNANT WOMEN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1902(l)(3) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(l)(3)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (B) the following: "(except that, for purposes of this subparagraph, there shall be excluded from the term 'resources', without regard to the value thereof, any automobile, household goods, personal effects, burial spaces, and insurance policies)".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective with respect to eligibility for medical assistance on or after January 1, 1992.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation (other than legislation authorizing or appropriating funds) in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by this section, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

SEC. 304. CONTINUOUS ELIGIBILITY FOR CERTAIN CHILDREN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1902(e) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(e)) as amended by section 4402(c) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(12)(A) In the case of a child who has not attained 6 years of age and who is determined eligible for medical assistance under this title (other than a child eligible for such assistance because such child is receiving aid under part A or E of title IV or under title XVI), such child shall remain eligible for medical assistance under this title after each determination of eligibility for a period of 6 months and no redetermination of such child's eligibility shall take place for a period of 6 months from the determination of eligibility of such child, regardless of any change in income or resources of the family of which such child is a member.

"(B) With respect to a child who has not attained 19 years of age and who is receiving aid under part A or E of title IV or under title XVI and who is determined to be no longer eligible for such aid, the State may not discontinue medical assistance under this title for such child until the State has determined that such child is not eligible for medical assistance under this title on a basis other than the receipt of aid under such parts or title.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall become effective with respect to eligibility determinations for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act on or after January 1, 1992.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires

State legislation (other than legislation authorizing or appropriating funds) in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by this section, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

SEC. 305. SECTION 209(b) STATES PROHIBITED FROM DENYING MEDICAL ASSISTANCE TO CHILDREN 18 YEARS OF AGE OR YOUNGER RECEIVING BENEFITS UNDER SSI.

SEC. 312. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS OF THE SECRETARY.

(a) DEFINITION OF MEDICALLY HIGH RISK PREGNANCY AND CHILDREN TO BE DEVELOPED.—(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall in consultation with appropriate professional health care related groups develop definitions of medically high risk pregnancy and children at a high risk of medical problems. In developing such definitions, the Secretary shall consider, among other factors, low birthweight and placement in foster care.

(2) The Secretary shall report to Congress on the definitions developed under paragraph

(1) along with such further information or comments as the Secretary may deem relevant not later than March 1, 1992.

(b) Definition of Medically Uninsurable Children To Be Developed.—(1) The Secretary shall in consultation with appropriate professional health care groups and health insurers develop alternative definitions of medically uninsurable children.

(2) The Secretary shall report to Congress on the definitions developed under paragraph (1) along with such further information or comments as the Secretary may deem relevant not later than March 1, 1992.

(c) Model Health Benefit Package for Pregnant Women and Children To Be Developed.—(1) The Secretary shall in consultation with appropriate professional health care groups and consumers develop a model health benefit package for pregnant women and children through age 18. The package developed by the Secretary shall include—

(A) coverage for appropriately timed primary care visits (including visits for prenatal care, immunizations, screening, and followup treatment of health problems); and

(B) protection against catastrophic expenses for inpatient hospital care.

(2) In developing the model health benefit package for pregnant women under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall consider whether substance abuse treatment (where appropriate) should be included in the benefit package.

(3) The Secretary shall report to Congress on the health benefit package developed under paragraph (1) along with such further information or comments as the Secretary may deem relevant not later than March 1, 1992.

SEC. 313. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS UNDER TITLE V.

(a) In General.—Section 506(a)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 706(a)(2)), as amended by section 6504 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, is amended by adding a new subparagraph:

"(F) Information on—

"(i) the number of treatment slots available for substance abuse treatment for pregnant women;

"(ii) the number of pregnant women who received substance abuse treatment; and

"(iii) if the State maintains a waiting list for such services, the number of pregnant women who were placed on a waiting list (and the length of time they remained on the waiting list) to receive substance abuse treatment services.".

(b) Report by the Secretary.—Section 506(a)(3)(D) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 706(a)(3)(D)), as amended by section 6504(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) by striking "and (E)" and inserting "(E) and (F)" in the matter preceding clause (i);

(2) by striking "and" at the end of clause (iii); and

(3) by inserting after clause (iii) the following new clause:

"(iv) information (in the case of subclauses (I) and (II), by racial and ethnic group) on—

"(I) the number of treatment slots available for substance abuse treatment for pregnant women;

"(II) the number of pregnant women who received substance abuse treatment; and

"(III) if the State maintains a waiting list for such services, the number of pregnant women who were placed on a waiting list (and the length of time they remained on the waiting list) to receive substance abuse treatment services; and".

(c) Effective Date.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective with respect to annual reports for fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1993.

SEC. 314. COMMISSION ON CHILDHOOD DISABILITY.

(a) Establishment of Commission.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall appoint a Commission on the Evaluation of Disability in Children (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Commission").

(b) Appointment of Members.—(1) The Secretary shall appoint 15 members to the Commission, including—

(A) recognized experts in the field of medicine, whose work involves—

(i) the evaluation and treatment of disability in children,

(ii) the study of congenital, genetic, or perinatal disorders in children, or

(iii) the measurement of developmental milestones and developmental deficits in children; and

(B) recognized experts in the fields of—

(i) psychology,

(ii) education and rehabilitation,

(iii) law, or

(iv) the administration of disability programs, and

(v) other fields of expertise that the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

(2) Members shall be appointed within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments to competitive service.

(3) Members appointed under this subsection shall serve for a term equivalent to the duration of the Commission.

(4) The Secretary shall designate a member of the Commission to serve as Chairman of the Commission for a term equivalent to the duration of the Commission.

(c) Administrative Provisions.—(1) Service as a member of the Commission by an individual who is not otherwise a Federal employee shall not be considered service in an appointive or elective position in the Federal Government for the purposes of any provision of title 5, United States Code.

(2) Each member of the Commission who is not a full-time Federal employee shall be paid compensation at a rate equal to the daily equivalent of the rate of basic pay in effect for Level IV of the Executive Schedule for each day (including travel time) the members attends meetings or otherwise performs the duties of the Commission.

(3) While away from their homes or regular places of business on the business of the Commission, each member who is not a full-time Federal employee may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service.

(d) Assistance to Commission.—The Commission may engage such technical assistance from individuals skilled in medical and other aspects of childhood disability as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Commission. The Secretary shall make available to the Commission such secretarial, clerical, and other assistance as the Commission may require to carry out the functions of the Commission.

(e) Study by the Commission.—(1) The Commission shall conduct a study, in consultation with the National Academy of Sciences, of the meaning of the term "disability" under title XVI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1382 et seq.) as it applies to determining whether a child under the age of 18 is eligible to receive benefits under such title XVI, including the appropriateness of the application of such term for such purpose, and the advantages and disadvantages of using any alternative definition of disability in determining whether a child under age 18 is eligible to receive benefits under titles XVI or XIX.

(2) The study described in paragraph (1) shall include issues of—

(A) recommendations for revision of the Childhood Listing of Impairments under regulations promulgated under Part B of Appendix 1 to Subpart P, 20 CFR 404;

(B) the validity of a presumption of disability for children under age 4 with a genetic, congenital, or perinatal disorder;

(C) whether the need by families for assistance in meeting high costs of medical care for children with physical or mental impairments might appropriately be met through expansion of Federal health assistance programs (including Medical Assistance under title XIX of this Act); and

(D) such other issues that the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

(f) Report.—Not later than September 1, 1993, the Commission shall prepare a report and submit such report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance in the Senate which shall summarize the results of the study described in subsection (e) and include any recommendations that the Commission determines to be appropriate.

(g) Termination of Commission.—The Commission shall terminate on September 30, 1993.

TITLE IV—PROVISIONS RELATING TO ADOPTION EXPENSE DEDUCTION

SEC. 401. ADOPTION EXPENSE DEDUCTION.

(a) In General.—Part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating section 221 as section 222 and by inserting after section 221 the following new section:

"SEC. 221. SPECIAL NEEDS ADOPTION EXPENSES DEDUCTION.

"(a) Allowance of Deduction.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a deduction for the taxable year the amount of the qualified adoption expenses paid or incurred by the individual for such taxable year.

"(b) Limitations.—

"(1) Maximum dollar amount.—The aggregate amount of adoption expenses which may be taken into account under subsection (a) with respect to the adoption of a child shall not exceed $3,000.

"(2) Denial of double benefit.—

"(A) In general.—No deduction shall be allowable under subsection (a) for any expense for which a deduction or credit is allowable under any other provision of this chapter.

"(B) Reimbursements.—If a taxpayer is reimbursed for any qualified adoption expenses for which a deduction was allowed under subsection (a), the amount of such reimbursement shall be includable in the gross income of the taxpayer in the taxable year in which such reimbursement was received.

"(c) Definitions.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) Qualified adoption expenses.—The term 'qualified adoption expenses' means reasonable and necessary adoption fees, court costs, attorney's fees, and other expenses which—

"(A) are directly related to the legal adoption of a child with special needs by the taxpayer,

"(B) are not incurred in violation of State or Federal law, and

"(C) are of a type eligible for reimbursement under the adoption assistance program under part E of title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(2) CHILD WITH SPECIAL NEEDS.—The term 'child with special needs' means any child determined by the State to be a child described in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 473(c) of the Social Security Act.".

CHILD WELFARE AND PREVENTION SERVICES ACT—SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

CHILD WELFARE/FOSTER CARE IMPROVEMENTS

Innovative Services to Strengthen Families.—Federal matching funds will be provided under title IV-B of the Social Security act to enable States to develop and expand innovative programs of services to strengthen families, thereby avoiding family disruption and placement in foster care. States will be entitled to their share of $150 million in FY92, $300 million in FY93, and $400 million in FY94, FY95, and FY96. Funds will be allotted on the same basis as under the current child welfare program (reflecting the size of the State's population under age 21 and per capita income). Matching will be at the Medicaid rate (varying from 50 to 83 percent, depending on State per capita income).

Funds may be used for the following services: intensive family preservation, reunification, and followup services designed to enable children to remain or be reunited with their families; respite care for families with a child who has a medical condition, or physical, mental, or emotional handicap that requires special assistance; and family support services to strengthen family functioning, including services to help parents improve their parenting skills. Federal funds will also be provided to enable the Secretary of Health and Human Services to evaluate the effectiveness of these new services.

Measures to Improve Coordination of Services.—Up to 15 States will be allowed to conduct 3-year pilot projects to improve the coordination of the delivery of services for families and children. Federal matching for each project cannot exceed $3 million a year. Applications for projects must be submitted by the Governor. States conducting projects must conduct an evaluation and report the results to the Secretary.

In addition, the Secretaries of HHS, Agriculture, and Education, and the Attorney General, will be required to review Departmental policies to determine what changes in regulations and procedures can be made without legislative changes to improve coordination of services at the Federal, State, and local levels. They must issue a joint report including recommendations for both legislative and nonlegislative changes by July 1, 1992.

Independent Living.—The independent living program, designed to assist foster care youth in making the transition from foster care to independent living, will be modified to allow youths in independent living programs to accumulate assets sufficient to enable them to establish their own households.

Provisions to Facilitate Adoption.—The bill includes three provisions aimed at facilitating adoption:

(1) In conducting a periodic case review of a child who is legally free for adoption, a court (or administrative review) must determine and document for the child the specific steps being taken by the State child welfare agency to find an adoptive family for the child, or must make a finding that adoption placement would be inappropriate for the child.

(2) The Internal Revenue Code is amended to provide a tax deduction of up to $3,000 to help families with the one-time costs of adopting a disabled or other "special needs" child.

(3) States will be allowed to claim Federal matching (title IV-E) in the case of a child who has previously been determined to be eligible for adoption assistance payments under title IV-E, but who has returned to foster care because the adoption has been set aside by the court. The child will be eligible for foster care maintenance payments, as well as for adoption assistance to facilitate adoption by a second family.

Data Collection and Information Retrieval System for the Foster Care and Child Welfare Programs.—States will be allowed to claim 90 percent Federal matching for the costs of planning, designing, developing, or installing a statewide data collection and information retrieval system for purposes of administering the title IV-B child welfare and title IV-E foster care and adoption assistance programs.

Limit Federal Matching for Foster Care Placement and Administrative Costs.—Beginning with fiscal year 1992, States will be required to submit all claims for Federal reimbursement for title IV-E foster care expenditures within one year of the expenditure, rather than within two years, as under current law.

Study of "Reasonable Efforts".—The Secretary of HHS is required to establish an Advisory Committee to study the implementation of the current law requirement that States make "reasonable efforts" to prevent the need for removal of a child from his home, and to make it possible for the child to return home. A report with recommendations to improve the implementation of the requirement must be submitted to the Congress by April 1, 1993.

Require Placement in Least Restrictive, Most Appropriate Setting.—Language will be added to the statute to assure that a child who is placed in foster care is placed in a setting that is most appropriate for the child.

Strengthen Child Welfare Training Provisions.—Current law authority for Federal funding for child welfare training will be strengthened by (1) requiring students receiving stipends to participate in a related field placement and to commit to full-time post-graduation employment in a public or private non-profit child welfare agency; (2) requiring institutions receiving funds to have or develop curricula reflecting current knowledge about best practices in delivering child welfare services, to consult with child welfare agencies in developing such curricula, and to track students who receive training to determine how many secure and retain employment in the child welfare field; and (3) allowing those already working in the child welfare system to be eligible for stipends in order to complete degree requirements.

In addition, the Secretary of Health and Human Services will be required to publish regulations establishing guidelines to assist States in making use of the 75 percent Federal matching funds that are currently authorized under title IV-E for training individuals who are employed or preparing for employment in State and local child welfare agencies, and to develop a model training program for use by these agencies.

Other Child Welfare Provisions.—Other provisions in the bill include: (1) allowing up to 6 States to conduct demonstration projects to test and evaluate whether family reunification can be facilitated by allowing a family to receive AFDC for the month prior to the month in which a child returns home from foster care; (2) a provision requiring that a child's case record indicate that the child's foster care provider was advised of the child's eligibility under the early and periodic screening, diagnosis, and treatment program under title XIX; and (3) a provision giving up to 10 States more flexible spending authority to establish and evaluate specified types of demonstration projects.

COMPREHENSIVE SUBSTANCE ABUSE PROGRAM

Comprehensive Substance Abuse Programs for Pregnant Women and Caretaker Parents with Children.—Title IV-B of the Social Security Act will be amended to authorize $75 million for fiscal years 1992 and 1993, $100 million for fiscal years 1994 and 1995, and $125 million for fiscal year 1996 in entitlement matching funds to pay for non-medical services provided to pregnant women and caretaker parents with children who are participating in comprehensive substance abuse programs, and for the costs of developing and administering these programs.

Funds will be allocated to States under the same formula that is used for other title IV-B services (which reflects per capita income and child population). Matching will be at the Medicaid matching rate. The Governor will have the authority to determine which agency in the State will be the administering agency for these programs.

Medicaid-eligible pregnant women and caretaker parents and their children will be eligible for both medical services (funded through the Medicaid program) and non-medical services (funded through the new title IV-B program). The State may also use these new title IV-B funds to pay for non-medical services to other low income pregnant women and caretaker parents and their children, regardless of their eligibility for Medicaid.

In order to be eligible for funds, the Governor must provide the Secretary of HHS with assurances that services provided with these funds will be coordinated with services provided under the Medicaid and Maternal and Child Health programs, and must report annually on the status of the programs funded under this title.

To be eligible for Federal funding, a program must provide substance abuse prevention, treatment, and follow-up services, and must include prenatal, gynecological, and pediatric medical services; home visitation; nutritional services; transportation services; child care; parenting education; and such other social and medical services as are determined to be necessary by the State and are allowed under regulations of the Secretary. Services may be provided in either residential or non-residential facilities.

The creation of comprehensive substance abuse programs will be optional with the States. Programs may be established in those areas that the State determines have particular need for such programs. The Department of Health and Human Services will be authorized to waive Medicaid statewideness and comparability requirements were necessary and appropriate to enable a State to establish a comprehensive substance abuse treatment program.

CHILD HEALTH INITIATIVES

Optional Medicaid Coverage for Children with Incomes below 185% of the Federal Poverty Level.—States will have the option of providing Medicaid coverage to children up to age 19 in families with incomes below 185 percent of the Federal poverty level. This flexibility will provide States the option to more quickly phase in mandatory coverage of children in families below 100 percent of the Federal poverty level, or to set higher income thresholds for different age groups. Separate age and income thresholds for foster care children could also be established by States or eligibility could be expanded only for foster care children.

Other Medicaid Eligibility Improvements.—Children under age six who are eligible for Medicaid on the basis of family income will remain eligible for six months at a time, so that they do not lose and regain eligibility due to minor changes in income. Children under age 19 who would lose Medicaid eligibility due to loss of eligibility for other programs will remain eligible for Medicaid until the State determines that they are not otherwise eligible. In addition, Medicaid coverage will be extended to all children who are SSI recipients in the fourteen "209(b)" States. For pregnant women, the asset test will be modified so that the value of an automobile, household goods, and certain other assets will not be counted.

Improved Medicaid Benefits.—States will have the option to provide home and community-based services under Medicaid for children with AIDS and children who are ventilator-dependent. States also will have the option to cover physician-prescribed home visitor nursing services for infants up to age six months.

Improved Reimbursement for Hospitals.—Adjustments in payments will be required for disproportionate share hospitals when services are provided during exceptionally long and costly stays of children up to age 19 (increased from age six). In addition, the use of day limits will be prohibited during hospitalization of these children in disproportionate share hospitals.

Medicaid Administrative Improvements.—Annual Federal matching rates will be calculated with more recent data, to more accurately reflect a State's current economic situation. States will have the option to use freedom-of-choice waivers to provide innovative delivery of pregnancy-related services for an initial period of three, rather than two years, and the waiver could be extended for a period of up to five years. In addition, the discretionary cap on the number of people who can participate in a home and community-based services waiver will be raised to a minimum of 500.

Other Health Care Provisions.—The Department of Health and Human Services will be required to: develop definitions of medically high risk pregnancies, medically high risk children, and medically uninsurable children; and develop a model health benefit package for pregnant women and children. In addition, information on the availability of substance abuse treatment for pregnant women will be made a part of annual State reports under the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant program.

Definition of Childhood Disability.—An advisory commission will be created to study the appropriateness of the current definition of disability for children under the SSI program and to make any recommendations it determines to be appropriate. The commission will be composed of recognized experts in the evaluation and treatment of disability in children, other experts in related fields, and experts in the administration of disability programs and will be appointed by the Secretary.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I have the high honor and distinct privilege to speak this afternoon on behalf of and in explication of S. 4, the Child Welfare and Preventive Services Act, which is the work of our distinguished and learned colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, Senator BENTSEN.

Mr. President, the Child Welfare and Preventive Services Act, introduced as S. 4, that enviable rank in the first five bills chosen by the majority leader for the consideration of the 102d Congress, is pursuant to a long and fruitful involvement which Senator BENTSEN has had with the subject of child welfare, dependency, and health. He has been able to do this despite the extraordinary demands of the chairman of the Finance Committee with respect to finances of the Nation and trade relations with the world.

It is nonetheless the fact that the Social Security Act is the responsibility of the Committee on Finance. That is why we deal with these measures. The subcommittee, which I happen to chair, is called the Subcommittee on Social Security and Family Policy.

I might just say in the presence of our most eminent historian that it is quite by accident that the Social Security Act is part of the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee. The event that took place was a reception in 1934. I believe it may be the time, when President Roosevelt had determined he would try to establish a Social Security Program, the main attention being on retirement benefits and unemployment benefits. His Secretary of Labor, Frances Perkins, was responsible for drawing these matters up. She knew exactly what she wanted. She knew exactly why she wanted them. She knew what the program would be and what would be its results. A very great Cabinet officer was Frances Perkins.

What she did not know was how to get it past the Supreme Court, which one after another had rejected what would pass Congress and the President. Frances Perkins was also a person immensely skilled at letting strong men think she needed their help. She had learned this in Albany with the Tammany leaders under Al Smith, and she was practicing it down here.

At the reception she ran into a Justice of the Supreme Court, who said, "Now, tell me, my dear; what are you involved with?"

"Oh," she said, "We have this wonderful plan called Social Security, but I fear it will never survive the scrutiny of these great Justices."

He said, "Well, now, tell me more about it." It had been introduced in the Labor and Welfare Committee by Senator Wagner; it had been associated with him and the Wagner Act. The Justice listened for a while and then said, "You know, my dear, what you need is the taxing power. If this is going to be a contribution taken from payrolls, it is going to be a tax. I would suggest you proceed in that manner."

So in fact, while we all think of the Social Security Act as having originated in this Chamber with Senator Wagner, it was the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, a still needlessly obscure gentleman named Dalton who introduced it in the House as a tax measure. It came over here; the Senate passed the tax measure, and it went to the Supreme Court, which looked at the Constitution, saying that Congress shall have the right to levy and collect taxes—fine. And that is how this most extraordinary social program ended in the Finance Committee.

That is how, also, our attention in these matters has turned more and more to the problem of family. In the Social Security Act of 1935, there was a tiny little provision called aid to dependent children, which simply picked up the widow's pensions which had been in place in the States for some 30 to 40 years. They came out of the progressive movement. There were no retirement benefits, and workmen's comp had begun, but only mildly. Widows needed benefits.

When asked about the aid to dependent children provision, in 1935, nobody paid any attention, but those who did would say that the beneficiary would be a West Virginia miner's widow. That was the symbol of a person destitute through no fault of her own, apparently no fault of her children or her husband who had died in the mine. There was no father. The man was in his grave.

As to this little program, there was no question, and no attention was paid to it. It gradually came to be, Mr. President, the most important governmental program affecting American children save only the public schools. We have now begun to acquire some longitudinal data about the impact of this program on children. We have just been able to establish, through the Institute of Social Science at the University of Michigan, the panel study of income dynamics which we began in the OEO program of 5,000 families—to follow them over time. We were just astonished that almost one-quarter of the children born in 1967 were on welfare before they reached age 18. That means, sir, they lived as paupers.

That is the condition of a welfare family and the aid to families with dependent children. Among minority children, sir, 72 percent receive AFDC benefits before reaching age 18. We now have good reason to infer that these rates are even higher or will turn out to be higher for children born in the eighties. We contrasted the incidence of dependency on welfare between zero, birth, to age 7, and the rates in the eighties were distinctly higher than in the sixties. So the figure might go over a quarter to a third.

That is not surprising. Last year, for the first time in our history, the history of our data, more than a quarter of American children were born out of wedlock; an unpromising beginning at the minimum. The fact is that a quarter of the children are born out of wedlock and a quarter are on welfare before they are age 18. There is a symmetry to those numbers that is not altogether coincidental, I would think.

In the eighties we also came upon a hideous epidemic of drug use. Crack cocaine appeared in the Bahamas in 1983 as a mutant, a new strain. It has swept through our inner cities such that if heroin in the 1960's helped give us the single-parent family, crack cocaine is giving us the no-parent children. Foster care admissions are at an unprecedented level. They rose, Mr. President, by one-third over the last 5 years. Foster caseloads grew from 270,000, just over a quarter million, to 360,000, just about one-third of a million, in 5 years, a one-third increase. We see every prospect for it to continue.

The single most important social problem we have in our country today, very simply, is the dissolution of family and the number of children being raised in economic situations where there are no authority structures available, no support structures available, random violence, and carelessness is epidemic. We have seen it arise in the phenomena of children murdering children with automatic weapons with the casualness of a child playing with a toy gun.

Senator BENTSEN is of the opinion that the time is apparent to address this problem. The problem of poverty in America today is overwhelmingly the problem of children. We are the first society in history in which the poorest people in the population are the children. There was a time when everybody was poor, for all practical purposes, but as industrialization developed, poverty became a problem of age, when you left the work force and had no income.

The Social Security Act took care of that with a combination of unemployment insurance, disability benefits, and retirement benefits. Truly poverty among the aged is minimal. It is frictional, as we say of unemployment. It is a residual phenomenon. We solved that problem.

Thirty years ago Sunday, President Kennedy was inaugurated, and very quickly in his administration we began addressing the Appalachian problems which he had encountered in his epic 1960 primary campaign in West Virginia where John F. Kennedy saw things he did not think existed any more. That mattered to him.

I was assistant Secretary of Labor and on the original body of the Commerce Department and the Labor Department which was planning what became the Appalachian Regional Development Program.

Those were problems of men who did not have good enough jobs or had no jobs, but give them good enough jobs and they do not need anything further from anybody.

There were the problems of the aged, and with health care in particular. Before the sixties were out, we had done a very great deal: The introduction of Medicare and increases in Social Security benefits. Out went the problem of poverty for the aged.

But, simultaneously, in came the problem of child poverty, a problem where a quarter of our children in the most affluent nation—or what was the most affluent nation—in the world are poor. That a quarter of the children should be paupers before they are aged 18 is an anomaly. We have not addressed it because it is new. It is, I think, a problem that could be described as postindustrial.

I report, Mr. President, that we are not the only nation in the world any longer where the largest poverty is concentrated among children. It is also true in Canada; it is also true in Sweden. They have very low levels of poverty in either of these countries, but the largest concentration of the poor are with children.

That it is the consequence of modern family arrangements I cannot doubt, but it is nonetheless with us. Senator BENTSEN's plan is to begin for the first time in any serious way to try to use social intervention in families before they break up, and before children end up in foster care.

The first title of his measure would add $1.65 billion for this over the next 5 years. Let us be clear, because Senator BENTSEN would wish me to be very clear in this matter; we are undertaking to do something we do not know how to do. If we knew how to do this, we would be doing it. We have not made any very large effort to do it, because it is a new problem.

Twenty-six years ago, I brought this matter to the attention of President Johnson. He very much agreed. But people did not know what he was talking about when he talked about it. "What do you mean?"

We were still thinking in terms of the social problems we associate with industrialization—unemployment, injury, age, the problems of the coal mines, steel mills, et cetera. Child poverty was not one of these problems; the fact itself was simply new.

In the main, the idea of dealing with this was rejected 25 years ago and, sir, we see the consequences of this on our streets today—dead children, murdered by children, children having children, families disappearing, foster care swelling.

We are going to put in a title for family preventive services to deal with an epidemic of abandoned children and children put out in foster care. We are going to move then to a second provision that provides one-half billion dollars over 5 years for the treatment of pregnant women, who are using illegal substances, primarily crack cocaine.

It would astound you, sir, and you would know this as chairman of Appropriations, but it is still an astounding fact that Medicaid does not provide for the reimbursement of treatment of pregnant women addicted to cocaine which affects children in utero, as the saying is. It is simple, sir, why this is so. It is so because we do not have a treatment. The Medicaid services are designed, as are Medicare, around specific medical procedures. You have appendicitis, you have your appendix out. You have the operation, and there are prescribed fees and so forth. And we have treatments for heroin abuse developed at Rockefeller University in New York by Vincent Dole—methadone treatment. If you come in to a hospital with heroin addiction symptoms, they treat you with methadone; you look it up in a Medicaid book, and it says methadone treatment so much per day or week. There is nothing in the book for crack cocaine, because we have no treatment.

The health care financing agency has come along and said that is crazy, that is nonsense, we will do something. Miss Walinski, a very able administrator, has given us a letter to that effect.

Now Senator BENTSEN wants us to provide for the actual treatment of the addicted females, so that whatever else they do, they do not give birth to an addicted child. I cannot doubt that there are Members of the Senate who have seen a crack baby, and if you have ever done that, you have never seen anything like it. You will not forget what you have seen—to hold those little infants, 3 pounds, in your hand and know it is life which is already spoiled and never to be complete. It is happening all over our cities.

We have not only to look after these particularly hideous misfortunes, but the general problem of health care. Title III of the Senator's bill provides for an improvement in health care for families with incomes up to 185 percent of the poverty level, and this is the beginning, basically, of health insurance for our children.

Mr. President, we have great expectations for this legislation, but we do know that we do not know enough. There is very careful evaluation measures provided here that will keep track of what we spend and what we get for it. This may be the most promising aspect of all.

So, Mr. President, I hope I am not taking too much of the Senate's time. I do not think one could do that in the cause of children. I know Senator BENTSEN feels the same way.

By Mr. DODD (for himself, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. JEFFORDS, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. PELL, Mr. SIMON, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. GORE, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. REID, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. EXON, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. RIEGLE and Mr. BRYAN):

S. 5. A bill to grant employees family and temporary medical leave under certain circumstances, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE ACT

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce S. 5, the Family Medical Leave Act of 1991. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by the distinguished majority leader, Senator MITCHELL; Senator KENNEDY, the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee; Senator PACKWOOD; and more than 30 other cosponsors. A similar bill was introduced in the other body as H.R. 2.

Mr. President, as we look back at the accomplishments of the 101st Congress, I think few would argue that 1990 was the most successful year for America's working families in over a quarter of a century. The passage of the comprehensive child care legislation, which I might add not only did we pass the authorizing legislation but an appropriation of a significant amount of dollars in pressing times was also adopted, and I might point out that was done so with the tremendous support of the presiding President pro tempore of the Senate, and I thank him personally for that once again, we were able to pass that legislation and put some decent dollars in that program, a major extension of Head Start, and other human service programs, generous changes in Medicare eligibility criteria are just a few of the many accomplishments that we in this Congress in the 101st made on behalf of American families.

Unfortunately, one critical piece of legislation, the Family Medical Leave Act, never became law last year. Congress approved the Family and Medical Leave Act in June, but it was vetoed by President Bush shortly thereafter. The legislation that we are introducing today is virtually identical to the legislation which passed both Houses by wide bipartisan majorities in the previous Congress.

I believe that the American family, the children of this Nation, certainly have cause for optimism in the 102d Congress. Despite the President's veto last year, the President is on record in support of the need for family leave policies. And, as I just mentioned, both Houses have already approved this compromise legislation by wide margins. Many Members of both bodies who felt that our original bill went too far feel this compromise language is workable and fair to workers and employers alike. I believe that 1991 is the year that family medical leave legislation will become law.

We all know the demographics which make family leave such an urgent national priority. We also know we are one of only two industrialized places in the entire world without national family leave policies. All major competitors, including West Germany, Japan, Canada, as well as a dozen Third World nations have recognized there is a national interest in helping families balance work and family responsibilities.

The bottom line is this. Parents ought to be able to have jobs and their families as well, and parents ought to be able to deal with rare family crises without losing those jobs. As a nation, all of us have a stake in that: Morally, socially, economically, and politically.

What do American families do now when a crisis hits? The sad news, Mr. President, is that many working people are on their own, caught in a Hobson's choice between their families and their jobs.

Let us set aside the stories we heard from parents in nine hearings across the Nation in the past 4 years; good people and productive workers, losing their jobs because they have families, as well. Let's just look at the numbers.

According to a recent survey of Fortune 1,500 companies, only half the employers surveyed offered critical infant-mother bonding leave beyond the child birth related disability period. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce reported a survey which revealed that 82 percent of all employers provide no leave to care for sick children; 85 percent provide no leave for elder care; and 75 percent offer no leave for fathers. Only six States and about a quarter of employers offer leave time for adoption, which most adoption agencies absolutely require if you are going to adopt an infant.

A survey in my home State of Connecticut, Mr. President, one of the most progressive States in the Nation, revealed that fewer than 10 percent of the 750 firms surveyed offered infant care leave over and above normal sick leave policies. As a nation, Mr. Presidsent, I believe we can and must do a better job.

The Family and Medical Leave Act is a basic, simple idea and the cost is very, very small. The compromise version of the bill, which we are introducing today, would provide 12 weeks of unpaid leave for birth, adoption, or the serious illness of an immediate family member: Yourself, your child, your spouse, or your elderly parent; 12 weeks total for all these family emergencies, with no separate medical leave provision as in our original legislation. Job protection during the key family crises, which can remove the primary breadwinner from the labor force and cripple a family's economic security.

What is the cost of this legislation? Well, it does not cost the Federal Government 1 red cent. There will be no request of the Appropriations Committee for money for this particular proposition. And, according to the General Accounting Office study, the cost to American businesses will be less than $5.30 per covered worker per year.

Mr. President, the chamber of commerce estimates that a survey of businesses and their benefits amounts to something in excess of $8,000 a year; that is total benefit, the total benefit package. If we were to add it all up, that is what it amounts to. What we are talking about here is $5.30 in addition to the $8,000 in benefits already provided. Mr. President, that amounts to about 2 cents a day; 2 cents a day to cover families for 12 weeks unpaid leave during a serious family crisis.

Family leave is not a new issue. In over a dozen congressional hearings over the past 4 years, we have developed one of the most extensive legislative records ever in support of this legislation. We have before us today a compromise bill which provides job security for American parents in a way that is fair and affordable to American businesses.

We all want profamily policies which make it economically feasible for parents to be home with their children. That is what this legislation is all about. We all want adoption to expand a woman's pregnancy-related options. That is what this legislation is all about. We are all concerned about children, at risk of drug abuse, children whose future productivity as employees depends upon the early intervention which only parental bonding can provide. Mr. President, that is what this legislation is all about, as well.

I believe that now is the time to pass this legislation. Together, I think we can achieve the mutual goals we all espouse.

Mr. President, this is just a human decency piece of legislation. When we think of the various situations in which families find themselves, primarily birth, adoption, or serious illness of a child, there are many Members of this body who have been faced in the past with a similar family crisis. Colleagues of ours have had tragedies at home, of one kind or another. We all know how we feel when that occurs.

No one ever asks where a particular Senator may be if a vote or hearing occurs and they have a child who is in a hospital, in an emergency room. In fact, we would be horrified in some ways were that colleague to show up for a meaningless vote and not be with their families.

Mr. President, all we are asking is that average working families not be faced with the same kind of situation others find themselves in today; that is, where the employer says you have to choose between your family member or your job.

We ought to be able to say for a few weeks you are not going to get paid, but if you have that crisis at home, then spend time with your family.

Adoption, Mr. President, is a serious problem in this country. There are a lot of children who desperately need homes. They need love; they need caring. Yet, we also know it is very difficult for families to necessarily get time away from their jobs in order to be there for that period of bonding. Most families who adopt are not the most affluent in this country and they are not the poorest, out of necessity. Most of them are middle-income, hardworking families who take on the additional burden of an unloved child.

It ought to be part of our national agenda to see to it that those families have the opportunity to do that, to take a child that is not loved, that is not cared for, that can be brought into a family environment and given a chance, given an opportunity. For a few weeks, without being paid, for a family member to be away from his or her job without losing it ought to be something we are able to do here without significant debate or hardship.

Mr. President, for 2 cents a day, that is not an overly burdensome problem we lay off on American employers. So I urge the rest of my colleagues here—and I know many of them have expressed an interest in being supportive of this legislation—to take a look at the compromise bill we have introduced, go over it, see if there are some ideas or suggestions to add to it.

If we can accommodate you, we will. We will try to pass this as soon as possible, and hopefully the administration will take a different view than they did in the previous Congress and support us in this effort. We ought to be dedicated to do everything possible to make it a possibility that American families can stay together, can survive crises together. That is what this legislation is designed to do.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Sec. 301. Establishment.
Sec. 302. Duties.
Sec. 303. Membership.
Sec. 304. Compensation.
Sec. 305. Powers.
Sec. 306. Termination.

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Sec. 401. Effect on other laws.
Sec. 402. Effect on existing employment benefits.
Sec. 403. Encouragement of more generous leave policies.
Sec. 404. Effective dates.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the number of single-parent households and two-parent households in which the single parent or both parents work is increasing significantly;

(2) it is important for the development of children and the family unit that fathers and mothers be able to participate in early childrearing and the care of family members who have serious health conditions;

(3) the lack of employment policies to accommodate working parents can force individuals to choose between job security and parenting;

(4) there is inadequate job security for employees who have serious health conditions that prevent them from working for temporary periods;

(5) due to the nature of the roles of men and women in our society, the primary responsibility for family caretaking often falls on women, and such responsibility affects the working lives of women more than it affects the working lives of men; and

(6) employment standards that apply to one gender only have serious potential for encouraging employers to discriminate against employees and applicants for employment who are of that gender.

(b) PURPOSES.—It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to balance the demands of the workplace with the needs of families, to promote the stability and economic security of families, and to promote national interests in preserving family integrity;

(2) to entitle employees to take reasonable leave for medical reasons, for the birth or adoption of a child, and for the care of a child, spouse, or parent who has a serious health condition;

(3) to accomplish the purposes described in paragraphs (1) and (2) in a manner that accommodates the legitimate interests of employers;

(4) to accomplish the purposes described in paragraphs (1) and (2) in a manner that, consistent with the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, minimizes the potential for employment discrimination on the basis of sex by ensuring generally that leave is available for eligible medical reasons (including maternity-related disability) and for compelling family reasons, on a gender-neutral basis; and

(5) to promote the goal of equal employment opportunity for women and men, pursuant to such clause.

TITLE I—GENERAL REQUIREMENTS FOR LEAVE

SEC. 101. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this title:

(1) COMMERCE.—The terms "commerce" and "industry or activity affecting commerce" mean any activity, business, or industry in commerce or in which a labor dispute would hinder or obstruct commerce or the free flow of commerce, and include "commerce" and any "industry affecting commerce", as defined in paragraphs (3) and (1), respectively, of section 120 of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947 (29 U.S.C. 142 (3) and (1)).

(2) ELIGIBLE EMPLOYEE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term "eligible employee" means any "employee", as defined in section 3(e) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(e)), who has been employed by the employer with respect to whom leave is sought under section 102 for at least—

(i) 1,000 hours of service during the previous 12-month period; and

(ii) 12 months.

(B) EXCLUSIONS.—The term "eligible employee" does not include—

(i) any Federal officer or employee covered under subchapter V of chapter 63 of title 5, United States Code (as added by title II); or

(ii) any employee of an employer who is employed at a worksite at which such employer employs less than 50 employees if the total number of employees employed by that employer within 75 miles of that worksite is less than 50.

(3) EMPLOY; STATE.—The terms "employ" and "State" have the same meanings given such terms in subsections (g) and (c), respectively, of section 3 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(g) and (c)).

(4) EMPLOYEE.—The term "employee" means any individual employed by an employer.

(5) EMPLOYER.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term "employer"—

(i) means any person engaged in commerce or in any industry or activity affecting commerce who employs 50 or more employees for each working day during each of 20 or more calendar workweeks in the current or preceding calendar year;

(ii) includes—

(I) any person who acts, directly or indirectly, in the interest of an employer to any of the employees of such employer; and

(II) any successor in interest of an employer; and

(iii) includes any "public agency", as defined in section 3(x) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(x)).

(B) PUBLIC AGENCY.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)(iii), a public agency shall be considered to be a person engaged in commerce or in an industry or activity affecting commerce.

(6) EMPLOYMENT BENEFITS.—The term "employment benefits" means all benefits provided or made available to employees by an employer, including group life insurance, health insurance, disability insurance, sick leave, annual leave, educational benefits, and pensions, regardless of whether such benefits are provided by a policy or practice of an employer or through an "employee welfare benefit plan", as defined in section 3(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(1)).

(7) HEALTH CARE PROVIDER.—The term "health care provider" means—

(A) a doctor of medicine or osteopathy that is legally authorized to practice medicine and surgery by the State in which the doctor performs such function or action; or

(B) any other person determined by the Secretary to be capable of providing health care services.

(8) PARENT.—The term "parent" means the biological parent of the child or an individual who stood in loco parentis to a child when the child was a son or daughter.

(9) PERSON.—The term "person" has the same meaning given such term in section 3(a) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(a)).

(10) REDUCED LEAVE SCHEDULE.—The term "reduced leave schedule" means leave scheduled for fewer than the usual number of hours per workweek, or hours per workday, of an employee.

(11) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Labor.

(12) SERIOUS HEALTH CONDITION.—The term "serious health condition" means an illness, injury, impairment, or physical or mental condition that involves—

(A) inpatient care in a hospital, hospice, or residential medical care facility; or

(B) continuing treatment or continuing supervision by a health care provider.

(13) SON OR DAUGHTER.—The term "son or daughter" means a biological, adopted, or foster child, a stepchild, a legal ward, or a child of a person standing in loco parentis, who is—

(A) under 18 years of age; or

(B) 18 years of age or older and incapable of self-care because of a mental or physical disability.

SEC. 102. LEAVE REQUIREMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) ENTITLEMENT TO LEAVE.—Subject to section 103, an eligible employee shall be entitled to 12 workweeks of leave during any 12-month period—

(A) because of the birth of a son or daughter of the employee;

(B) because of the placement of a son or daughter with the employee for adoption or foster care;

(C) to care for the son, daughter, spouse, or parent of the employee who has a serious health condition; or

(D) because of a serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform the functions of the position of such employee.

(2) EXPIRATION OF ENTITLEMENT.—The entitlement to leave under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) shall expire at the end of the 12-month period beginning on the date of the birth or placement involved.

(3) INTERMITTENT LEAVE.—Leave under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1) shall not be taken by an employee intermittently unless the employee and the employer of the employee agree otherwise. Subject to subsection (e), leave under subparagraph (C) or (D) of paragraph (1) may be taken intermittently when medically necessary.

(b) REDUCED LEAVE.—On agreement between the employer and the employee, leave under subsection (a) may be taken on a reduced leave schedule. Such reduced leave schedule shall not result in a reduction in the total amount of leave to which such employee is entitled.

(c) UNPAID LEAVE PERMITTED.—Except as provided in subsection (d), leave under subsection (a) may consist of unpaid leave.

(d) RELATIONSHIP TO PAID LEAVE.—

(1) UNPAID LEAVE.—If an employer provides paid leave for fewer than 12 workweeks, the additional weeks of leave necessary to attain the 12 workweeks of leave required under this title may be provided without compensation.

(2) SUBSTITUTION OF PAID LEAVE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An eligible employee may elect, or an employer may require the employee, to substitute any of the accrued paid vacation leave, personal leave, or family leave of the employee for leave provided under subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subsection (a)(1) for any part of the 12-week period of such leave under such subparagraphs.

(B) HEALTH CONDITION.—An eligible employee may elect, or an employer may require the employee, to substitute any of the accrued paid vacation leave, personal leave, or medical or sick leave of the employee for leave provided under paragraph (1)(D) of subsection (a) for any part of the 12-week period of such leave under such paragraph, except that nothing in this Act shall require an employer to provide paid sick leave or paid medical leave in any situation in which such employer would not normally provide any such paid leave.

(e) FORESEEABLE LEAVE.—

(1) REQUIREMENT OF NOTICE.—In any case in which the necessity for leave under subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (a)(1) is foreseeable based on an expected birth or adoption, the eligible employee shall provide the employer with prior notice of such expected birth or adoption in a manner that is reasonable and practicable.

(2) DUTIES OF EMPLOYEE.—In any case in which the necessity for leave under subparagraph (C) or (D) of subsection (a)(1) is foreseeable based on planned medical treatment or supervision, the employee—

(A) shall make a reasonable effort to schedule the treatment or supervision so as not to disrupt unduly the operations of the employer, subject to the approval of the health care provider of the employee or the health care provider of the son, daughter, spouse, or parent of the employee; and

(B) shall provide the employer with prior notice of the treatment or supervision in a manner that is reasonable and practicable.

(f) SPOUSES EMPLOYED BY THE SAME EMPLOYER.—In any case in which a husband and wife entitled to leave under subsection (a) are employed by the same employer, the aggregate number of workweeks of leave to which both may be entitled may be limited to 12 workweeks during any 12-month period, if such leave is taken—

(1) under subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (a)(1); or

(2) to care for a sick parent under subparagraph (C) of such subsection.

SEC. 103. CERTIFICATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—An employer may require that a claim for leave under subparagraph (C) or (D) of section 102(a)(1) be supported by a certification issued by the health care provider of the eligible employee or of the son, daughter, spouse, or parent of the employee, as appropriate. The employee shall provide a copy of such certification to the employer.

(b) SUFFICIENT CERTIFICATION.—Certification provided under subsection (a) shall be sufficient if it states—

(1) the date on which the serious health condition commenced;

(2) the probable duration of the condition;

(3) the appropriate medical facts within the knowledge of the health care provider regarding the condition; and

(4)(A) for purposes of leave under section 102(a)(1)(C), an estimate of the amount of time that the eligible employee is needed to care for the son, daughter, spouse, or parent; and

(B) for purposes of leave under section 102(a)(1)(D), a statement that the employee is unable to perform the functions of the position of the employee.

(c) SECOND OPINION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which the employer has reason to doubt the validity of the certification provided under subsection (a) for leave under subparagraph (C) or (D) of section 102(a)(1), the employer may require, at the expense of the employer, that the eligible employee obtain the opinion of a second health care provider designated or approved by the employer concerning any information certified under subsection (b) for such leave.

(2) LIMITATION.—A health care provider designated or approved under paragraph (1) shall not be employed on a regular basis by the employer.

(d) RESOLUTION OF CONFLICTING OPINIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which the second opinion described in subsection (c) differs from the opinion in the original certification provided under subsection (a), the employer may require, at the expense of the employer, that the employee obtain the opinion of a third health care provider designated or approved jointly by the employer and the employee concerning the information certified under subsection (b).

(2) FINALITY.—The opinion of the third health care provider concerning the information certified under subsection (b) shall be considered to be final and shall be binding on the employer and the employee.

(e) SUBSEQUENT RECERTIFICATION.—The employer may require that the eligible employee obtain subsequent recertifications on a reasonable basis.

SEC. 104. EMPLOYMENT AND BENEFITS PROTECTION.

(a) RESTORATION TO POSITION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any eligible employee who takes leave under section 102 for the intended purpose of the leave shall be entitled, on return from such leave—

(A) to be restored by the employer to the position of employment held by the employee when the leave commenced; or

(B) to be restored to an equivalent position with equivalent employment benefits, pay, and other terms and conditions of employment.

(2) LOSS OF BENEFITS.—The taking of leave under section 102 shall not result in the loss of any employment benefit accrued prior to the date on which the leave commenced.

(3) LIMITATIONS.—Except as provided in subsection (b), nothing in this section shall be construed to entitle any restored employee to—

(A) the accrual of any seniority or employment benefits during any period of leave; or

(B) any right, benefit, or position of employment other than that to which the employee was entitled to on the date the leave was commenced.

(4) CERTIFICATION.—As a condition of restoration under paragraph (1), the employer may have a policy that requires each employee to receive certification from the health care provider of the employee that the employee is able to resume work, except that nothing in this paragraph shall supersede a valid State or local law or a collective bargaining agreement that governs the return to work of employees taking leave under section 102(a)(1)(D).

(5) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit an employer from requiring an employee on leave under section 102 to periodically report to the employer on the status and intention of the employee to return to work.

(b) MAINTENANCE OF HEALTH BENEFITS.—During any period that an eligible employee takes leave under section 102, the employer shall maintain coverage under any "group health plan" (as defined in section [5000(b)(1)] of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) for the duration of such leave at the level and under the conditions coverage would have been provided if the employee had continued in employment continuously from the date the employee commenced the leave until the date the employee is restored under subsection (a).

SEC. 105. PROHIBITED ACTS.

(a) INTERFERENCE WITH RIGHTS.—

(1) EXERCISE OF RIGHTS.—It shall be unlawful for any employer to interfere with, restrain, or deny the exercise of or the attempt to exercise, any right provided under this title.

(2) DISCRIMINATION.—It shall be unlawful for any employer to discharge or in any other manner discriminate against any individual for opposing any practice made unlawful by this title.

(b) INTERFERENCE WITH PROCEEDINGS OR INQUIRIES.—It shall be unlawful for any person to discharge or in any other manner discriminate against any individual because such individual—

(1) has filed any charge, or has instituted or caused to be instituted any proceeding, under or related to this title;

(2) has given, or is about to give, any information in connection with any inquiry or proceeding relating to any right provided under this title; or

(3) has testified, or is about to testify in any inquiry or proceeding relating to any right provided under this title.

SEC. 106. ADMINISTRATIVE ENFORCEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall issue such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out this section, including rules and regulations concerning notice of foreseeable leave, service of complaints, notice of hearings, answers and amendments to complaints, and copies of orders and records of proceedings.

(b) CHARGES.—

(1) FILING.—Any person (including a class or organization, on behalf of any person) alleging an act that violates any provision of this title may file a charge respecting such violation with the Secretary. Charges shall be in such form and contain such information as the Secretary shall require by regulation.

(2) NOTIFICATION.—Not more than 10 days after the Secretary receives notice of a charge under paragraph (1), the Secretary—

(A) shall serve a notice of the charge on the person charged with the violation; and

(B) shall inform such person and the charging party as to the rights and procedures provided under this title.

(3) TIME OF FILING.—A charge shall not be filed more than 1 year after the date of the last event constituting the alleged violation.

(4) SETTLEMENT PRIOR TO DETERMINATION BY SECRETARY.—The charging party and the person charged with the violation under this section may enter into a settlement agreement concerning the violation alleged in the charge before any determination is reached by the Secretary under subsection (c). Such an agreement shall be effective unless the Secretary determines, not later than 30 days after the notice of the proposed agreement is received, that the agreement is not generally consistent with the purposes of this title.

(c) INVESTIGATION AND COMPLAINT ON NOTICE OF A CHARGE.—

(1) INVESTIGATION.—Not later than 60 days after the Secretary receives any charge respecting a violation of this title, the Secretary shall investigate the charge and issue a complaint based on the charge or dismiss the charge.

(2) DISMISSAL.—If, after conducting an investigation under paragraph (1), the Secretary determines that there is no reasonable basis for the charge that is being investigated, the Secretary shall dismiss the charge and promptly notify the charging party and the respondent as to the dismissal.

(3) COMPLAINT BASED ON CHARGE.—If, after conducting an investigation under paragraph (1), the Secretary determines that there is a reasonable basis for the charge, the Secretary shall issue a complaint based on the charge and promptly notify the charging party and the respondent as to the issuance.

(4) SETTLEMENT WITH SECRETARY.—On the issuance of a complaint under paragraph (3), the Secretary and the respondent may enter into a settlement agreement concerning a violation alleged in the complaint. Any such settlement shall not be entered into over the objection of the charging party, unless the Secretary determines that the settlement provides a full remedy for the charging party.

(5) CIVIL ACTIONS.—If, at the end of the 60-day period referred to in paragraph (1), the Secretary—

(A) has not made a determination under paragraph (2) or (3);

(B) has dismissed the charge under paragraph (2); or

(C) has disapproved a settlement agreement under subsection (b)(4) or has not entered into a settlement agreement under paragraph (4) of this subsection;

the charging party may elect to bring a civil action under section 107. Such election shall bar further administrative action by the Secretary with respect to the violation alleged in the charge.

(6) COMPLAINT AND RELIEF ON INITIATIVE OF SECRETARY.—

(A) COMPLAINT.—The Secretary may issue and serve a complaint alleging a violation of this title on the basis of information and evidence gathered as a result of an investigation initiated by the Secretary pursuant to section 108.

(B) RELIEF.—On the issuance of a complaint under subparagraph (A), the Secretary may petition the United States district court for the district in which the violation is alleged to have occurred, or in which the respondent resides or transacts business, for appropriate temporary relief or a restraining order. On the filing of any such petition, the court shall cause notice of the petition to be served on the respondent, and the court shall have jurisdiction to grant to the Secretary such temporary relief or restraining order as the court determines just and proper.

(d) RIGHTS OF PARTIES.—

(1) SERVICE OF COMPLAINT.—In any case in which a complaint is issued under subsection (c), the Secretary shall, not later than 10 days after the date on which the complaint is issued, cause to be served on the respondent a copy of the complaint.

(2) PARTIES TO COMPLAINT.—Any person filing a charge alleging a violation of this title may elect to be a party to any complaint filed by the Secretary alleging such violation. Such election must be made prior to the commencement of a hearing.

(3) CIVIL ACTION.—The failure of the Secretary to comply in a timely manner with any obligation assigned to the Secretary under this title shall entitle the charging party to elect, at the time of such failure, to bring a civil action under section 107.

(e) CONDUCT OF HEARING.—

(1) PROSECUTION BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall have the duty to prosecute any complaint issued under subsection (c).

(2) HEARING.—An administrative law judge shall conduct a hearing on the record with respect to any complaint issued under this title. The hearing shall be commenced not later than 60 days after the issuance of such complaint, unless the judge, in the discretion of the judge, determines that the purposes of this Act would best be furthered by commencement of the action after the expiration of such period.

(f) FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—After a hearing conducted under this section, the administrative law judge shall promptly make findings of fact and conclusions of law, and, if appropriate, issue an order for relief as provided in section 109.

(2) NOTIFICATION CONCERNING DELAY.—The administrative law judge shall inform the parties, in writing, of the reason for any delay in making such findings and conclusions if such findings and conclusions are not made within 60 days after the conclusion of such hearing.

(g) FINALITY OF DECISION; REVIEW.—

(1) FINALITY.—The decision and order of the administrative law judge under this section shall become the final decision and order of the Secretary unless, on appeal by an aggrieved party taken not later than 30 days after the entry of the order, the Secretary modifies or vacates the decision, in which case the decision of the Secretary shall be the final decision.

(2) REVIEW.—Not later than 60 days after the entry of the final order of the Secretary under paragraph (1), any person aggrieved by such final order may seek a review of such order in the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the violation is alleged to have occurred or in which the employer resides or transacts business.

(3) JURISDICTION.—On the filing of the record of an order under this subsection with the court, the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and the judgment of the court shall be final, except that the judgment shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(h) COURT ENFORCEMENT OF ADMINISTRATIVE ORDERS.—

(1) POWER OF SECRETARY.—If an order of the Secretary is not appealed under subsection (g)(2), the Secretary may petition the United States district court for the district in which the violation is alleged to have occurred, or in which the respondent resides or transacts business, for the enforcement of the order of the Secretary, by filing in such court a written petition praying that such order be enforced.

(2) JURISDICTION.—On the filing of a petition under paragraph (1), the court shall have jurisdiction to make and enter a decree enforcing the order of the Secretary. In such a proceeding, the order of the Secretary shall not be subject to review.

(3) DECREE OF ENFORCEMENT.—If, on appeal of an order under subsection (g)(2), the United States court of appeals does not reverse or modify such order, such court shall have the jurisdiction to make and enter a decree enforcing the order of the Secretary.

SEC. 107. ENFORCEMENT BY CIVIL ACTION.

(a) RIGHT TO BRING CIVIL ACTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the limitations contained in this section, an eligible employee or any person, including a class or organization on behalf of any eligible employee, or the Secretary may bring a civil action against any employer (including any State employer) to enforce the provisions of this title in any appropriate court of the United States or in any State court of competent jurisdiction.

(2) NO CHARGE FILED.—Subject to paragraph (3), a civil action may be commenced under this subsection without regard to whether a charge has been filed under section 106(b).

(3) LIMITATIONS.—No civil action may be commenced under paragraph (1) if the Secretary—

(A) has approved a settlement agreement or has failed to disapprove a settlement agreement under section 106(b)(4) or 106(c)(4), as appropriate, if such action is based on a violation alleged in the charge and resolved by the agreement; or

(B) has issued a complaint under section 106(c)(3) or 106(c)(6), if such action is based upon a violation alleged in the complaint.

(4) ENFORCEMENT OF SETTLEMENT AGREEMENTS.—Notwithstanding paragraph (3)(A), a civil action may be commenced to enforce the terms of any such settlement agreement.

(5) TIMING OF COMMENCEMENT OF CIVIL ACTION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), no civil action may be commenced later than 1 year after the date of the last event that constitutes the alleged violation.

(B) EXCEPTION.—In any case in which—

(i) a timely charge is filed under section 106(b); and

(ii) the failure of the Secretary to issue a complaint or enter into a settlement agreement based on the charge (as provided under section 106(c)(4)) occurs later than 11 months after the date on which any alleged violation occurred; the charging party may commence a civil action not later than 60 days after the date of such failure.

(6) AGENCIES.—The Secretary shall not bring a civil action against any agency of the United States.

(7) EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION ON COMPLAINT.—On the filing of a complaint with the court under this subsection, the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive.

(b) VENUE.—An action brought under subsection (a) in a district court of the United States may be brought—

(1) in any appropriate judicial district under section 1391 of title 28, United States Code; or

(2) in the judicial district in the State in which—

(A) the employment records relevant to such violation are maintained and administered; or

(B) the aggrieved person worked or would have worked but for the alleged violation.

(c) NOTIFICATION OF THE SECRETARY; RIGHT TO INTERVENE.—A copy of the complaint in any action by an eligible employee under subsection (a) shall be served on the Secretary by certified mail. The Secretary shall have the right to intervene in a civil action brought by an employee under subsection (a).

(d) ATTORNEYS FOR THE SECRETARY.—In any civil action under subsection (a), attorneys appointed by the Secretary may appear for and represent the Secretary, except that the Attorney General and the Solicitor General shall conduct any litigation in the Supreme Court.

SEC. 108. INVESTIGATIVE AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—To ensure compliance with the provisions of this title, or any regulation or order issued under this title, the Secretary shall have, subject to subsection (c), the investigative authority provided under section 11(a) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 211(a)).

(b) OBLIGATION TO KEEP AND PRESERVE RECORDS.—Any employer shall keep and preserve records in accordance with section 11(c) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 211(c)) and in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

(c) REQUIRED SUBMISSIONS GENERALLY LIMITED TO AN ANNUAL BASIS.—The Secretary shall not under the authority of this section require any employer or any plan, fund, or program to submit to the Secretary any books or records more than once during any 12-month period, unless the Secretary has reasonable cause to believe there may exist a violation of this title or any regulation or order issued pursuant to this title, or is investigating a charge pursuant to section 106.

(d) SUBPOENA POWERS, ETC.—For the purposes of any investigation provided for in this section, the Secretary shall have the subpoena authority provided for under section 9 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 209).

SEC. 109. RELIEF.

(a) INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—

(1) CEASE AND DESIST.—On finding a violation under section 106, the administrative law judge shall issue an order requiring such person to cease and desist from any act or practice that violates this title.

(2) INJUNCTIONS.—In any civil action brought under section 107, the court may grant as relief against any employer (including any State employer) any permanent or temporary injunction, temporary restraining order, or other equitable relief as the court determines appropriate.

(b) MONETARY DAMAGES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any employer (including any State employer) that violates any provision of this title shall be liable to the injured party in an amount equal to—

(A) any wages, salary, employment benefits, or other compensation denied or lost to such eligible employee by reason of the violation, plus interest on the total monetary damages calculated at the prevailing rate; and

(B) an additional amount equal to the greater of—

(i) the amount determined under subparagraph (A), as liquidated damages; or

(ii) consequential damages, not to exceed 3 times the amount determined under such subparagraph.

(2) GOOD FAITH.—If an employer who has violated this title proves to the satisfaction of the administrative law judge or the court that the act or omission that violated this title was in good faith and that the employer had reasonable grounds for believing that the act or omission was not a violation of this title, such judge or the court may, in the discretion of the judge or court, reduce the amount of the liability provided for under this subsection to the amount determined under paragraph (1)(A).

(c) ATTORNEY'S FEES.—A prevailing party in an action described under this section (other than the United States) may be awarded a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs, in addition to any relief awarded. The United States shall be liable for costs in the same manner as a private person.

(d) LIMITATION.—Damages awarded under subsection (b) shall not accrue from a date that is later than 2 years prior to the date on which a charge is filed under section 106(b) or a civil action is brought under section 107.

SEC. 110. SPECIAL RULES CONCERNING EMPLOYEES OF LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the rights (including the rights under section 104, which shall extend throughout the period of leave of any employee under this section), remedies, and procedures under this Act shall apply to—

(1) any "local educational agency" (as defined in section 1471(12) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2891(12))) and its employees; and

(2) any private elementary and secondary school and its employees.

(b) LEAVE DOES NOT VIOLATE CERTAIN OTHER FEDERAL LAWS.—A local educational agency and a private elementary and secondary school shall not be in violation of the Education of the Handicapped Act (20 U.S.C. 1400 et seq.), section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794), or title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d et seq.), solely as a result of an eligible employee of such agency or school exercising the rights of such employee under this Act.

(c) INTERMITTENT LEAVE FOR INSTRUCTIONAL EMPLOYEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), in any case in which an employee employed principally in an instructional capacity by any such educational agency or school seeks to take leave under subparagraph (C) or (D) of section 102(a)(1) that is foreseeable based on planned medical treatment or supervision and the employee would be on leave for greater than 20 percent of the total number of working days in the period during which the leave would extend, the agency or school may require that such employee elect either—

(A) to take leave for periods of a particular duration, not to exceed the duration of the planned medical treatment or supervision; or

(B) to transfer temporarily to an available alternative position offered by the employer for which the employee is qualified, and that—

(i) has equivalent pay and benefits; and

(ii) better accommodates recurring periods of leave than the regular employment position of the employee.

(2) APPLICATION.—The elections described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) shall apply only with respect to an employee who complies with section 102(e)(2).

(d) RULES APPLICABLE TO PERIODS NEAR THE CONCLUSION OF AN ACADEMIC TERM.—The following rules shall apply with respect to periods of leave near the conclusion of an academic term in the case of any employee employed principally in an instructional capacity by any such educational agency or school:

(1) LEAVE MORE THAN 5 WEEKS PRIOR TO END OF TERM.—If the employee begins leave under section 102 more than 5 weeks prior to the end of the academic term, the agency or school may require the employee to continue taking leave until the end of such term, if—

(A) the leave is of at least 3 weeks duration; and

(B) the return to employment would occur during the 3-week period before the end of such term.

(2) LEAVE LESS THAN 5 WEEKS PRIOR TO END OF TERM.—If the employee begins leave under subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of section 102(a)(1) during the period that commences 5 weeks prior to the end of the academic term, the agency or school may require the employee to continue taking leave until the end of such term, if—

(A) the leave is of greater than 2 weeks duration; and

(B) the return to employment would occur during the 2-week period before the end of such term.

(3) LEAVE LESS THAN 3 WEEKS PRIOR TO END OF TERM.—If the employee begins leave under paragraph (A), (B), or (C) of section 102(a)(1) during the period that commences 3 weeks prior to the end of the academic term and the duration of the leave is greater than 5 working days, the agency or school may require the employee to continue to take leave until the end of such term.

(e) RESTORATION TO EQUIVALENT EMPLOYMENT POSITION.—For purposes of determinations under section 104(a)(1)(B) (relating to the restoration of an employee to an equivalent position), in the case of a local educational agency or a private elementary and secondary school, such determination shall be made on the basis of established school board policies and practices, private school policies and practices, and collective bargaining agreements.

(f) REDUCTION OF THE AMOUNT OF LIABILITY.—If a local educational agency or a private elementary and secondary school that has violated title I proves to the satisfaction of the administrative law judge or the court that the agency, school, or department had reasonable grounds for believing that the underlying act or omission was not a violation of such title, such judge or court may, in the discretion of the judge or court, reduce the amount of the liability provided for under section 109(b)(1) to the amount determined under subparagraph (A) of such section.

SEC. 111. NOTICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each employer shall post and keep posted, in conspicuous places on the premises of the employer where notices to employees and applicants for employment are customarily posted, a notice, to be prepared or approved by the Secretary, setting forth excerpts from, or summaries of, the pertinent provisions of this title and information pertaining to the filing of a charge.

(b) PENALTY.—Any employer that willfully violates this section shall be assessed a civil money penalty not to exceed $100 for each separate offense.

SEC. 112. REGULATIONS.

Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as are necessary to carry out this title (including regulations under section 106(a)).

TITLE II—LEAVE FOR CIVIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES

SEC. 201. LEAVE REQUIREMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Chapter 63 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER V—FAMILY LEAVE

"§ 6381. Definitions

"For purposes of this subchapter:

"(1) The term 'employee' means—

"(A) an 'employee', as defined by section 6301(2) of this title (excluding an individual employed by the government of the District of Columbia); and

"(B) an individual described in clause (v) or (ix) of such section; who has been employed for at least 12 months and completed at least 1,000 hours of service during the previous 12-month period.

"(2) The term 'serious health condition' means an illness, injury, impairment, or physical or mental condition that involves—

"(A) inpatient care in a hospital, hospice, or residential medical care facility; or

"(B) continuing treatment, or continuing supervision, by a health care provider.

"(3) The term 'son or daughter' means a biological, adopted, or foster child, a stepchild, a legal ward, or a child of a person standing in loco parentis, who is—

"(A) under 18 years of age; or

"(B) 18 years of age or older and incapable of self-care because of a mental or physical disability.

"(4) The term 'parent' means the biological parent of the child or an individual who stood in loco parentis to a child when the child was a son or daughter.

"§ 6382. Leave requirement

"(a)(1) An employee shall be entitled, subject to section 6383, to 12 workweeks of leave during any 12-month period—

"(A) because of the birth of a son or daughter of the employee;

"(B) because of the placement of a son or daughter with the employee for adoption or foster care;

"(C) in order to care for the son, daughter, spouse, or parent of the employee who has a serious health condition; or

"(D) because of a serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform the functions of the position of such employee.

"(2) The entitlement to leave under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) for a birth or placement of a son or daughter shall expire at the end of the 12-month period beginning on the date of such birth or placement.

"(3) Leave under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1) shall not be taken by an employee intermittently unless the employee and the employing agency agree otherwise. Leave under subparagraph (C) or (D) of paragraph (1) may be taken intermittently when medically necessary, subject to subsection (e).

"(b) On agreement between the employing agency and the employee, leave under this section may be taken on a reduced leave schedule. Such reduced leave schedule shall not result in a reduction in the total amount of leave to which the employee is entitled.

"(c) Except as provided in subsection (d), leave granted under subsection (a) may consist of unpaid leave.

"(d)(1) If an employing agency provides paid leave for fewer than 12 workweeks, the additional weeks of leave necessary to attain the 12 workweeks of leave required under this title may be provided without compensation.

"(2)(A) An employee may elect, or an employing agency may require the employee, to substitute for leave under subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subsection (a)(1) any of the accrued paid vacation leave, personal leave, or family leave of the employee for any part of the 12-week period of such leave under such paragraph.

"(B) An employee may elect, or an employing agency may require the employee, to substitute for leave under paragraph (1)(D) of subsection (a) any of the accrued paid vacation leave, personal leave, or medical or sick leave of the employee for any part of the 12-week period of such leave under such paragraph, except that nothing in this Act shall require an employing agency to provide paid sick leave or paid medical leave in any situation in which such employing agency would not normally provide any such paid leave.

"(e)(1) In any case in which the necessity for leave under subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (a)(1) is foreseeable based on an expected birth or adoption, the employee shall provide the employing agency with prior notice of such expected birth or adoption in a manner that is reasonable and practicable.

"(2) In any case in which the necessity for leave under subparagraph (C) or (D) of subsection (a)(1) is foreseeable based on planned medical treatment or supervision, the employee—

"(A) shall make a reasonable effort to schedule the treatment or supervision so as not to disrupt unduly the operations of the employing agency, subject to the approval of the health care provider of the employee or the health care provider of the son, daughter, spouse or parent of the employee; and

"(B) shall provide the employing agency with prior notice of the treatment or supervision in a manner that is reasonable and practicable.

"§ 6383. Certification

"(a) An employing agency may require that a claim for leave under subparagraph (C) or (D) of section 6382(a)(1), be supported by certification issued by the health care provider of the employee or of the son, daughter, spouse, or parent of the employer, as appropriate. The employee shall provide a copy of such certification to the employing agency.

"(b) A certification under subsection (a) shall be sufficient if it states—

"(1) the date on which the serious health condition commenced;

"(2) the probable duration of the condition;

"(3) the appropriate medical facts within the knowledge of the provider regarding the condition; and

"(4)(A) for purposes of leave under section 6382(a)(1)(C), an estimate of the amount of time that the eligible employee is needed to care for the son, daughter, spouse, or parent; and

"(B) for purposes of leave under section 6382(a)(1)(D), a statement that the employee is unable to perform the functions of the employee's position.

"(c)(1) In any case in which the employing agency has reason to doubt the validity of the certification provided under subsection (a) for leave under subparagraph (C) or (D) of section 6382(a)(1), the employing agency may require, at the expense of the agency, that the employee obtain the opinion of a second health care provider designated or approved by the employing agency concerning any information certified under subsection (b) for such leave.

"(2) Any health care provider designated or approved under paragraph (1) shall not be employed on a regular basis by the employing agency.

"(d)(1) In any case in which the second opinion described in subsection (c) differs from the original certification provided under subsection (a), the employing agency may require, at the expense of the agency, that the employee obtain the opinion of a third health care provider designated or approved jointly by the employing agency and the employee concerning the information certified under subsection (b).

"(2) The opinion of the third health care provider concerning the information certified under subsection (b) shall be considered to be final and shall be binding on the employing agency and the employee.

"(e) The employing agency may require that the employee obtain subsequent recertifications on a reasonable basis.

"§ 6384. Job protection

"(a) Any employee who takes leave under section 6382 for the intended purpose of the leave shall be entitled, upon return from such leave—

"(1) to be restored by the employing agency to the position of employment held by the employee when the leave commenced; or

"(2) to be restored to an equivalent position with equivalent employment benefits, pay, and other terms and conditions of employment.

"(b) The taking of leave under section 6382 shall not result in the loss of any employment benefit accrued prior to the date on which the leave commenced.

"(c) Nothing in this section shall be construed to entitle any restored employee to—

"(1) the accrual of any seniority or employment benefits during any period of leave; or

"(2) any right, benefit, or position of employment other than that to which the employee was entitled to on the date the leave was commenced.

"(d) As a condition to restoration under subsection (a), the employing agency may have a policy that requires each employee to receive certification from the health care provider of the employee that the employee is able to resume work.

"(e) Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit an employing agency from requiring an employee on leave under section 6382 to periodically report to the employing agency on the status and intention of the employee to return to work.

"§ 6385. Prohibition of coercion

"(a) An employee shall not directly or indirectly intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, any other employee for the purpose of interfering with the exercise of the rights of the employee under this subchapter.

"(b) For the purpose of this section, 'intimidate, threaten, or coerce' includes promising to confer or conferring any benefit (such as appointment, promotion, or compensation), or taking or threatening to take any reprisal (such as deprivation of appointment, promotion, or compensation).

"§ 6386. Health insurance

"An employee enrolled in a health benefits plan under chapter 89 who is placed in a leave status under section 6382 may elect to continue the health benefits enrollment of the employee while in leave status and arrange to pay into the Employees Health Benefits Fund (described in section 8909) through the employing agency of the employee, the appropriate employee contributions.

"§ 6387. Regulations

"The Office of Personnel Management shall prescribe regulations necessary for the administration of this subchapter. The regulations prescribed under this subchapter shall be consistent with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor under title I of the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1991.".

(2) The table of contents for chapter 63 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SUBCHAPTER V—FAMILY LEAVE AND TEMPORARY MEDICAL LEAVE

"6381. Definitions.
"6382. Leave requirement.
"6383. Certification.
"6384. Job protection.
"6385. Prohibition of coercion.
"6386. Health insurance.
"6387. Regulations.".

(b) EMPLOYEES PAID FROM NONAPPROPRIATED FUNDS.—Section 2105(c)(1) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out "53" and inserting in lieu thereof "53, subchapter V of chapter 63,".

TITLE III—COMMISSION ON LEAVE

SEC. 301. ESTABLISHMENT.

There is established a commission to be known as the Commission on Leave (hereinafter referred to in this title as the "Commission").

SEC. 302. DUTIES.

The Commission shall—

(1) conduct a comprehensive study of—

(A) existing and proposed policies relating to leave;

(B) the potential costs, benefits, and impact on productivity of such policies on employers; and

(C) alternative and equivalent State enforcement of this Act with respect to employees described in section 110(a); and

(2) not later than 2 years after the date on which the Commission first meets, prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report that may include legislative recommendations concerning coverage of businesses that employ fewer than 50 employees and alternative and equivalent State enforcement of this Act with respect to employees described in section 110(a).

SEC. 303. MEMBERSHIP.

(a) COMPOSITION.—

(1) APPOINTMENTS.—The Commission shall be composed of 12 voting members and 2 ex officio members to be appointed not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act as follows:

(A) SENATORS.—One Senator shall be appointed by the majority leader of the Senate, and one Senator shall be appointed by the minority leader of the Senate.

(B) MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—One member of the House of Representatives shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and one Member of the House of Representatives shall be appointed by the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

(C) ADDITIONAL MEMBERS.—

(i) APPOINTMENT.—Two members each shall be appointed by—

(I) the Speaker of the House of Representatives;

(II) the majority leader of the Senate;

(III) the minority leader of the House of Representatives; and

(IV) the minority leader of the Senate.

(ii) EXPERTISE.—Such members shall be appointed by virtue of demonstrated expertise in relevant family, temporary disability, and labor-management issues and shall include representatives of employers.

(2) EX OFFICIO MEMBERS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Secretary of Labor shall serve on the Commission as nonvoting ex officio members.

(b) VACANCIES.—Any vacancy on the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

(c) CHAIRPERSON AND VICE CHAIRPERSON.—The Commission shall elect a chairperson and a vice chairperson from among the members of the Commission.

(d) QUORUM.—Eight members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum for all purposes, except that a lesser number may constitute a quorum for the purpose of holding hearings.

SEC. 304. COMPENSATION.

(a) PAY.—Members of the Commission shall serve without compensation.

(b) TRAVEL EXPENSES.—Members of the Commission shall be allowed reasonable travel expenses, including a per diem allowance, in accordance with section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, when performing duties of the Commission.

SEC. 305. POWERS.

(a) MEETINGS.—The Commission shall first meet not later than 30 days after the date on which all members are appointed, and the Commission shall meet thereafter on the call of the chairperson or a majority of the members.

(b) HEARINGS AND SESSIONS.—The Commission may hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence as the Commission considers appropriate. The Commission may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before it.

(c) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—The Commission may secure directly from any Federal agency information necessary to enable it to carry out this Act. On the request of the chairperson or vice chairperson of the Commission, the head of such agency shall furnish such information to the Commission.

(d) EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR.—The Commission may appoint an Executive Director from the personnel of any Federal agency to assist the Commission in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

(e) USE OF FACILITIES AND SERVICES.—Upon the request of the Commission, the head of any Federal agency may make available to the Commission any of the facilities and services of such agency.

(f) PERSONNEL FROM OTHER AGENCIES.—On the request of the Commission, the head of any Federal agency may detail any of the personnel of such agency to assist the Commission in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

SEC. 306. TERMINATION.

The Commission shall terminate 30 days after the date of the submission of the report of the Commission to Congress.

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 401. EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.

(a) FEDERAL AND STATE ANTI-DISCRIMINATION LAWS.—Nothing in this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be construed to modify or affect any Federal or State law prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race, religion, color, national origin, sex, age, or handicapped status.

(b) STATE AND LOCAL LAWS.—Nothing in this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be construed to supersede any provision of any State and local law that provides greater employee leave rights than the rights established under this Act or any amendment made by this Act.

SEC. 402. EFFECT ON EXISTING EMPLOYMENT BENEFITS.

(a) MORE PROTECTIVE.—Nothing in this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be construed to diminish the obligation of an employer to comply with any collective bargaining agreement or any employment benefit program or plan that provides greater family and medical leave rights to employees than the rights provided under this Act or any amendment made by this Act.

(b) LESS PROTECTIVE.—The rights provided to employees under this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall not be diminished by any collective bargaining agreement or any employment benefit program or plan.

SEC. 403. ENCOURAGEMENT OF MORE GENEROUS LEAVE POLICIES.

Nothing in this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be construed to discourage employers from adopting or retaining leave policies more generous than any policies that comply with the requirements under this Act or any amendment made by this Act.

SEC. 404. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) TITLE III.—Title III shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) OTHER TITLES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), titles I and II and this title shall take effect 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS.—In the case of a collective bargaining agreement in effect on the effective date prescribed by paragraph (1), title I shall apply on the earlier of—

(A) the date of the termination of such agreement; or

(B) the date that occurs 12 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 405. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as are necessary to carry out this title not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues today in cosponsoring S. 5, the Family and Medical Leave Act.

Job protection during times of childbirth and family illness ought to be one of the most basic rights for working American families. Especially now with the economy in recession, job protection is even more important to the stability of American families.

To know that a worker has the flexibility to take care of a new born child or take care of an ailing parent without the fear of job loss ought not be remarkable. It ought to be a matter of course.

For that reason, enactment of a family and medical leave policy is a high priority for this Congress.

As we have all heard on many occasions, President Bush has advocated a kinder and gentler Nation.

Before an Illinois Republican Women's group in the fall of 1988, then Vice President Bush made his position clear. He said, and I quote,

> We also need to assure that women don't have to worry about getting their jobs back after having a child or caring for a child during a serious illness. That is what I mean when I talk about a gentler nation. That isn't fair the other way, and it's not right, and we've got to do something about that.

I agree. Unfortunately, between the time President Bush was running for the Presidency and the time he assumed office, the President changed his mind.

While we all from time to time have changed our minds about one subject or another, very rarely do we change our mind about the underlying premise of an issue.

I hope Congress can work together with the President this year to enact a basic assurance of job security for men and women during times of family crisis. For this is the basic premise of a family and medical leave policy.

We ought not force women to choose between their jobs and their families. Too many women have been forced to make a painful choice between the economic imperative of working to supplement their families' income and the anxiety of caring for a seriously ill child.

Too many women have had no job to return to after recuperating from bearing a child.

S. 5, the Family and Medical Leave Act would provide unpaid leave. Unpaid leave for birth, adoption, or care of a sick child. It would also provide unpaid leave for an employee's own serious medical illness or to care for an employee's seriously ill parent.

The United States is the only major industrialized country without a family or medical leave policy. In fact, most other industrialized countries provide some type of paid leave. But we are not talking about paid leave here, we are simply talking about unpaid leave, with the guarantee of a job to which to return.

This is an important bill for American women. It will offer women equal economic opportunity.

The number of women working today is greater than ever before.

Many of these women are working out of necessity. They need to work to raise their family's income to a level that will provide them with decent and safe housing, utilities, food, and other basic necessities. An increasing number of women are single parents who have no other option to provide for their families. But, the fact remains that fully 65 percent of married women are also in the work force.

When a family crisis occurs, such as when a child is diagnosed with a life-threatening illness like cancer and needs treatment immediately, in the absence of a national leave law, a job loss compounds the family crisis.

Protecting jobs for those who must take leave to care for their families in times of crisis is not unreasonable. It is humane.

Women earn less than men. Women comprise a disproportionate share of the poor and working poor.

While all families would benefit from the Family and Medical Leave Act, it is primarily American women who would reap the most benefit from enactment of a family leave policy.

I reject the argument that the Family and Medical Leave Act is an unprecedented mandate.

Congress has mandated a minimum wage. Congress has mandated employer contributions to ensure a minimum standard of living for the elderly and the disabled. Congress has mandated minimum standards to ensure a safe and healthy workplace for all Americans.

Congress enacted these laws to provide uniformity in the basic protections for American workers. A law providing job protection for family and medical leave would be no different.

Enactment of a family leave law will not alleviate the stress a family feels when faced with a serious illness of a child or loss in earnings when a family member takes leave. But it will alleviate the stress on the family when there is no job to return to.

Enactment of the Family and Medical Leave Act will ensure the most basic of protections for American families. It will offer women an equal economic opportunity.

I hope that my colleagues will join us in supporting S. 5 this year to ensure that no American is forced to choose between job and family.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the President's veto of the Family and Medical Leave Act in the last Congress and the subsequent failure of the House to override that veto, while disappointing, has not lessened our resolve to ensure that working people are able to care for their families and meet basic economic needs.

Existing family leave policies in this country are wholly inadequate to meet the needs of today's workers. That is why, today, we are reintroducing the Family and Medical Leave Act. We are sending a signal that we stand firmly behind our Nation's families and our commitment to enact a comprehensive and sound family leave policy.

The bill we are introducing today is simple justice. It is a reasonable and fair answer to the need to provide job security to employees without undue hardship on employers. A single mother shouldn't be forced to lose her job to take care of a dangerously ill child. A father should be able to count on returning to work after taking care of his family's emergency at home.

Fairness in the workplace will pay off for employers, too. Understanding the problems that families face will bring dividends in the way workers feel about their work. Instead of losing valuable productivity on the job, employers with leave policies in place report gains in productivity and retention of a loyal and experienced work-force.

The demographic revolution in the American work-force is having a profound effect on the lives of working men and women and their families. Today, more than half of the 45.6 million children in two-parent families have both parents in the work-force. The number of women working outside the home has increased 178 percent since 1950. More than one-half of all mothers with infants under 1 year of age now work outside the home. Two-thirds of mothers of children under the age of 3 work outside the home.

We are not strangers to these statistics. We have heard them here before. It is time we face up to the changing reality of our economy—single parents and two wage-earning parents dominate the work-force. It is time now to take action, to ensure that no longer will American workers have to face difficult choices as they seek to balance family and workplace responsibilities. The dual goals of family and work are important to our Nation's well-being. It is time we support working parents by providing flexible leave options which promote family stability and job security.

The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1991 will help ease the tremendous pressures parents face in balancing workplace and family responsibilities. It is essentially the same bill passed by the Senate on June 14 last year. That bill was the result of months of effort and was a carefully tuned compromise which sought to take into consideration the concerns of business and the needs of our Nation's working families.

This legislation requires companies of 50 or more employees to allow their permanent workers 12 weeks of unpaid leave per year for the birth of a baby or serious family illness. Data from my own State of Oregon, which has a family leave standard of 12 weeks, finds that businesses have had little trouble in complying with the standard.

Under this bill, only workers who have been on the job for 1 year or more and who have worked an average of half time or more during that year would be eligible for unpaid leave. Employees would be assured of reinstatement to the same or equivalent job upon their return, and would continue to receive health care coverage during their absence. The General Accounting Office estimates the cost of the bill to be no more than $188 million per year, most of which will result from the continuation of health insurance coverage for employees.

This bill is a reasonable approach. It seeks to meet the needs of families while helping businesses plan for workers taking leave. An estimated 95 percent of all firms, those with fewer than 50 employees, would be exempt from the bill's requirements. The Family and Medical Leave Act is not antibusiness. Indeed, many firms that already have leave policies in place report improved employee loyalty, reduced turnover and absenteeism, and enhanced productivity.

It seems clear that business owners and their employees will benefit mutually from an unpaid leave policy such as envisioned in this bill. I urge my colleagues and the Nation to rally behind this long overdue policy to help our Nation's families strike a balance between the needs of their loved ones and the demands of the workplace.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator DODD in cosponsoring the Family Leave Act of 1991. The bill is virtually identical to legislation that was passed in the last Congress by both the House and Senate but vetoed by the President.

It is unfortunate that Congress must again begin the long process toward enactment of this legislation that is critical to working families across the country. It is time for this long overdue measure to be enacted into law—and I hope that the 102d Congress will meet its responsibility.

Family and medical leave is a matter of simple workplace justice. No workers in America should have to choose between the job they need and the child they love. No Americans should lose their job because they must care for an elderly parent. Yet these are the choices that face working men and women every day, and I regret that President Bush's veto last year prevented us from remedying this injustice.

The structural changes occurring in the workplace require policies that recognize the increasing pressures on families. The entry of women in the workplace kept their family incomes from falling during the 1980's, but put more pressure on their families. The rising cost of long-term care for elderly parents requires more individual care from children who have less time to give such care, because they are juggling jobs and families of their own.

The strain that comes when a spouse or child is seriously ill is exacerbated by the stress of meeting increased personal needs and professional demands. Despite the basic changes in family life, employers have made few accommodations to help families meet these pressures.

This legislation is a major step forward for working families across the country. It is a humanitarian approach to changing family structures—and it makes sound economic sense. When workers lose their jobs for lack of family leave, we all pay the bill for unemployment compensation, food stamps, Medicaid, and other social costs.

The most important but most difficult loss to quantify is the loss of morale and productivity when workers are unable to meet their family responsibilities without fear of losing their jobs.

Other countries across the world recognize the need to provide family leave to workers. The United States stands alone with South Africa among industralized nations that deny such leave to working men and women to care for a sick parent or child. If we are serious about regaining our international competitiveness, then we must begin by correcting this basic injustice in our workplace.

The administration cannot have it both ways. If it is serious about helping families across the country, then it should support this legislation and help us enact it into law this year.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, it is unfortunate that the Family and Medical Leave Act is again before us. Last year, similar legislation passed the House and Senate but was then vetoed by President Bush. In June 1990, the House voted to override the President's veto but failed to achieve a two-third's majority. I hope we can be successful this year in overcoming the reservations of the President.

This compromise measure provides up to 12 weeks per year of unpaid job-protected leave for employees for medical reasons, and for parents upon the birth or adoption of a child, or to care for a seriously ill parent or child up to the age of 18. Businesses with less than 50 employees would be exempt from the bill.

The increasing numbers of mothers of childbearing age who have entered the work-force—as well as the growing number of older Americans in need of care—has made parental leave an issue of growing concern. Since 1947, the number of women in the Nation's work force has increased by 173 percent. Nationally, nearly 50 percent of mothers of children under the age of 1 are in the labor force.

Mr. President, as more and more families become two worker families, I am increasingly concerned that we find ways to reconcile the need to help families care for their families with the need for working parents to remain productive members of the work-force. I believe that the Family and Medical Leave Act addresses the concerns of working parents and provides appropriate job security for these families. Working parents should not be forced to choose between their jobs and caring for their families.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. CHAFEE):

S. 6. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide a voluntary system of flexible fundraising targets for Senate elections, to increase public disclosure of activities of Senators, to reduce special interest influence in Senate elections, to increase competition in politics, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

COMPREHENSIVE CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM AND ETHICS ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, for good reason the whole world is watching the Persian Gulf these days, and those of us in the Senate are no exception. We spent all of last week debating this crisis issue, and now, as the U.N. imposed deadline approaches, we will continue to watch the Persian Gulf, and we will continue to pray for peace.

Meanwhile, we have plenty of work ahead of us this year on the domestic front. As momentous as the confrontation in the Middle East is, there is still an American agenda that demands action; that is why on this first day open to legislation, I am introducing five bills—designated Senate bills 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10—all of them legislative initiatives that Senate Republicans believe are priority issues for the 102d Congress.

S. 6—CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

Mr. President, today I am introducing Senate bill 6, the Comprehensive Campaign Finance Reform and Ethics Act of 1991.

If last year's elections taught us anything at all, it taught us it is time for reform: Incumbents are laughing all the way to reelection, while the cost of running for office is approaching the obscene.

This bill builds upon last year's Republican reform initiative by adding several new provisions—a provision on flexible fundraising targets, which were recommended by the Mitchell-Dole panel of campaign finance experts; a provision on ethics-in-government; and a provision requiring a partial ban on the roll-over of campaign funds.

ETHICS.

The Comprehensive Campaign Finance Reform and Ethics Act also contains a provision that will require the public disclosure of all congressional contacts with Federal agencies concerning enforcement matters.

Mr. President, if a Member or his staff intervenes with a Federal regulator, this intervention should be publicly disclosed. And if the intervention is publicly disclosed, it should be publicly defended.

Don't get me wrong. Members of Congress should go to bat on behalf of their constituents. That's their job. But if we do intervene with a Federal regulator on behalf of a constituent, we should be comfortable reading about the intervention on the front page of the newspapers. That is what a disclosure requirement is all about.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the Comprehensive Campaign Finance Reform and Ethics Act of 1991, and a section-by-section analysis, be included in the RECORD immediately after my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 6

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—SENATE ELECTION FLEXIBLE FUNDRAISING TARGETS

SEC. 101. SENATE ELECTION FLEXIBLE FUNDRAISING TARGETS.

FECA is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE V—SENATE ELECTION FLEXIBLE FUNDRAISING TARGETS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. For purposes of this title—

"(1) except as otherwise provided in this title, the definitions under section 301 shall apply for purposes of this title insofar as such definitions relate to elections to the office of United States Senator;

"(2) the term "bipartisan commission" means the commission appointed pursuant to section 506;

"(3) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate for the Senate who has made a filing under section 502 and who has not exceeded the limitations described in section 504;

"(4) the term 'general election period' means, with respect to any candidate, the period beginning on the day after the date of the primary or runoff election for the specific office the candidate is seeking, whichever is later, and ending on the earlier of—

"(A) the date of such general election; or

"(B) the date on which the candidate withdraws from the campaign or otherwise ceases actively to seek election;

"(5) the term 'voting age population' means the resident population, 18 years of age or older, as certified pursuant to section 315(e).

"VOLUNTARY ACCEPTANCE OF TARGETS.

"SEC. 502. A candidate for the Senate shall be eligible to receive the benefits described in section 503 if the candidate files with the Commission, at any time prior to the date of the general election, a statement that the candidate has not exceeded the fundraising targets under section 504 for any primary or runoff election and will not exceed such targets for the general election.

"BENEFITS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 503. REDUCED BROADCAST RATES.—An eligible candidate shall be entitled to the reduced broadcast rates under section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934.

"FUNDRAISING TARGETS

"SEC. 504. (a) GENERAL ELECTION TARGET.—An eligible candidate shall not accept contributions for a general election in excess of the lesser of—

"(1) $5,500,000; or

"(2) the greater of—

"(A) $950,000; or

"(B) $400,000 plus

"(i) 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population in the candidate's State not in excess of 4,000,000; and

"(ii) 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the candidate's State in excess of 4,000,000.

"(b) PRIMARY ELECTION TARGET.—An eligible candidate shall not accept contributions for a primary election in excess of the lesser of—

"(1) 67 percent of the general election target under subsection (a); or

"(2) $2,750,000.

"(c) RUNOFF ELECTION TARGET.—An eligible candidate shall not accept contributions for a runoff election in excess of 20 percent of the general election target under subsection (a).

"(d) EXEMPT CONTRIBUTIONS.—There shall not be counted against the fundraising targets of an eligible candidate contributions by—

"(1) an individual who at the time a contribution is made is a resident of the candidate's State; or

"(2) an individual not described in paragraph (1) who makes contributions of no more than $250 in the aggregate to any one candidate for an election.

"(e) INDEXING.—The amount otherwise determined under subsection (a) shall be increased as of the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index determined under section 315(c), except that for the purposes of this section, the base period shall be the calendar year in which the first general election after the date of enactment of this Act occurs.

"ACTION BY THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 505. The Commission shall—

"(1) issue regulations implementing this title not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this title; and

"(2) thereafter, provide to an eligible candidate an advisory opinion concerning the application of this title within 30 days after the date on which the eligible candidate submits a request for an advisory opinion.

"REPORT BY BIPARTISAN COMMISSION

"SEC. 506. (a) APPOINTMENT.—The majority leader and minority leader of the House of Representatives and the majority leader and minority leader of the Senate shall each appoint 2 persons to serve on a bipartisan commission to conduct the study and make the report required by subsection (b).

"(b) STUDY AND REPORT.—The bipartisan commission shall—

"(1) study the effects of this title on Senate election campaign spending and the cost of campaigns during the primary and general elections for the Senate in 1994 and 1996; and

"(2) report its findings to the majority leader and minority leader of the House of Representatives and the majority leader and minority leader of the Senate on or before November 7, 1997.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 507. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission and to the bipartisan commission such sums as are necessary to carry out this title.

"EFFECTIVE DATES

"SEC. 508. (a) IN GENERAL.—This title shall be effective with respect to candidates for the Senate in 1994, 1996, and 1998.

"(b) CONTRIBUTIONS RECEIVED PRIOR TO DATE OF ENACTMENT.—Contributions made to or received by an eligible candidate on or prior to the date of enactment of this title shall not be counted against the targets specified in section 504.

"(c) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER TITLES.—The provisions of titles I through VI shall remain in effect with respect to Senate election campaigns affected by this title except to the extent that those provisions are inconsistent with this title."

TITLE II—ETHICS IN GOVERNMENT

SEC. 201. PUBLIC DISCLOSURE OF CONGRESSIONAL INTERVENTION IN ENFORCEMENT ACTIONS.

(a) UNWRITTEN CONTACTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each department and agency of the executive branch of the United States shall compile a monthly list of all unwritten communications from any Member, employee, or agent of the Congress received by the department or agency with respect to—

(A) potential or ongoing enforcement matters before the department or agency; and

(B) any proceedings in the department or agency relating to the award of contracts.

(2) DETAILS OF LIST.—The list required by this subsection shall include—

(A) the source of the contact;

(B) the stated purpose of the contact;

(C) any information or actions requested; and

(D) any other pertinent information.

(3) FILING LISTS.—Not later than the 15th of each month, each department or agency of the United States Government shall submit the list required by this subsection for the preceding month to the committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate with jurisdiction over the department or agency. Each committee receiving lists pursuant to this subsection shall submit the lists to the Congressional Record on January 1st and July 1st of each year for publication on the next day the record is printed.

(b) WRITTEN CONTACTS.—Each department and agency of the executive branch of the United States shall—

(1) create a public file containing all written communications from any Member, employee, or agent of the Congress received by the department or agency and any written responses by the department or agency to the written communications with respect to—

(A) potential or ongoing enforcement matters before the department or agency; and

(B) any proceedings in the department or agency relating to the award of contracts; or

(2) include the information described in paragraph (1) in an appropriate existing public file.

TITLE III—REDUCTION OF SPECIAL INTEREST INFLUENCE

Subtitle A—Ban on Political Action Committees

SEC. 301. BAN ON ACTIVITIES OF POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title III of FECA (2 U.S.C. 301 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"BAN ON FEDERAL ELECTION ACTIVITIES BY POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES

"SEC. 324. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no person other than an individual or a political committee may make contributions, solicit or receive contributions, or make expenditures for the purpose of influencing an election for Federal office."

(b) DEFINITION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEE.—(1) Paragraph (4) of section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The term 'political committee' means—

"(A) the principal campaign committee of a candidate;

"(B) any national, State, or district committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee thereof;

"(C) any local committee of a political party which—

"(i) receives contributions aggregating in excess of $5,000 during a calendar year;

"(ii) makes payments exempted from the definition of contribution or expenditure under paragraph (8) or (9) aggregating in excess of $5,000 during a calendar year; or

"(iii) makes contributions or expenditures aggregating in excess of $1,000 during a calendar year; and

"(D) any committee jointly established by a principal campaign committee and any committee described in subparagraph (B) or (C) for the purpose of conducting joint fundraising activities."

(2) Section 316(b)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441b(b)(2)) is amended by striking subparagraphs (B) and (C).

(c) CANDIDATE'S COMMITTEES.—(1) Section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) For the purposes of the limitations provided by paragraphs (1) and (2), any political committee which is established or financed or maintained or controlled by any candidate or Federal officeholder shall be deemed to be an authorized committee of such candidate or officeholder."

(2) Section 302(e)(3) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) No political committee that supports or has supported more than one candidate may be designated as an authorized committee, except that—

"(A) a candidate for the office of President nominated by a political party may designate the national committee of such political party as the candidate's principal campaign committee, but only if that national committee maintains separate books of account with respect to its functions as a principal campaign committee; and

"(B) a candidate may designate a political committee established solely for the purpose of joint fundraising by such candidates as an authorized committee."

(d) RULES APPLICABLE WHEN BAN NOT IN EFFECT.—For purposes of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, during any period in which the limitation under section 324 of such Act (as added by subsection (a)) is not in effect—

(1) the amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall not be in effect; and

(2) it shall be unlawful for any person that—

(A) is treated as a political committee by reason of paragraph (1); and

(B) is not directly or indirectly established, administered, or supported by a connected organization which is a corporation, labor organization, or trade association, to make contributions to any candidate or the candidate's authorized committee for any election aggregating in excess of $1,000.

Subtitle B—Ban on Soft Money in Federal Elections

SEC. 311. BAN ON SOFT MONEY.

Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) Ban on Soft Money.—(1) It shall be unlawful for the purpose of influencing any election to Federal office—

"(A) to solicit or receive any soft money; or

"(B) to make any payments from soft money.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'soft money' means any amount—

"(A) solicited or received from a source which is prohibited under section 316(a);

"(B) contributed, solicited, or received in excess of the contribution limits under section 315; or

"(C) not subject to the recordkeeping, reporting, or disclosure requirements under section 304 or any other provision of this Act."

SEC. 312. RESTRICTIONS ON PARTY COMMITTEES.

(a) Disclosure of Information by Political Committee.—(1) Subsection (c) of section 302 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 432(c)) is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (4), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting "; and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) each account maintained by a political committee of a political party (including Federal and non-Federal accounts), and deposits into, and disbursements from, each such account."

(2) Subsection (b) of section 304 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)) is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (7), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting "; and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) each account maintained by a political committee of a political party (including Federal and non-Federal accounts), and deposits into, and disbursements from, each such account."

(b) Allocation of Expenditures for Mixed Activities.—Title III of FECA, as amended by section 301(a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"REQUIRED ALLOCATION OF CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES FOR MIXED ACTIVITIES BY POLITICAL PARTY COMMITTEES

"Sec. 325. (a) Regulations Requiring Allocation for Mixed Activities.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this section, the Commission shall issue regulations providing for a method for allocating the contributions and expenditures for any mixed activity between Federal and non-Federal accounts.

"(b) Guidelines for Allocation.—(1) The regulations issued under subsection (a) shall—

"(A) provide for the allocation of contributions and expenditures in accordance with this subsection; and

"(B) require reporting under this Act of expenditures in connection with a mixed activity to disclose—

"(i) the method and rationale used in allocating the cost of the mixed activity to Federal and non-Federal accounts; and

"(ii) the amount and percentage of the cost of the mixed activity allocated to such accounts.

"(2) In the case of a mixed activity that consists of a voter registration drive, get-out-the-vote drive, or other activity designed to contact voters (other than an activity to which paragraph (3) or (4) applies), amounts shall be allocated on the basis of the composition of the ballot for the political jurisdiction in which the activity occurs, except that in no event shall the amounts allocated to the Federal account be less than—

"(A) 33⅓ percent of the total amount in the case of the national committee of a political party; or

"(B) 25 percent of the total amount in the case of a State or local committee of a political party or any subordinate committee thereof.

"(3) In the case of a mixed activity that consists of preparing and distributing brochures, handbills, slate cards, or other printed materials identifying or seeking support of (or opposition to) candidates for both Federal offices and non-Federal offices, amounts shall be allocated on the basis of total space devoted to such candidates, except that in no event shall the amounts allocated to the Federal account be less than the percentages under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2).

"(4)(A) In the case of a mixed activity by a national committee of a political party that consists of broadcast media advertising (or any portion thereof) that promotes (or is in opposition to) a political party without mentioning the name of any individual candidate for Federal office or non-Federal office, amounts allocated to the Federal account shall not be less than—

"(i) 50 percent of the total amount in the case of advertising in the national media market; and

"(ii) 40 percent in the case of advertising in other than the national media market.

"(B) In the case of a mixed activity by a State or local committee of a political party or any subordinate committee thereof that consists of broadcast media advertising (or any portion thereof) described in subparagraph (A), costs shall be allocated on the basis of the composition of the ballot for the political jurisdiction in which the activity occurs, except that in no event shall the amounts allocated to the Federal account be less than 33⅓ percent of the total amount.

"(5) Overhead and fundraising costs of a political committee of a political party for each 2-calendar year period ending with the calendar year in which a regularly scheduled election for Federal office occurs shall be allocated to the Federal account on the basis of the same ratio which—

"(A) the aggregate amount of receipts and disbursements of such political committee during such period in connection with elections for Federal office, bears to .

"(B) the aggregate amount of receipts and disbursements of such political committee during such period.

"(c) Mixed Activity.—(1) For purposes of this section, the term 'mixed activity' means an activity the expenditures in connection with which are required under this Act to be allocated between Federal and non-Federal accounts because such activity affects 1 or more elections for Federal office and 1 or more non-Federal elections.

"(2) Activities under paragraph (1) include—

"(A) voter registration drives, get-out-the-vote drives, telephone banks, and membership communications in connection with elections for Federal offices and elections for non-Federal offices;

"(B) general political advertising, brochures, or other materials that include any reference (however incidental) to both a candidate for Federal office and a candidate for non-Federal office, or that urge support for or opposition to a political party or to all the candidates of a political party;

"(C) overhead expenses; and

"(D) activities described in clauses (v), (x), and (xii) of section 301(8)(B).

"(d) Accounts.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'Federal account' means an account to which receipts and disbursements are allocated to elections for Federal offices; and

"(2) the term 'non-Federal account' means an account to which receipts and disbursements are allocated to elections other than non-Federal offices."

SEC. 313. PROTECTION FOR EMPLOYEES.

(a) Contributions to All Political Committees Included.—Paragraph (2) of section 316(b) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441b(b)(2)) is amended by inserting "political committee," after "campaign committee,".

(b) Applicability of Requirements to Labor Organizations.—Section 316(b) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441b(b)) is amended by adding at the thereof the following new paragraph:

"(8)(A) Subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (2) shall not apply to a labor organization unless the organization meets the requirements of subparagraphs (B), (C), and (D).

"(B) The requirements of this subparagraph are met only if the labor organization provides, at least once annually, to all employees within the labor organization's bargaining unit or units (and to new employees within 30 days after commencement of their employment) written notification presented in a manner to inform any such employee—

"(i) that an employee cannot be obligated to pay, through union dues or any other mandatory payment to a labor organization, for the political activities of the labor organization, including, but not limited to, the maintenance and operation of, or solicitation of contributions to, a political committee, political communications to members, and voter registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns;

"(ii) that no employee may be required actually to join any labor organization, but if a collective bargaining agreement covering an employee purports to require membership or payment of dues or other fees to a labor organization as a condition of employment, the employee may elect instead to pay an agency fee to the labor organization;

"(iii) that the amount of the agency fee shall be limited to the employee's pro rata share of the cost of the labor organization's exclusive representation services to the employee's collective bargaining unit, including collective bargaining, contract administration, and grievance adjustment;

"(iv) that an employee who elects to be a full member of the labor organization and pay membership dues is entitled to a reduction of those dues by the employee's pro rata share of the total spending by the labor organization for political activities;

"(v) that the cost of the labor organization's exclusive representation services, and the amount of spending by such organization for political activities, shall be computed on the basis of such cost and spending for the immediately preceding fiscal year of such organization; and

"(vi) of the amount of the labor organization's full membership dues, initiation fees, and assessments for the current year; the amount of the reduced membership dues, subtracting the employee's pro rata share of the organization's spending for political activities, for the current year; and the amount of the agency fee for the current year.

"(C) The requirements of this subparagraph are met only if, for purposes of verifying the cost of such labor organization's exclusive representation services, the labor organization provides all represented employees an annual examination by an independent certified public accountant of financial statements supplied by such organization which verify the cost of such services; except that such examination shall, at a minimum, constitute a 'special report' as interpreted by the Association of Independent Certified Public Accountants.

"(D) The requirements of this subparagraph are met only if the labor organization—

"(i) maintains procedures to promptly determine the costs that may properly be charged to agency fee payors as costs of exclusive representation, and explains such procedures in the written notification required under subparagraph (B); and

"(ii) if any person challenges the costs which may be properly charged as costs of exclusive representation—

"(I) provides a mutually selected impartial decisionmaker to hear and decide such challenge pursuant to rules of discovery and evidence and subject to de novo review by the National Labor Relations Board or an applicable court; and

"(II) places in escrow amounts reasonably in dispute pending the outcome of the challenge.

"(E)(i) A labor organization that does not satisfy the requirements of subparagraphs (B), (C), and (D) shall finance any expenditures specified in subparagraphs (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (2) only with funds legally collected under this Act for its separate segregated fund.

"(ii) For purposes of this paragraph, subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2) shall apply only with respect to communications expressly advocating the election or defeat of any clearly identified candidate for elective public office."

SEC. 314. RESTRICTIONS ON SOFT MONEY ACTIVITIES OF TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to exemption from tax) is amended by redesignating subsection (n) as subsection (o) and by inserting after subsection (m) the following new subsection:

"(n) DENIAL OF TAX-EXEMPT STATUS FOR ACTIVITIES TO INFLUENCE A FEDERAL ELECTION.—An organization shall not be treated as exempt from tax under subsection (a) if such organization participates or intervenes in any political campaign on behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for Federal office."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to any participation or intervention by an organization on or after September 1, 1991.

SEC. 315. DENIAL OF TAX-EXEMPT STATUS FOR CERTAIN POLITICALLY ACTIVE ORGANIZATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to exemption from tax), as amended by section 314, is amended by redesignating subsection (o) as subsection (p) and by inserting after subsection (n) the following new subsection:

"(o) DENIAL OF TAX-EXEMPT STATUS FOR CERTAIN POLITICALLY ACTIVE ORGANIZATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—An organization shall not be treated as exempt from tax under subsection (a) if—

"(A) such organization devotes any of its operating budget to—

"(i) voter registration or get-out-the-vote campaigns; or

"(ii) participation or intervention in any political campaign on behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for public office; and

"(B) a candidate, or an authorized committee of a candidate, has—

"(i) solicited contributions to, or on behalf of, such organization; and

"(ii) the solicitation is made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, such organization.

"(2) CANDIDATE DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'candidate' has the meaning given such term by paragraph (2) of section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(2)).

"(B) MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.—The term 'candidate' shall include any Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress unless—

"(i) the date for filing for nomination, or election to, such office has passed and such individual has not so filed, and

"(ii) such individual is not otherwise a candidate described in subparagraph (A)."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of enactment of this Act, but only with respect to solicitations or suggestions by candidates made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 316. CONTRIBUTIONS TO CERTAIN POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS MAINTAINED BY A CANDIDATE.

(a) CONTRIBUTIONS BY PERSONS IN GENERAL AND BY MULTICANDIDATE POLITICAL COMMITTEES.—(1) Section 315(a)(1)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(1)(A)) is amended by striking "candidate and his authorized political committees" and inserting "candidate, a candidate's authorized political committees, and any political organizations (other than authorized committees) maintained by a candidate,".

(2) Section 315(a)(2)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2)(A)) is amended by striking "candidate and his authorized political committees" and inserting "candidate, a candidate's authorized political committees, and any political organizations (other than authorized committees) maintained by a candidate,".

(3) Section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)), as amended by section 301(c), is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(10) For the purposes of paragraphs (1)(A) and (2)(A), the term 'political organization maintained by a candidate' means any non-Federal political action committee, non-Federal multicandidate political committee, or any other form of political organization regulated under State law which is not a political committee of a national, State, or local political party—

"(A) that is set up by or on behalf of a candidate and engages in political activity which directly influences Federal elections; and

"(B) for which that candidate has solicited a contribution."

(b) CONTRIBUTIONS BY NATIONAL BANKS, CORPORATIONS, AND LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.—(1) Section 316(b)(2) of the FECA (2 U.S.C. 441b(b)(2)) is amended by striking "candidate, campaign committee" and inserting "candidate, political organization (other than an authorized committee) maintained by a candidate, campaign committee,".

(2) Section 316(b) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441b(b)), as amended by section 313(b), is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) For the purposes of paragraph (2), the term 'political organization maintained by a candidate' means any non-Federal political action committee, non-Federal multicandidate political committee, or any other form of political organization regulated under State law which is not a political committee of a national, State, or local political party—

"(A) that is set up by or on behalf of a candidate and engages in political activity which directly influences Federal elections; and

"(B) for which that candidate has solicited a contribution."

(c) DATE OF APPLICATION.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply to contributions described in sections 315 and 316 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a and 441b) made in response to solicitations made after January 14, 1991.

Subtitle C—Other Activities

SEC. 321. MODIFICATIONS OF CONTRIBUTION LIMITS ON INDIVIDUALS.

(a) INCREASE IN CANDIDATE LIMIT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 315(a)(1) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(1)(A)) is amended by striking "$1,000" and inserting "the applicable amount".

(b) APPLICABLE AMOUNT DEFINED.—Section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)), as amended by section 316(a)(3), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) For purposes of subsection (a)(1)(A)—

"(A) The term 'applicable amount' means—

"(i) $1,000 in the case of contributions by a person to—

"(I) a candidate for the office of President or Vice President or such candidate's authorized committees; or

"(II) any other candidate or such candidate's authorized committees if, at the time such contributions are made, such person is a resident of the State with respect to which such candidate seeks Federal office; and

"(ii) $500 in the case of contributions by any other person to a candidate described in clause (i)(II) or such candidate's authorized committees.

"(B) At the beginning of 1992 and each even-numbered calendar year thereafter, the Secretary of Labor shall certify in the same manner as under subsection (c)(1) the percent difference between the price index for the preceding calendar year and the price index for calendar year 1990. Each of the dollar limits under subparagraph (A) shall be increased by such percent difference and rounded to the nearest $100. Each amount so increased shall be the amount in effect for the calendar year for which determined and the succeeding calendar year."

SEC. 322. POLITICAL PARTIES.

(a) ITEMS NOT TREATED AS CONTRIBUTIONS OR EXPENDITURES.—(1) Section 301(8)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)(B)) is amended—

(A) in clauses (x) and (xii), by inserting "national," after "the payment by a"; and

(B) in clause (xii), by inserting "general research activities," after "the costs of".

(2) Section 301(9)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(9)(B)) is amended—

(A) in clauses (viii) and (ix), by inserting "national," after "the payment by a"; and

(B) in clause (ix), by inserting "general research activities," after "the costs of".

(b) INCREASE IN LIMITS ON CONTRIBUTIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES.—Section 315(a)(3) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(3)) is amended by striking "$25,000 in any calendar year" and inserting "$50,000 in any calendar year, except that not more than $25,000 may be contributed in any calendar year to persons which are not political committees established and maintained by a national, State, or local political party."

SEC. 323. CONTRIBUTIONS THROUGH INTERMEDIARIES AND CONDUITS.

Section 315(a)(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(8)) is amended to read as follows:

"(8) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) Contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate.

"(B) If a contribution is made by a person either directly or indirectly to or on behalf of a particular candidate through an intermediary or conduit, the intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.

"(C) No conduit or intermediary shall deliver or arrange to have delivered contributions from more than 2 persons who are employees of the same employer or who are members of the same trade association, membership organization, or labor organization.

"(D) No person required to register with the Clerk of the House of Representatives or the Secretary of the Senate under section 308 of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 267), or an officer, employee or agent of such a person, may act as an intermediary or conduit with respect to a contribution to a candidate for Federal office."

SEC. 324. INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES.

(a) ATTRIBUTION OF COMMUNICATIONS; REPORTS.—(1) Section 318 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441d) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) If any person makes an independent expenditure through a broadcast communication on any television or radio station, the broadcast communication shall include a statement—

"(A) in such television broadcast, that is clearly readable to the viewer and appears continuously during the entire length of such communication; or

"(B) in such radio broadcast, that is clearly audible to the viewer and is aired at the beginning and ending of such broadcast, setting forth the name of such person and, in the case of a political committee, the name of any connected or affiliated organization.

"(2) If any person makes an independent expenditure through a newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or other type of general public political advertising, the communication shall include, in addition to the other information required by this section—

"(A) the following sentence: 'The cost of presenting this communication is not subject to any campaign contribution limits.'; and

"(B) a statement setting forth the name of the person who paid for the communication and, in the case of a political committee, the name of any connected or affiliated organization, and the name of the president or treasurer of such organization.

"(3) Any person making an independent expenditure described in paragraph (1) or (2) shall furnish, by certified mail, return receipt requested, the following information, to each candidate and to the Commission, not later than the date and time of the first public transmission of the communication:

"(A) Effective notice that the person plans to make an independent expenditure for the purpose of financing a communication which expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate.

"(B) An exact copy of the intended communication, or a complete description of the contents of the intended communication, including the entirety of any texts to be used in conjunction with such communication, and a complete description of any photographs, films, or any other visual devices to be used in conjunction with such communication.

"(C) All dates and times when such communication will be publicly transmitted."

(2) Section 318(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441d(a)) is amended by striking "Whenever" and inserting "Except as provided in subsection (c), whenever".

(b) DEFINITION OF INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURE.—Paragraph (17) of section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(17)) is amended—

(1) by striking "(17) The term" and inserting "(17)(A) The term"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) For the purpose of subparagraph (A), an expenditure shall be considered to be made in cooperation, consultation, or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, authorized committee, or agent, if there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction by the candidate or the candidate's agent prior to the publication, distribution, display, or broadcast of a communication, and it shall be presumed to be so made when it is—

"(i) based on information about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs provided to the person making the expenditure by the candidate, or by the candidate's agents, with a view toward having an expenditure made; or

"(ii) made by or through any person who is, or has been—

"(I) authorized to raise or expend funds on behalf of the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees;

"(II) serving as an officer of the candidate's authorized committees; or

"(III) providing professional services to, or receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from, the candidate, the candidate's committee, or agent."

(c) HEARINGS ON COMPLAINTS.—Section 309(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(13) Within 3 days after the Commission receives a complaint filed pursuant to this section which alleges that an independent expenditure was made with the cooperation or consultation of a candidate, or an authorized committee or agent of such candidate, or was made in concert with or at the request or suggestion of an authorized committee or agent of such candidate, the Commission shall provide for a hearing to determine such matter."

(d) EXPEDITED JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Section 310 of the FECA (2 U.S.C. 437h) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "It shall be the duty of the courts to advance on the docket and to expedite to the greatest possible extent the disposition of any matter relating to the making or alleged making of an independent expenditure."

TITLE IV—INCREASE OF COMPETITION IN POLITICS

Subtitle A—General Provisions

SEC. 401. SEED MONEY FOR CHALLENGERS.

Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by section 311, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the congressional campaign committee or the senatorial campaign committee of a national political party, whichever is applicable, may make contributions to an eligible candidate (and the candidate's authorized committees) that in the aggregate do not exceed the lesser of—

"(A)(i) $150,000, in the case of a candidate for the House of Representatives; or

"(ii) $250,000, in the case of a candidate for the Senate; or

"(B) the aggregate qualified matching contributions received by the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees.

"(2) A contribution under paragraph (1) shall not be treated as an expenditure for purposes of subsection (d)(3).

"(3) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'qualified matching contributions' means contributions made during the period of the election cycle preceding the primary election by an individual who, at the time the contributions are made, is a resident of the State in which the election with respect to which such contributions are made is to be held; and

"(B) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate for election, or nomination for election, to Federal office (other than President or Vice President) who does not hold Federal office."

SEC. 402. OPPOSITION RESEARCH FUND.

Section 315(i)(1) of FECA, as added by section 311, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following flush sentence:

"In addition to a contribution under the preceding sentence, the congressional campaign committee or the senatorial campaign committee of a national political party, whichever is applicable, may make contributions to an eligible candidate (and the candidate's authorized committees), in an aggregate amount not exceeding $50,000, for the sole purpose of conducting research into the voting and other public records of the candidate's opponent to determine the opponent's views on issues relevant to the election."

SEC. 403. CAMPAIGN FUNDS OF CANDIDATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 313 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 439a) is amended to read as follows:

"USE OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS

"SEC. 313. (a) Amounts received as contributions by a candidate for the Senate or the House of Representatives and the authorized committees of such a candidate that are surplus campaign funds may be—

"(1) transferred to an organization described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 that is exempt from taxation under section 501(a) of such Code;

"(2) refunded to contributors on a pro rata basis; or

"(3) paid into the Treasury of the United States and applied to the account to reduce the public debt described in section 3113(d) of section 31, United States Code.

"(b)(1) It shall be unlawful for a candidate or an authorized committee of a candidate or for any person acting as an agent of either to dispose of surplus campaign funds in any manner except as required by subsection (a).

"(2) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to accept or receive surplus campaign funds for purposes or in a manner other than those specified in subsection (a).

"(c) The disposition of surplus campaign funds shall be reported on the post-election semiannual report that is filed pursuant to section 304 on or before July 31 of the year following the election for which the funds were raised.

"(d) For purposes of this section, the term 'surplus campaign funds' means the amount (if any) after a general election by which—

"(1) the contributions made to the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees with respect to the election cycle for such election, exceed

"(2) the sum of—

"(A) the expenditures made by such candidate or authorized committees with respect to such election cycle; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for the House of Representatives, $50,000, and in the case of a candidate for the Senate, $100,000."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply to surplus campaign funds existing on November 9, 1994, and thereafter.

SEC. 404. STATE AND LOCAL CAMPAIGN FUNDS.

Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by section 201, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) It shall be unlawful for an individual who is a candidate for Federal office (or any authorized committee) to transfer campaign funds raised in connection with any campaign of such individual for State or local office for use in the campaign for such Federal office. The preceding sentence shall not apply to the extent such funds do not exceed $50,000 in the case of a candidate for the House of Representatives, or $100,000 in the case of a candidate for the United States Senate."

SEC. 405. TRUTH-IN-INCUMBENCY.

Section 315(d) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) For purposes of paragraph (3), an expenditure by a State or local committee of a political party for a radio or television advertisement that—

"(A) is made for the purpose of publicizing the voting or other public record of an incumbent who is not a member of the political party of the committee that makes the expenditure;

"(B) does not indicate whether the incumbent is or will be a candidate for Federal office or whether a listener or viewer should vote against the incumbent; and

"(C) is made prior to the date on which a candidate of that party is nominated for election to the office held by the incumbent, is not an expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate. This paragraph shall only apply to advertisements that are at least 1 minute in length."

SEC. 406. CANDIDATE EXPENDITURES FROM PERSONAL FUNDS.

(a) Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by section 404, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l)(1)(A) Not less than 15 days after a candidate qualifies for a primary election ballot under State law, the candidate shall file with the Commission, and each other candidate who has qualified for that ballot, a declaration stating whether the candidate intends to expend for the primary and general election an amount exceeding $250,000 from—

"(i) the candidate's personal funds;

"(ii) the funds of the candidate's immediate family; and

"(iii) personal loans incurred by the candidate and the candidate's immediate family in connection with the candidate's election campaign.

"(B) The declaration required by subparagraph (A) shall be in such form and contain such information as the Commission may require by regulation.

"(2) Notwithstanding subsection (a), if a candidate—

"(A) declares under paragraph (1) that the candidate intends to expend for the primary and general election funds described in such paragraph an amount exceeding $250,000;

"(B) expends such funds in the primary and general election an amount exceeding $250,000; or

"(C) fails to file the declaration required by paragraph (1), the limitations on contributions under subsection (a), and the limitations on expenditures under subsection (d), shall be modified as provided under paragraph (3) with respect to other candidates for the same office who are not described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C).

"(3) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

"(A) the limitation under subsection (a)(1)(A) shall be increased to $5,000; and

"(B) if a candidate described in paragraph (2)(B) expends more than $1,000,000 of funds described in paragraph (1) in the primary and general election—

"(i) the limitation under subsection (a)(1)(A) shall not apply;

"(ii) the limitation under subsection (a)(2) shall not apply to any political committee of a political party; and

"(iii) the limitation under subsection (d)(3) shall not apply.

The $5,000 amount under subparagraph (A) shall be adjusted each calendar year in the same manner as amounts are adjusted under subsection (a)(11)(B).

"(4) If—

"(A) the modifications under paragraph (3) apply for a convention or a primary election by reason of 1 or more candidates taking (or failing to take) any action described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (2); and

"(B) such candidates are not candidates in any subsequent election in the same election campaign, including the general election, paragraph (3) shall cease to apply to the other candidates in such campaign.

"(5) A candidate who—

"(A) declares, pursuant to paragraph (1), that the candidate does not intend to expend funds described in paragraph (1) in excess of $250,000; and

"(B) subsequently changes such declaration or expends such funds in excess of that amount, shall file an amended declaration with the Commission and notify all other candidates for the same office within 24 hours after changing such declaration or exceeding such limits, whichever first occurs, by sending a notice by certified mail, return receipt requested.

"(6) Contributions to a candidate or a candidate's authorized committees may be used to repay any expenditure or personal loan incurred in connection with the candidate's election to Federal office by a candidate or a member of the candidate's immediate family only to the extent that such repayment—

"(A) is limited to the amount of such expenditure or the principal amount of such loan (and no interest is paid); and

"(B) is not made from any such contributions received after the date of the general election to which such expenditure or loan relates.

"(7) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'immediate family' means—

"(A) a candidate's spouse;

"(B) any child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister, or half-sister of the candidate or the candidate's spouse; and

"(C) the spouse of a person described in subparagraph (B).

"(8) The Commission shall take such action as it deems necessary under the enforcement provisions of this Act to ensure compliance with this subsection."

SEC. 407. LIMITATIONS ON GERRYMANDERING.

(a) REAPPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.—Section 22 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress," approved June 18, 1929 (2 U.S.C. 2a), is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (c); and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c)(1) In each State entitled in the One Hundred Third Congress or in any subsequent Congress to more than one Representative under an apportionment made pursuant to the second paragraph of the Act entitled 'An Act for the relief of Doctor Ricardo Vallejo Samala and to provide for congressional redistricting', approved December 14, 1967 (2 U.S.C. 2c), as in effect prior to the date of enactment of this subsection, there shall be established in the manner provided by the law of the State a number of districts equal to the number of Representatives to which such State is so entitled, and Representatives shall be elected only by eligible voters from districts so established, no district to elect more than 1 Representative.

"(2) Such districts shall be established in accordance with the provisions of this Act as soon as practicable after the decennial census date established in section 141(a) of title 13, United States Code, but in no case later than such time as is reasonably sufficient for their use in the elections for the One Hundred Third Congress and in each fifth Congress thereafter.

"(d)(1) The number of persons in congressional districts within each State shall be as nearly equal as is practicable, as determined under the then most recent decennial census.

"(2) The enumeration established according to the Federal decennial census pursuant to article I, section II, United States Constitution, shall be the sole basis of population for the establishment of congressional districts.

"(e) Congressional districts shall be comprised of contiguous territory, including adjoining insular territory.

"(f) Congressional districts shall not be established with the intent or effect of diluting the voting strength of any person, group of persons, or members of any political party.

"(g) Congressional districts shall be compact in form. In establishing such districts, nearby population shall not be bypassed in favor of more distant population.

"(h) Congressional district boundaries shall avoid the unnecessary division of counties or their equivalent in any State.

"(i) Congressional district boundaries shall be established in such a manner so as to minimize the division of cities, towns, villages, and other political subdivisions.

"(j)(1) It is the intent of the Congress that congressional districts established pursuant to this section be subject to reasonable public scrutiny and comment prior to their establishment.

"(2) At the same time that Federal decennial census tabulations data, reports, maps, or other material or information produced or obtained using Federal funds and associated with the congressional reapportionment and redistricting process are made available to any officer or public body in any State, those materials shall be made available by the State at the cost of duplication to any person from that State meeting the qualifications for voting in an election of a Member of the House of Representatives.

"(k) Nothing in this section shall be construed to supersede any provision of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C. 1973 et seq.).

"(l)(1) A State may establish by law criteria for implementing the standards set forth in this section.

"(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed as limiting the power of a State to strengthen or add to the standards set forth in this section, or to interpret those standards in a manner consistent with the law of the State, to the extent that any additional criteria or interpretations are not in conflict with this section."

"(m)(1) The district courts of the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine any action to enforce subsections (c) through (l).

"(2) A person who meets a State's qualifications for voting in an election of a Member of the House of Representatives from the State may bring an action in the district court for the district in which the person resides to enforce subsections (c) through (l) with regard to the State in which the person resides.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the district courts of the United States shall have authority to issue all judgments, orders, and decrees necessary to ensure that any criteria established by State law pursuant to this section are not in conflict with this section.

"(4) With the exception of actions brought for the relief described in paragraph (3), the district court for the purposes of this section shall be a three-judge district court pursuant to section 2284 of title 28, United States Code.

"(5) On motion of any party in accordance with section 1657 of title 28, United States Code, it shall be the duty of the district court to assign the case for briefing and hearing at the earliest practicable date, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited. The district court shall have authority to enter all judgments, orders and decrees necessary to bring a State into compliance with this Act.

"(6) An action to challenge the establishment of a congressional district in a State after a Federal decennial census may not be brought after the end of the 9-month period beginning on the date on which the last such district is so established.

"(7) For the purposes of this section, an order dismissing a complaint for failure to state a cause of action shall be appealable in accordance with section 1253 of title 28, United States Code.

"(8) If a district court fails to establish a briefing and hearing schedule that will permit resolution of the case prior to the next general election, any party may seek a writ of mandamus from the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the district court sits. The court of appeals shall have jurisdiction over the motion for a writ of mandamus and shall establish an expedited briefing and hearing schedule for resolution of the motion. Such a motion shall not stay proceedings in the district court.

"(9) If a district court determines that the congressional districts established by a State's redistricting authority pursuant to this Act are not in compliance with this Act, the court shall remand the plan to the State's redistricting authority to establish new districts consistent with subsections (c) through (l). The district court shall retain jurisdiction over the case after remand.

"(10) If, after a remand under paragraph (9), the district court determines that the congressional districts established by a State's redistricting authority under the remand order are not consistent with subsections (c) through (l), the district court shall enter an order establishing districts that are consistent with subsections (c) through (l) for the next general congressional election.

"(11) If any question of State law arises in a case under this section that would require abstention, the district court shall not abstain. However, in any State permitting certification of such questions, the district court shall certify the question to the highest court of the State whose law is in question. Such certification shall not stay the proceedings in the district court or delay the court's determination of the question of State law.

"(12) With the exception of actions brought for the relief described in paragraph (3), an appeal from a decision of the district court under this section shall be taken in accordance with section 1253 of title 28, United States Code. An appeal under this paragraph shall be noticed in the district court and perfected by docketing in the Supreme Court within thirty days of the entry of judgment below. Appeals brought to the Supreme Court under this paragraph shall be heard as soon as practicable.

"(13) For purposes of this section, the term "redistricting authority" means the officer or public body having initial responsibility for the congressional redistricting of a State."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS AND REPEALER.—(1) The first sentence of section 1657 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking "chapter 153 or" and inserting "chapter 153, any action under subsection (m) through (l) of section 22 of the Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress,' approved June 18, 1929 (2 U.S.C. 2a), or".

(2) Section 141(c) of title 13, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In circumstances in which this subsection requires that the Secretary provide criteria to, consult with, or report tabulations of population to (or if the Secretary for any reason provides material or information to) the public bodies having responsibility for the legislative apportionment or districting of a State, the Secretary shall provide, without cost, such criteria, consultations, tabulations, or other material or information simultaneously to the leadership of each political party represented on such public bodies. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'political party' means any political party whose candidates for Representatives to Congress received, as the candidates of such party, 5 percent or more of the total number of votes received statewide by all candidates for such office in any of the 5 most recent general congressional elections. Such materials may include those developed by the Census Bureau for redistricting purposes for the 1990 Census."

(3) The second paragraph of the Act entitled "An Act for the relief of Doctor Ricardo Vallejo Samala and to provide for congressional redistricting", approved December 14, 1967 (2 U.S.C. 2c), is repealed.

SEC. 408. ELECTION FRAUD, OTHER PUBLIC CORRUPTION, AND FRAUD IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

(a) ELECTION FRAUD AND OTHER PUBLIC CORRUPTION.—(1) Chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 225. Public corruption

"(a) Whoever, in a circumstance described in subsection (d), deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of a State or political subdivision of a State of the honest services of an official or employee of such State, political subdivision, or Indian tribal government shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(b) Whoever, in a circumstance described in subsection (d), deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of a State or political subdivision of a State of a fair and impartially conducted election process in any primary, runoff, special, or general election—

"(1) through the procurement, casting, or tabulation of ballots that are materially false, fictitious, or fraudulent or that are invalid, under the laws of the State in which the election is held;

"(2) through paying or offering to pay any person for voting;

"(3) through the procurement or submission of voter registrations that contain false material information, or omit material information; or

"(4) through the filing of any report required to be filed under State law regarding an election campaign that contains false material information or omits material information, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(c) Whoever, being a public official or an official or employee of a State, political subdivision of a State, or Indian tribal government, in a circumstance described in subsection (d), deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of a State or political subdivision of a State of the right to have the affairs of the State, political subdivision, or Indian tribal government conducted on the basis of complete, true, and accurate material information, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(d) The circumstances referred to in subsections (a), (b), and (c) are that—

"(1) for the purpose of executing or concealing such scheme or artifice or attempting to do so, the person so doing—

"(A) places in any post office or authorized depository for mail matter, any matter or thing whatever to be sent or delivered by the Postal Service, or takes or receives therefrom, any such matter or thing, or knowingly causes to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such matter or thing;

"(B) transmits or causes to be transmitted by means of wire, radio, or television communication in interstate or foreign commerce any writings, signs, signals, pictures, or sounds;

"(C) transports or causes to be transported any person or thing, or induces any person to travel in or to be transported in, interstate or foreign commerce; or

"(D) uses or causes to use of any facility of interstate or foreign commerce;

"(2) the scheme or artifice affects or constitutes an attempt to affect in any manner or degree, or would if executed or concealed so affect, interstate or foreign commerce; or

"(3) as applied to an offense under subsection (b), an objective of the scheme or artifice is to secure the election of an official who, if elected, would have some authority over the administration of funds derived from an Act of Congress totaling $10,000 or more during the twelve-month period immediately preceding or following the election or date of the offense.

"(e) Whoever deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of the United States of the honest services of a public official or person who has been selected to be a public official shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(f) Whoever, being an official, public official, or person who has been selected to be a public official, directly or indirectly discharges, demotes, suspends, threatens, harasses, or in any manner discriminates against an employee or official of the United States or any State or political subdivision of a State, or endeavors to do so, in order to carry out or to conceal any scheme or artifice described in this section, shall be fined under this title or subject to imprisonment of up to 5 years or both.

"(g)(1) An employee or official of the United States or any State or political subdivision of such State who is discharged, demoted, suspended, threatened, harassed, or in any other manner discriminated against because of lawful acts done by the employee as a result of a violation of subsection (e) or because of actions by the employee or official on behalf of himself or others in furtherance of a prosecution under this section (including investigation for, initiation of, testimony for, or assistance in such a prosecution) may bring a civil action and shall be entitled to all relief necessary to make such employee or official whole. Such relief shall include reinstatement with the same seniority status that the employee or official would have had but for the discrimination, 3 times the amount of back pay, interest on the back pay, and compensation for any special damages sustained as a result of the discrimination, including reasonable litigation costs and reasonable attorney's fees.

"(2) An individual shall not be entitled to relief under paragraph (1) if the individual participated in the violation of this section with respect to which relief is sought.

"(3) A civil action brought under paragraph (1) shall be stayed by a court upon the certification of an attorney for the Government, stating that the action may adversely affect the interests of the Government in a current criminal investigation or proceeding. The attorney for the Government shall promptly notify the court when the stay may be lifted without such adverse effects.

"(h) For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'State' means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and any other commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States;

"(2) the terms 'public official' and 'person who has been selected to be a public official' have the meaning set forth in section 201 and shall also include any person acting or pretending to act under color of official authority;

"(3) the term 'official' includes—

"(A) any person employed by, exercising any authority derived from, or holding any position in an Indian tribal government or the government of a State or any subdivision of the executive, legislative, judicial, or other branch of government thereof, including a department, independent establishment, commission, administration, authority, board, and bureau, and a corporation or other legal entity established and subject to control by a government or governments for the execution of a governmental or intergovernmental program;

"(B) any person acting or pretending to act under color of official authority; and

"(C) includes any person who has been nominated, appointed or selected to be an official or who has been officially informed that he or she will be so nominated, appointed or selected;

"(4) the term 'under color of official authority' includes any person who represents that the person controls, is an agent of, or otherwise acts on behalf of an official, public official, and person who has been selected to be a public official; and

"(5) the term 'uses any facility of interstate or foreign commerce' includes the intrastate use of any facility that may also be used in interstate or foreign commerce."

(2)(A) The table of sections for chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following item:

"225. Public Corruption.".

(B) Section 1961(1) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "section 225 (relating to public corruption)," after "section 224 (relating to sports bribery),".

(C) Section 2516(1)(c) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "section 225 (relating to public corruption)," after "section 224 (bribery in sporting contests),".

(b) FRAUD IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.—(1) Section 1343 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking "transmits or causes to be transmitted by means of wire, radio, or television communication in interstate or foreign commerce, any writings, signs, signals, pictures, or sounds" and inserting "uses or causes to be used any facility of interstate or foreign commerce"; and

(B) by inserting "or attempting to do so" after "for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice".

(2)(A) The heading of section 1343 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§1343. Fraud by use of facility of interstate commerce".

(B) The chapter analysis for chapter 63 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking the analysis for section 1343 and inserting the following:

"1343. Fraud by use of facility of interstate commerce.".

Subtitle B—Congressional Mass Mailings

SEC. 411. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this title—

(1) the term "Commission" means the Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards of the House of Representatives; and

(2) the term "Sergeant at Arms" means the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

SEC. 412. STATEMENT OF COSTS AND RELATED EXPENSES OF CONGRESSIONAL MASS MAILINGS.

(a) SENATE.—(1) Two weeks after the close of each calendar quarter, or as soon as practicable thereafter, the Sergeant at Arms shall send to each Senator a statement of the cost of postage and paper and of the other operating expenses incurred as a result of mass mailings processed for such Senator during such quarter.

(2) A statement described in paragraph (1) shall—

(A) separately identify the cost of postage and paper and other costs;

(B) distinguish the costs attributable to newsletters and all other mass mailings; and

(C) include the total cost per capita in the Senator's State.

(3) The Sergeant at Arms shall submit to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate a compilation of the statements sent to Senators under paragraph (1).

(4)(A) A summary tabulation of the information contained in the statements sent to Senators under paragraph (1) shall be published quarterly in the Congressional Record and included in the semiannual Report of the Secretary of the Senate.

(B) The summary tabulation shall set forth for each Senator—

(i) the Senator's name;

(ii) the number of pieces of mass mail mailed during the quarter;

(iii) the total cost of such mail; and

(iv) the number of pieces and the cost of such mail divided by the population of the Senator's State.

(b) HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—(1) Two weeks after the close of each calendar quarter, or as soon as practicable thereafter, the Commission shall send to each Member of the House of Representatives a statement of the cost of postage and paper and the other operating expenses incurred as a result of mass mailings processed for such Member during such quarter.

(2) A statement described in paragraph (1) shall—

(A) separately identify the cost of postage and paper and other costs;

(B) distinguish the costs attributable to newsletters and all other mass mailings; and

(C) include the total cost per capita in the Member's congressional district.

(3) The Commission shall submit to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives a compilation of the statements sent to Members under paragraph (1).

(4)(A) A summary tabulation of the information contained in the statements sent to Members under paragraph (1) shall be published quarterly in the Congressional Record and included in the quarterly Report of the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

(B) The summary tabulations shall set forth for each Member—

(i) the Member's name;

(ii) the number of pieces of mass mail mailed during the quarter;

(iii) the total cost of such mail; and

(iv) the number of pieces and cost of such mail divided by the population of the Member's congressional district.

SEC. 413. RESTRICTIONS ON FRANKED CONGRESSIONAL MASS MAILINGS EXCEEDING APPROPRIATED FUNDS.

Section 3216(c) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(c)"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) If at any time during a fiscal year the Postal Service determines that the postage on and fees and charges in connection with matter mailed under the frank by the Senate during that year have exhausted the amount appropriated for use by the Senate, no more mass mailings (as defined in section 3210(a)(6)(E)) may be mailed by any Member of the Senate during the remainder of that fiscal year unless additional funds are appropriated for use by the Senate and paid to the Postal Service.

"(B) If at any time during a fiscal year the Postal Service determines that the postage on and fees and charges in connection with matter mailed under the frank by the House of Representatives during that year have exhausted the amount appropriated for use by the House of Representatives, no more mass mailings (as defined in section 3210(a)(6)(E)) may be mailed by any Member of the House of Representatives during the remainder of that fiscal year unless additional funds are appropriated for use by the House of Representatives and paid to the Postal Service.".

SEC. 414. EXTENSION OF TIME PERIOD WHEN FRANKED MASS MAILINGS ARE PROHIBITED.

Section 3210(a)(6) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by striking clause (i) and inserting the following:

"(i) if the mass mailing is mailed during the calendar year of any primary or general election (whether regular or runoff) in which the Member is a candidate for reelection; or"; and

(B) in clause (ii)(II) by striking "fewer than 60 days immediately before the date" and inserting "during the year"; and

(2) in subparagraph (C) by striking "fewer than 60 days immediately before the date" and inserting "during the year".

SEC. 415. REPORTING AND PUBLICATION OF FRANKED MASS MAILINGS.

Section 3210(a)(6) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by redesignating subparagraphs (D), (E), and (F) as subparagraphs (E), (F), and (G), respectively; and

(B) by inserting after subparagraph (C) the following new subparagraph:

"(D)(i)(I) When a Member of the Senate disseminates information under the frank by a mass mailing, the Member shall register such mass mailings annually with the Secretary of the Senate. Such registration shall be made by filing with the Secretary of the Senate a copy of the matter mailed and providing, on a form supplied by the Secretary of the Senate, a description of the group or groups of persons to whom the mass mailing was mailed.

"(II) The Secretary of the Senate shall promptly make available for public inspection and copying a copy of the mail matter registered and a description of the group or groups of persons to whom the mass mailing was mailed."

"(ii)(I) When a Member of the House of Representatives disseminates information under the frank by a mass mailing, the Member shall register such mass mailings annually with the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Such registration shall be made by filing with the Clerk of the House of Representatives a copy of the matter mailed and providing, on a form supplied by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, a description of the group or groups of persons to whom the mass mailing was mailed.

"(II) The Clerk of the House of Representatives shall promptly make available for public inspection and copying a copy of the mail matter registered and a description of the group or groups of persons to whom the mass mailing was mailed."

SEC. 416. TRANSFERS OF OFFICIAL MAIL COSTS.

(a) PROHIBITION OF TRANSFERS TO CANDIDATES.—(1) During any fiscal year in which appropriations for official mail costs of the Senate are allocated among offices of the Senate, no such office may transfer any of its allocation to the office of a Member of the Senate who is a candidate for Federal office.

(2) During any fiscal year in which appropriations for official mail costs of the House of Representatives are allocated among offices of the House of Representatives, no such office may transfer any of its allocation to the office of a Member of the House of Representatives who is a candidate for Federal office.

(b) REPORTING AND PUBLICATION.—(1)(A) Each office of the Senate that transfers or receives a transfer of an official mail cost allocation to or from another Senate office shall report to the Sergeant at Arms—

(i) the name of the office to which the transfer is made or from which the transfer was received;

(ii) the amount of the transfer;

(iii) the amount of the allocation made to the office for the fiscal year;

(iv) the total amount of allocations that have been transferred by and to the office to date during the fiscal year; and

(v) the amount of the allocation remaining available to the office for the fiscal year.

(B) The information reported to the Sergeant at Arms pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be published quarterly in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and included in the semiannual report of the Secretary of the Senate.

(C) Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, all offices of the Senate that have transferred or received a transfer of official mail cost allocations to or from another office of the Senate during the portion of fiscal year 1991 preceding such date of enactment shall report to the Sergeant at Arms the information described in paragraph (A) with respect to such transfers, and such information shall be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

(2)(A) Each office of the House of Representatives that transfers or receives a transfer of an official mail cost allocation to or from another office of the House of Representatives shall report to the Commission—

(i) the name of the office to which the transfer is made or from which the transfer was received;

(ii) the amount of the transfer;

(iii) the amount of the allocation made to the office for the fiscal year;

(iv) the total amount of allocations that have been transferred by and to the office to date during the fiscal year; and

(v) the amount of the allocation remaining available to the office for the fiscal year.

(B) The information reported to the Commission pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be published quarterly in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and included in the quarterly report of the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

(c) AMENDMENT OF STANDING RULES OF THE SENATE.—(1) Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"7. (a) Each office of the Senate that transfers or receives a transfer of an official mail cost allocation to or from another Senate office shall report on the date of the transfer or receipt of the transfer to the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate—

"(1) the name of the office to which the transfer is made or from which the transfer was received;

"(2) the amount of the transfer;

"(3) the amount of the allocation made to the office for the fiscal year;

"(4) the total amount of allocations that have been transferred by and to the office to date during the fiscal year; and

"(5) the amount of the allocation remaining available to the office for the fiscal year.

"(b) The information reported to the Sergeant at Arms pursuant to subparagraph (a) shall be published quarterly in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and included in the semiannual Report of the Secretary of the Senate."

(2) Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, all offices of the Senate that have transferred or received a transfer of official mail cost allocations to or from another office of the Senate during fiscal year 1990 shall report to the Sergeant at Arms the information described in paragraph 7(a) of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate with respect to such transfers, and such information shall be published in the Congressional Record.

(3) This subsection is enacted—

(A) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate; and

(B) with full recognition of the constitutional right of the Senate to change the rules at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of the Senate.

SEC. 417. USE OF OFFICIAL EXPENSE ACCOUNTS AND OTHER SOURCES OF FUNDS FOR MASS MAILINGS.

Section 506(a)(3) of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1973 (2 U.S.C. 58(a)(3)) is amended by striking subparagraph (A).

TITLE V—BROADCAST DISCOUNT RATES

SEC. 501. BROADCAST DISCOUNT.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) in the 45 days preceding a primary election, and in the 60 days preceding a general election, candidates for political office need to be able to buy, at the lowest unit charge, nonpreemptible advertising spots from broadcast stations and cable television stations to ensure that their messages reach the intended audience and that the voting public has an opportunity to make informed decisions;

(2) since the Communications Act of 1934 was amended in 1972 to guarantee the lowest unit charge for candidates during these important preelection periods, the method by which advertising spots are sold in the broadcast and cable industries has changed significantly;

(3) changes in the method for selling advertising spots have made the interpretation and enforcement of the lowest unit charge provision difficult and complex;

(4) clarification and simplification of the lowest unit charge provision in the Communications Act of 1934 is necessary to ensure compliance with the original intent of the provision; and

(5) in granting discounts and setting charges for advertising time, broadcasters and cable operators should treat candidates for political office at least as well as the most favored commercial advertisers.

(b) AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ACT.—Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315), as amended by section 501, is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(1)(A), by striking "class and";

(2) by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively; and

(3) by inserting immediately after subsection (b) the following new subsections:

"(c) During any period specified in subsection (b)(1)—

"(1) a licensee shall not preempt the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for public office who has purchased such use pursuant to subsection (b)(1);

"(2) a licensee shall not deny the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for public office who seeks to purchase reasonable amounts of time in, around, or adjacent to any programs aired by the station; and

"(3) a licensee shall certify, under penalty of perjury, that the charges made for the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for public office are at the lowest unit charge of the station for the same amount of time for the same period.

"(d) The Commission shall monitor compliance with this section with timely auditing of licensees' records relating to use, and requests for use, of broadcast stations by candidates.".

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Federal Election Commission Enforcement Authority

SEC. 601. ELIMINATION OF REASON TO BELIEVE STANDARD.

Section 309(a)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(2)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(A)" after "(2)"; and

(2) by striking the first sentence and inserting the following: "Except as otherwise provided in subparagraph (B), if the Commission, upon receiving a complaint under paragraph (1) or on the basis of information ascertained in the normal course of carrying out its supervisory responsibilities determines, by an affirmative vote of 4 of its members, that an allegation of a violation or from pending violation of this Act or chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 states a claim of violation that would be sufficient under the standard applicable to a motion under rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Commission shall, through its chairman or vice chairman, notify the person of the alleged violation. Such vote shall occur within 90 days after receipt of such complaint."

SEC. 602. INJUNCTIVE AUTHORITY.

Section 309(a)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(2)), as amended by section 601, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) The Commission may petition the appropriate court for an injunction if—

"(i) the Commission believes that there is a substantial likelihood that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is occurring or is about to occur;

"(ii) the failure to act expeditiously will result in irreparable harm to a party affected by the potential violation;

"(iii) such expeditious action will not cause undue harm or prejudice to the interests of others; and

"(iv) the public interest would be best served by the issuance of an injunction."

SEC. 603. TIME PERIODS.

Section 309(a)(4)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(4)(A)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i) by—

(A) striking ", for a period of at least 30 days,"; and

(B) striking "90 days" and inserting "60 days"; and

(2) in clause (ii) by striking "at least" and inserting "no more than".

SEC. 604. KNOWING VIOLATION PENALTIES.

Section 309(a)(5)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(5)(B)) is amended by striking "may require that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $10,000 or an amount equal to 200 percent of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation" and inserting "shall require that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which is not less than the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, except that if the Commission believes that a knowing and willful violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 has been committed during the 15-day period immediately preceding any election, a conciliation agreement entered into by the Commission under paragraph (4)(A) shall require that the person involved in such conciliation agreement shall pay a civil penalty which is not less than the greater of $10,000 or an amount equal to 200 percent of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation."

SEC. 605. COURT RESOLVED VIOLATIONS AND PENALTIES.

Section 309(a)(6) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(6)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A) by—

(A) striking "Commission may" and inserting "Commission shall";

(B) striking "including" and inserting "which shall include"; and

(C) striking "which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to any" and inserting "which equals the greater of $10,000 or an amount equal to 200 percent of any"; and

(2) in subparagraph (B) by—

(A) striking "court may" and inserting "court shall"; and

(B) striking ", including" and inserting "which shall include"; and

(C) striking "which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to any" and inserting "which equals the greater of $10,000 or an amount equal to 200 percent of any".

SEC. 606. PRIVATE CIVIL ACTIONS.

Section 309(a)(6)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(6)(A)), as amended by section 605, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(i)" after "(6)(A)"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(ii) If, by a tie vote, the Commission does not vote to institute a civil action pursuant to clause (i), the candidate involved in such election, or an individual authorized to act on behalf of such candidate, may file an action for appropriate relief in the district court for the district in which the respondent is found, resides, or transacts business. If the court determines that a violation has occurred, the court shall impose the appropriate civil penalty. Any such award of a civil penalty made under this paragraph shall be made in favor of the United States. In addition to any such civil penalty, the court shall award to the prevailing party in any action under this paragraph, all attorneys' fees and actual costs reasonably incurred in the investigation and pursuit of any such action, including those attorneys' fees and costs reasonably incurred in bringing or defending the proceeding before the Commission."

SEC. 607. KNOWING VIOLATIONS RESOLVED IN COURT.

Section 309(a)(6)(C) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(6)(C)) is amended by striking "may impose a civil penalty which does not exceed the greater of $10,000 or an amount equal to 200 percent of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation" and inserting "shall impose a civil penalty which is not less than the greater of $10,000 or an amount equal to 200 percent of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation, except that if such violation was committed during the 15-day period immediately preceding the election, the court shall impose a civil penalty which is not less than the greater of $15,000 or an amount equal to 300 percent of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation".

SEC. 608. ACTION ON COMPLAINT BY COMMISSION.

Section 309(a)(8)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "act on" and inserting "reasonably pursue";

(2) by striking "120-day" and inserting "60-day"; and

(3) by striking "United States District Court for the District of Columbia" and inserting "appropriate court".

SEC. 609. VIOLATION OF CONFIDENTIALITY REQUIREMENT.

Section 309(a)(12)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(12)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "$2,000" and inserting "$5,000"; and

(2) by striking "$5,000" and inserting "$10,000".

SEC. 610. PENALTY IN ATTORNEY GENERAL ACTIONS.

Section 309(d)(1)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(d)(1)(A)) is amended by striking "exceed" and inserting "be less than".

SEC. 611. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO ENFORCEMENT AND JUDICIAL REVIEW.

(a) TIME LIMITATIONS FOR AND INDEX OF INVESTIGATIONS.—Section 309(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)), as amended by section 324, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(14) The Commission shall establish time limitations for investigations under this subsection.

"(15) The Commission shall publish an index of all investigations under this section and shall update the index quarterly."

(b) PROCEDURE ON INITIAL DETERMINATION.—Section 309(a)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(2)), as amended by section 602, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Before a vote based on information ascertained in the normal course of carrying out supervisory responsibilities, the person alleged to have committed the violation shall be notified of the allegation and shall have the opportunity to demonstrate, in writing, to the Commission within 15 days after notification that no action should be taken against such person on the basis of the information. Prior to any determination, the Commission may request voluntary responses to questions from any person who may become the subject of an investigation. A determination under this paragraph shall be accompanied by a written statement of the reasons for the determination."

(c) PROCEDURE ON PROBABLE CAUSE DETERMINATION.—(1) Section 309(a)(3) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(3)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Commission shall make available to a respondent any documentary or other evidence relied on by the general counsel in making a recommendation under this subsection. Any brief or report by the general counsel that replies to the respondent's brief shall be provided to the respondent."

(2) Section 309(a)(4)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(4)(A)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clauses:

"(iii) A determination under clause (i) shall be made only after opportunity for a hearing upon request of the respondent and shall be accompanied by a statement of the reasons for the determination.

"(iv) The Commission shall not require that any conciliation agreement under this paragraph contain an admission by the respondent of a violation of this Act or any other law."

(d) ELIMINATION OF EN BANC HEARING REQUIREMENT.—Section 310 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437h), as amended by section 124(d), is amended by striking ", which shall hear the matter sitting en banc".

SEC. 612. TIGHTENING ENFORCEMENT.

(a) REPEAL OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION.—Section 406 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 455) is repealed.

(b) SUPPLYING OF INFORMATION TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—Section 309(a)(12) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(12)(A)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prohibit or prevent the Commission from making information contained in compliance files available to the Attorney General, at the Attorney General's request, in connection with an investigation or trial."

Subtitle B—Telephone Voting by Persons with Disabilities

SEC. 616. STUDY OF SYSTEMS TO PERMIT PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES TO VOTE BY TELEPHONE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Federal Election Commission shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of developing a system or systems by which persons with disabilities may be permitted to vote by telephone.

(b) CONSULTATION.—The Federal Election Commission shall conduct the study described in subsection (a) in consultation with State and local election officials, representatives of the telecommunications industry, representatives of persons with disabilities, and other concerned members of the public.

(c) CRITERIA.—The system or systems developed pursuant to subsection (a) shall—

(1) propose a description of the kinds of disabilities that impose such difficulty in travel to polling places that a person with a disability who may desire to vote is discouraged from undertaking such travel;

(2) propose procedures to identify persons who are so disabled; and

(3) describe procedures and equipment that may be used to ensure that—

(A) only those persons who are entitled to use the system are permitted to use it;

(B) the votes of persons who use the system are recorded accurately and remain secret;

(C) the system minimizes the possibility of vote fraud; and

(D) the system minimizes the financial costs that State and local governments would incur in establishing and operating the system.

(d) REQUESTS FOR PROPOSALS.—In developing a system described in subsection (a), the Federal Election Commission may request proposals from private contractors for the design of procedures and equipment to be used in the system.

(e) PHYSICAL ACCESS.—Nothing in this section is intended to supersede or supplant efforts by State and local governments to make polling places physically accessible to persons with disabilities.

(f) DEADLINE.—The Federal Election Commission shall submit to Congress the study required by this section not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

Subtitle C—Other Provisions

SEC. 621. DISCLOSURE OF DEBT SETTLEMENT AND LOAN SECURITY AGREEMENTS.

Section 304(b) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)), as amended by section 312, is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (8), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (9) and inserting a semicolon, and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(10) for the reporting period, the terms of any settlement agreement entered into with respect to a loan or other debt, as evidenced by a copy of such agreement filed as part of the report; and

"(11) for the reporting period, the terms of any security or collateral agreement entered into with respect to a loan, as evidenced by a copy of such agreement filed as part of the report."

SEC. 622. CONTRIBUTIONS FOR DRAFT AND ENCOURAGEMENT PURPOSES WITH RESPECT TO ELECTIONS FOR FEDERAL OFFICE.

(a) DEFINITION.—Section 301(8)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)(A)) is amended by striking "or" after the semicolon at the end of clause (i), by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting "; and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(iii) any gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value made by any person for the purpose of drafting a clearly identified individual as a candidate for Federal office or encouraging a clearly identified individual to become a candidate for Federal office."

(b) DRAFT AND ENCOURAGEMENT CONTRIBUTIONS TO BE TREATED AS CANDIDATE CONTRIBUTIONS.—Section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)), as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(12) For purposes of paragraph (1)(A) and paragraph (2)(A), any contribution described in section 301(8)(A)(iii) shall be treated, with respect to the individual involved, as a contribution to a candidate, whether or not the individual becomes a candidate."

SEC. 623. SEVERABILITY.

If any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act, or the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of any other such provision, and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 624. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as otherwise provided in this Act, this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this Act, and shall apply to all contributions and expenditures made after that date.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS—THE COMPREHENSIVE CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM AND ETHICS ACT OF 1991

Section 1. Short Title.

This Act may be cited as "The Comprehensive Campaign Finance Reform and Ethics Act of 1991."

TITLE I—FLEXIBLE FUNDRAISING TARGETS

This Title adopts the "flexible" approach advocated by the Bipartisan Panel of Experts, which was commissioned in February 1990 by Senators Dole and Mitchell. The Title establishes aggregate state-by-state fundraising targets based on voting age population for the primary and general elections. The fundraising targets would cap contributions from political action committees (if the PAC-ban is declared unconstitutional), personal funds, and contributions from out-of-state individuals in excess of $250.

Flexible Component.—Exempts from the aggregate cap donations from in-state individuals. Exempts donations of $250 or less from out-of-state individuals.

Voluntary.—Acceptance of "flexible" fundraising targets would be voluntary. Participating candidates would be entitled to reduced broadcast rates (see section 501).

Application.—Applies to participating candidates for the Senate in 1994, 1996, and 1998.

Bipartisan Commission.—Establishes a Bipartisan Commission to review effects of "flexible" fundraising targets on campaign spending and the cost of campaigns during the 1994 and 1996 elections to the Senate. Requires the Bipartisan Commission to submit a report to Congress outlining its findings on or before November 7, 1997.

Sunset Provision.—This Title "sunsets" after the 1998 elections to the Senate. At that time, flexible fundraising targets would expire, unless re-enacted by Congress.

TITLE II—ETHICS-IN-GOVERNMENT

Section 201. Public Disclosure of Congressional Intervention in Enforcement Actions.

This section has two parts:

a. Part A requires all federal agencies (independent agencies and executive branch departments) to disclose unwritten (i.e. telephonic, personal, etc.) Congressional contacts with the agency concerning (a) potential or ongoing enforcement matters and (b) proceedings related to the award of agency contracts. The section requires each agency to compile a monthly list specifying (a) the source of the contact, (b) the stated purpose of the contact, (c) any information requested or actions suggested to the agency, and (d) any other pertinent information. The agencies are required to submit these lists to the Congressional committees of jurisdiction. The Congressional committees are then required to submit these lists for publication in the Congressional Record on a semi-annual basis.

Comment: Part A basically extends to all federal agencies the Banking Committee policy requiring the public disclosure of Congressional contacts with the FDIC.

b. Part B requires all federal agencies (independent agencies and executive branch departments) to incorporate all written Congressional communications into the appropriate Public File of (a) any potential or ongoing enforcement action, (b) any proceeding relating to the award of an agency contract. Agency responses to the Congressional communications must also be incorporated into the Public File.

Comment: Part B reflects the policy of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

TITLE III—REDUCTION OF SPECIAL INTEREST INFLUENCE

Subtitle A—Elimination of Political Action Committees From Federal Election Activities

Section 301. Ban on Activities of Political Action Committees in Federal Elections.

This section eliminates all "special interest" political action committees (corporate, union, and trade association PACs). This section also bans all non-connected or ideological PACs and all "leadership" PACs. [Note: if a ban on non-connected PACs is determined to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, the legislation will subject non-connected PACs to a $1000 contribution limit.]

Subtitle B—Ban on Soft Money in Federal Elections

Section 311. Ban on Soft Money.

This section bans all "soft" money from being used to influence a federal election. "Soft" money is the raising and spending of political money outside of the source restrictions, contributions limits, and disclosure requirements of the Federal Election Campaign Act and its regulations.

Section 312. Restrictions on Party Committees.

This section establishes new rules for political party committees to ensure that "soft" money is not used to influence federal elections, including:

(1) the requirement that national, state and local political parties establish a separate account for activities benefiting federal candidates and a separate account for activities benefiting state candidates;

(2) the requirement of full disclosure of all accounts by any political party committee that maintains a federal account; and

(3) the establishment of minimum percentages of federal funds which must be used for any party building program (e.g. voter registration, get-out-the-vote, absentee ballot, ballot security) which benefits both federal and state candidates.

Section 313. Protection for Employees.

This section codifies the Supreme Court decision in Beck and provides certain rights for employees who are union members. [S. 1645 (McConnell); S. 1727 (Bush); House Republican Task Force]

Section 314. Restrictions on Soft Money Activities of Tax-Exempt Organizations.

This section prohibits tax-exempt, 501(c) organizations from engaging in any activity which attempts to influence a federal election on behalf of a specific candidate for public office. This section accomplishes this goal by extending to all 501(c) organizations the current prohibition on campaign activity which applies to 501(c)(3) charities. [Note: the effective date for this provision will be September 1, 1991.]

Section 315. Denial of Tax-Exempt Status for Certain Politically Active Organizations.

This section restricts tax-exempt organizations from engaging in voter registration or GOTV activities (which are not candidate-specific) if a candidate or Member of Congress solicits money for the organization. [S. 2148 (McConnell)].

Section 316. Contributions to Certain Political Organizations Maintained by a Candidate.

This section restricts federal activities by state PACs created by Members of Congress [S. 2148 (McConnell)].

Subtitle C—Other Activities

Section 321. Modification of Contribution Limits on Individuals.

This section reduces from $1,000 to $500 the maximum allowable contribution by individuals residing outside of a candidate's state.

This section also indexes the individual contribution limit ($1,000 per election for in-state contributions or $500 per election for out-of-state contributions) for Congressional candidates using the Consumer Price Index; adjustments would be rounded to the nearest $100 [Mitchell/Dole Panel Recommendation (modified)]

Section 322. Political Parties.

This section exempts certain organizational activities (research, GOTV, voter registration) from coordinated or other limitations; requires disclosure and allocation for these activities; and retains the same coordinated expenditure limits for media expenditures. [Mitchell/Dole Panel Recommendation]

This section raises contributions to politcal parties from the $25,000 annual limit to $50,000 [Modified Mitchell/Dole Panel Recommendation]

Section 323. Contributions Through Intermediaries and Conduits.

This section prohibits "bundling" by registered lobbyists, unions, trade associations, corporations, and other employers. Bundled contributions which are permitted must be made payable to the candidate and disclosed to the candidate and the Federal Election Commission. [Mitchell/Dole Panel Recommendation; S. 1727 (Bush)]

Section 324. Independent Expenditures.

This section requires all independently-financed political communications to disclose the person or organization financing it; requires that disclosure be complete and conspicuous; and requires timely notice to all candidates of the communications' placement and content. [S. 7 (Dole-McConnell-Stevens); House Republican Task Force]

This section also defines "independent expenditure" to prohibit consultation with a candidate or his agent; requires the FEC to hold a hearing within 3 days of any formal complaint of collusion between an independent expenditure committee and a candidate. [S. 7 (Dole-McConnell-Stevens); House Republican Task Force]

Finally, this section creates an expedited cause of action in federal courts for a candidate seeking relief from expenditures which are not "independent." [Mitchell/Dole Panel Recommendation]

TITLE IV—INCREASE OF COMPETITION IN POLITICS

Subtitle A—General Provisions

Section 401. Seed Money for Challengers.

This section permits political party committees to use a special coordinated expenditure fund to "match" early, in-state contributions by challengers to help begin a campaign. Party committee matching funds would be permitted to a maximum of challengers. [Ornstein (modified)]

Section 402. Opposition Research Fund.

This section allows the Congressional campaign committees and the Senatorial campaign committees to establish an "opposition research fund" in connection with a primary or general election for Senate and House challengers. The "opposition research fund" would be financed by the committees up to $50,000. The purpose of the fund is to allow the recognized challenger of a Senate or House incumbent to establish an office and hire staff. Funds for the office and staff must be earmarked exclusively for research into the voting/public record of the incumbent.

Section 403. Ban on Roll-Over of Campaign Funds.

This section prohibits the roll-over of all surplus House and Senate campaign funds existing on November 7, 1994. Effective November 7, 1994, House Members may roll-over an amount not to exceed $50,000, and Senate Members may roll-over an amount not to exceed $100,000.

This section also prohibits State officials from rolling-over State campaign funds for use in a federal election. In the case of a candidate for the House of Representatives, surplus State campaign funds may be rolled-over in an amount not to exceed $50,000. In the case of a candidate for Senate, surplus State campaign funds may be rolled-over in an amount not to exceed $100,000.

Surplus campaign funds may be a) transferred to a tax-exempt 501(c)(3) organization, b) refunded to contributors on a pro rata basis, or c) paid into the Treasury of the United States and applied to the account to reduce the public debt.

Section 404. Use of Campaign Funds.

This section prohibits Members from supplementing their official office accounts with campaign funds. [S. 1727 (Bush)]

Section 405. Truth-in-Incumbency.

This section allows the State political parties to finance television and radio ads out of their federal accounts for the purpose of discussing the voting/public record of the Senate incumbent. These State-party financed ads may be aired at any time prior to the date of the primary election or the date on which the State party nominates its own candidate, whichever is earlier. The ads may not name or mention the State party's own prospective candidate. They may only discuss the voting/public record of the Senate incumbent. State-party financed ads must be at least 1 minute in length.

Section 406. Candidate Expenditures From Personal Funds.

This section requires congressional candidates to declare upon filing for an election whether they intend to spend or loan over $250,000 in personal funds in the race; raise the individual contribution limit to $5000 per election from $1000 for all opponents of a candidate who declares such an intention. No limits would apply to individual contributions and expenditures by party committees if a candidate spends more than $1 million in personal funds. [S. — (Domenici); S. 7 (Dole-McConnell-Stevens) (modified)]

This section also prohibits candidates from recovering personal funds or loans used in their race from contributions raised after the election. [S. 332 (McConnell)]

Section 407. Limitations on Gerrymandering.

This section requires new standards for Congressional reapportionment and redistricting, including the full and fair enforcement of the Voting Rights Act. This provision will: (1) codify current case law and maintain previous statutory requirements that Congressional districts be of equal population, and be contiguous and compact in form; (2) repeal current statutory provisions permitting multi-member Congressional districts; and (3) limit the division of county and political subdivision boundary lines, as well as redistricting egregious partisan gerrymandering. [S. 1727 (Bush); House Republican Task Force]

Section 408. Election Fraud and Other Public Corruption.

This section creates a new public corruption statute which codifies current case law and increases the authority of the U.S. Justice Department to combat election fraud at all levels of the government. [S. — (Biden-McConnell)]

Subtitle B—Congressional Mass Mailings

Section 411. Franked Communications.

This section prohibits Members of Congress from conducting franked mass mailings during an election year and prohibits franking transfers to a Member up for re-election. This section also requires the quarterly publication in the Congressional Record of 1) the total number of pieces of mass mail sent by each Member, 2) the total cost of the mailing, and 3) all franking transfers, including information related to a) the name of the office to which the transfer was received, b) the amount of transfer, c) the amount of the allocation made to the office for the fiscal year, d) the total amount of allocations that have been transferred by and to the office to date during the fiscal year, and e) the amount of the transfer remaining available to the office for the fiscal year. This section is based on an amendment offered last year by Senator Don Nickles.

TITLE V—REDUCTION OF CAMPAIGN COSTS

Section 501. Broadcast Discount.

This section allows Presidential and Congressional candidates to purchase nonpreemptible time at the lowest unit rate for preemptible time, in the last 45 days before a primary and the last 60 days before the general election. [S. 1009 (Danforth-Hollings); S. 744 (McConnell); S. 7 (Dole-McConnell-Stevens)]

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Federal Election Commission Enforcement Authority

Section 601. Elimination of Reason to Believe Standard.

This section eliminates the "reason to believe" standard. The Commission, upon receiving a complaint, will have to investigate a complaint if the identity of the complianant is known, and the complaint is sufficient on its face. [S. 16556 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 602. Injunctive Authority.

This section provides the FEC the authority to seek injunctive relief to stop certain violations or an impending violation. [S. 1655 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 603. Time Periods.

This section streamlines the administrative procedures for a complaint brought by the Commission by eliminating the minimum waiting period of 30 days and lowering the maximum period for post-probable cause conciliation bargaining to 60 days. [S. 1655 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 604. Knowing Violation Penalties.

This section increases the penalties for knowing and willful violations which are resolved informally and requires these penalties to be mandatory. [S. 1655 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 605. Court Resolved Violations and Penalties.

This section increases the penalty for violations that must be resolved in court and requires the penalty to be mandatory. [S. 1655 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 606. Private Civil Actions.

This section permits a candidate, or a person authorized by a candidate, to sue on a complaint whenever the Commission declines to pursue an alleged violation by a tie vote. In such an action, the complainant may bring suit in U.S. District Court and any monetary award would be made in favor of the United States. The prevailing party would collect attorney's fees from the loser to discourage frivolous suits. [S. 1655 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 607. Knowing Violations Resolved in Court.

This section increases the penalties for knowing and willful violations resolved in court. [S. 1655 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 608. Action on Complaint by Commission.

This section reduces the time period by which the Commission must act on a complaint from 120 to 60 days. [S. 1655 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 609. Violation of Confidentiality Requirement.

This section increases the fines for violations of the confidentiality requirement. [S. 1655 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 610. Penalty in Attorney General Actions.

This section increases the penalties for violations of the election laws where the Attorney General separately prosecutes. [S. 1655 (McConnell-Reid)]

Section 611. Amendments Relating to Enforcement and Judicial Review.

This section implements several procedural recommendations proposed by the Mitchell/Dole Panel on Campaign Finance Reform. This section will:

provide the Commission with more authority to informally resolve both complaint- and internally-generated investigations before any determination by the Commission; provide respondents with more access to documents provided by third parties in an investigation;

provide respondents with access to any report submitted to the Commission by the General Counsel after the respondent has filed his or her brief;

provide respondents with the right to present oral arguments before a Commission finding of probable cause; eliminate the ability of the Commission to routinely require admissions by the respondent that a violation has occurred; and establish time limits for investigations and require the Commission to publish an index of all investigations which have been concluded. [Mitchell/Dole Panel Recommendation]

Section 612. Tightening Enforcement.

This section repeals the shortened 3 year statute of limitations for violations of the Act and returns to the general 5 year statute of limitations. This section also permits the Attorney General to have access to FEC compliance files pursuant to a criminal investigation or trial. [S/ 1727 (Bush)]

Subtitle B—Telephone Voting by Persons with Disabilities

This Subtitle directs the Federal Election Commisison to conduct a feasibility study of telephonic voting by persons with disabilities who are physically unable to go to the polls. The FEC shall conduct the study in consultation with State and local election officials, representatives of the telecommunications industry, representatives of persons with disabilities, and other concerned members of the public. The study must describe procedure and equipment that may be used to ensure that (1) only those persons who are entitled to use the system are permitted to use it, (2) the votes of persons who use the system are recorded accurately and remain secret, (3) the system minimizes the possibility of vote fraud, and (4) the system minimizes the financial costs that State and local governments would incur in establishing and operating the system.

Subtitle C—Other Provisions

Section 621. Disclosure of Debt Settlement and Loan Security Agreements.

This section clarifies FEC rules on campaign credit, loans, and debt settlement. [House Republican Task Force]

Section 622. Contributions for Draft and Encouragement Purposes With Respect to Elections for Federal Office.

This section defines "contribution" to include donations made to draft or exploratory committees advocating that a clearly identified individual becomes a candidate for federal office. [House Republican Task Force]

Section 623. Severability.

This section provides that if any portion of this Act is found to be invalid, then the remaining portions of the Act shall continue in full force and effect.

Section 624. Effective Date.

This section requires the Act to be effective upon enactment, unless a specific section provides otherwise.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. SIMPSON):

S. 7. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to increase competition and fairness in politics, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

FAIRNESS IN POLITICS ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there is no doubt about it, with a reelection rate of 97 percent, congressional incumbents are living on "easy street." That is why we can't have truly competitive elections unless we go the extra mile to help the challengers who run against incumbents. Therefore, today I am introducing S. 7—a companion measure to the campaign finance reform package—that can help bring more competition to our election process.

Incumbents enjoy all kinds of advantages—the frank, large staffs, high name recognition, easy access to the media, and most importantly, a ready-made ability to tap into the special-interest money that fuels congressional campaigns. But when it comes to sharing these advantages, congressional challengers are most often left out in the cold, all but eliminating competition in politics.

Let me make one thing clear: Incumbents are not to blame for playing by the rules—the rules are the problem. What we need to do, is change some of the rules to level the playing field, and give challengers a fighting chance.

Free broadcast time, advertising discount to do that, we have to go where the campaign dollars go—for the cost of broadcast time. Television advertising accounts for nearly half of the cost of the average Senate campaign. Under S. 7, candidates would be entitled to a substantial discount for nonpreemptible television time, allowing challengers to get their message out to the voters at a significantly reduced cost.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the Fairness in Politics Act of 1991, and a section-by-section analysis, be included in the RECORD immediately after my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 7

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—BAN ON POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES

SEC. 101. BAN ON ACTIVITIES OF POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title III of FECA (2 U.S.C. 301 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"BAN ON FEDERAL ELECTION ACTIVITIES BY POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES

"SEC. 324. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no person other than an individual or a political committee may make contributions, solicit or receive contributions, or make expenditures for the purpose of influencing an election for Federal office."

(b) DEFINITION OF POLITICAL COMMITTEE.—(1) Section 301(4) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The term 'political committee' means—

"(A) the principal campaign committee of a candidate;

"(B) any national, State, or district committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee thereof;

"(C) any local committee of a political party which—

"(i) receives contributions aggregating in excess of $5,000 during a calendar year;

"(ii) makes payments exempted from the definition of contribution or expenditure under paragraph (8) or (9) aggregating in excess of $5,000 during a calendar year; or

"(iii) makes contributions or expenditures aggregating in excess of $1,000 during a calendar year; and

"(D) any committee jointly established by a principal campaign committee and any committee described in subparagraph (B) or (C) for the purpose of conducting joint fundraising activities."

(2) Section 316(b)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441b(b)(2)) is amended by striking subparagraphs (B) and (C).

(c) CANDIDATE'S COMMITTEES.—(1) Section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) For the purposes of the limitations provided by paragraphs (1) and (2), any political committee which is established or financed or maintained or controlled by any candidate or Federal officeholder shall be deemed to be an authorized committee of such candidate or officeholder."

(2) Section 302(e)(3) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) No political committee that supports or has supported more than one candidate may be designated as an authorized committee, except that—

"(A) a candidate for the office of President nominated by a political party may designate the national committee of such political party as the candidate's principal campaign committee, but only if that national committee maintains separate books of account with respect to its functions as a principal campaign committee; and

"(B) a candidate may designate a political committee established solely for the purpose of joint fundraising by such candidates as an authorized committee."

(d) RULES APPLICABLE WHEN BAN NOT IN EFFECT.—For the purposes of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, during any period in which the limitation under section 324 of FECA (as added by subsection (a)) is not in effect—

(1) the amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall not be in effect; and

(2) it shall be unlawful for any person that—

(A) is treated as a political committee by reason of paragraph (1); and

(B) is not directly or indirectly established, administered, or supported by a connected organization which is a corporation, labor organization, or trade association, to make contributions to any candidate or the candidate's authorized committee for any election aggregating in excess of $1,000.

TITLE II—SEED MONEY

Subtitle A—Challengers

SEC. 201. SEED MONEY FOR CHALLENGERS.

Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the congressional campaign committee or the senatorial campaign committee of a national political party, whichever is applicable, may make contributions to an eligible candidate (and the candidate's authorized committees) that in the aggregate do not exceed the lesser of—

"(A)(i) $150,000, in the case of a candidate for the House of Representatives; or

"(ii) $250,000, in the case of a candidate for the Senate; or

"(B) the aggregate qualified matching contributions received by the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees.

"(2) A contribution under paragraph (1) shall not be treated as an expenditure for purposes of subsection (d)(3).

"(3) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'qualified matching contributions' means contributions made during the period of the election cycle preceding the primary election by an individual who, at the time the contributions are made, is a resident of the State in which the election with respect to which such contributions are made is to be held; and

"(B) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate for election, or nomination for election, to Federal office (other than President or Vice President) who does not hold Federal office."

Subtitle B—Research

SEC. 211. OPPOSITION RESEARCH FUND.

Section 315(i)(1) of FECA, as added by section 201, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following flush sentence:

"In addition to a contribution under the preceding sentence, the congressional campaign committee or the senatorial campaign committee of a national political party, whichever is applicable, may make contributions to an eligible candidate (and the candidate's authorized committees), in an aggregate amount not exceeding $50,000, for the sole purpose of conducting research into the voting and other public records of the candidate's opponent to determine the opponent's views on issues relevant to the election."

TITLE III—TRUTH-IN-INCUMBENCY

SEC. 301. INCUMBENT ACCOUNTABILITY.

Section 315(d) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) For purposes of paragraph (3), an expenditure by a State or local committee of a political party for a radio or television advertisement that—

"(A) is made for the purpose of publicizing the voting or other public record of an incumbent who is not a member of the political party of the committee that makes the expenditure;

"(B) does not indicate whether the incumbent is or will be a candidate for Federal office or whether a listener or viewer should vote against the incumbent; and

"(C) is made prior to the date on which a candidate of that party is nominated for election to the office held by the incumbent, is not an expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of a candidate. This paragraph shall only apply to advertisements that are at least 1 minute in length."

TITLE IV—BAN ON ROLLOVER OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS

SEC. 401. CAMPAIGN FUNDS OF CANDIDATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 313 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 439a) is amended to read as follows:

"USE OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS

"SEC. 313. (a) Amounts received as contributions by a candidate for the Senate or the House of Representatives and the authorized committees of such a candidate that are surplus campaign funds may be—

"(1) transferred to an organization described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 that is exempt from taxation under section 501(a) of such Code;

"(2) refunded to contributors on a pro rata basis; or

"(3) paid into the Treasury of the United States and applied to the account to reduce the public debt described in section 3113(d) of section 31, United States Code.

"(b)(1) It shall be unlawful for a candidate or an authorized committee of a candidate or for any person acting as an agent of either to dispose of surplus campaign funds in any manner except as required by subsection (a).

"(2) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to accept or receive surplus campaign funds for purposes or in a manner other than those specified in subsection (a).

"(c) The disposition of surplus campaign funds shall be reported on the post-election semiannual report that is filed pursuant to section 304 on or before July 31 of the year following the election for which the funds were raised.

"(d) For purposes of this section, the term 'surplus campaign funds' means the amount (if any) after a general election by which—

"(1) the contributions made to the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees with respect to the election cycle for such election; exceeds

"(2) the sum of—

"(A) the expenditures made by such candidate or authorized committees with respect to such election cycle; and

"(B) in the case of a candidate for the House of Representatives, $50,000, and in the case of a candidate for the Senate, $100,000."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply to surplus campaign funds existing on November 9, 1994, and thereafter.

SEC. 402. STATE AND LOCAL CAMPAIGN FUNDS.

Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by section 201, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) It shall be unlawful for an individual who is a candidate for Federal office (or any authorized committee) to transfer campaign funds raised in connection with any campaign of such individual for State or local office for use in the campaign for such Federal office. The preceding sentence shall not apply to the extent such funds do not exceed $50,000 in the case of a candidate for the House of Representatives, or $100,000 in the case of a candidate for the United States Senate."

TITLE V—BROADCAST PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Free Time

SEC. 501. FREE TIME FOR SENATE CANDIDATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 315 of the Communications Act (47 U.S.C. 315) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)—

(A) by striking "The" and inserting "(1) The";

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B); and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A)(i) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, a licensee shall make available at no charge 5 hours of broadcast time during a Senate election cycle for the use of legally qualified candidates who have qualified for the general election ballot for a seat in the United States Senate.

"(ii) Unless a candidate elects otherwise, the broadcast time made available under this subparagraph shall be during the daytime and prime time.

"(B) If—

"(i) a licensee's audience with respect to any broadcast station is measured or rated by a recognized media rating service in more than 1 State; and

"(ii) during any Senate election cycle there is an election to the United States Senate in more than 1 of such States, the 5 hours of broadcast time under subparagraph (A) shall be allocated equally among the States described in clause (ii).

"(C)(i) In the case of an election between 2 candidates, the number of hours of broadcast time allocated to a State under subparagraph (A) shall be allocated equally between the 2 candidates.

"(ii) In the case of an election among more than 2 candidates, the broadcast time provided under subparagraph (A) shall be allocated as follows:

"(I) The amount of broadcast time that shall be provided to the candidate of a minor party shall be equal to the number of hours allocable to the State multiplied by the percentage of the number of popular votes received by the candidate of that party in the preceding general election for the Senate in the State (or if subsection (c)(4)(B) applies, the percentage determined under such subsection).

"(II) The amount of broadcast time remaining after assignment of broadcast time to minor party candidates under subclause (I) shall be allocated equally between the major party candidates.

"(iii) In the case of an election where only 1 candidate qualifies to be on the general election ballot, no time shall be required to be provided by a licensee under subparagraph (A).

"(C) Each candidate to whom free broadcast time is allocated under this section shall reserve at least two-thirds of the time for use during the period beginning September 1 of the year in which the general election occurs and ending on the date of the general election.

"(D) Free broadcast time provided under this subsection shall be used in segments of such duration as the candidate may select but shall not be shorter than 1 minute or longer than 1 hour.

"(E) The Federal Election Commission shall by regulation exempt from the requirements of this paragraph—

"(i) a licensee whose signal is broadcast substantially nationwide; and

"(ii) a licensee that establishes to the satisfaction of the Commission that such requirements would impose a significant economic hardship on the licensee."; and

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (1);

(B) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting a semicolon; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) the term 'major party' means, with respect to an election for the United States Senate in a State, a political party whose candidate for the United States Senate in the preceding general election for the Senate in that State received, as a candidate of that party, 25 percent or more of the number of popular votes received by all candidates for the Senate;

"(4) the term 'minor party' means, with respect to an election for the United States Senate in a State, a political party—

"(A) whose candidate for the United States Senate in the preceding general election for the Senate in that State received, as a candidate of that party, 5 percent or more but less than 25 percent of the number of popular votes received by all candidates for the Senate; or

"(B) whose candidate for the United States Senate in the current general election for the Senate in that State has obtained the signatures of at least 5 percent of the State's registered voters, as determined by the chief voter registration official of the State, in support of a petition for an allocation of free broadcast time under this subsection;

"(5) the term 'Senate election cycle' means, with respect to an election to a seat in the United States Senate, the 2-year period ending on the date of the general election for that seat; and

"(6) the term 'Senate general election period' means the period beginning on the day after the date of the primary election in which candidates for the United States Senate are nominated in a State and ending on the date of the general election for the Senate in the State.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to the general elections occurring in 1992 and 1994 (and the election cycles relating thereto).

(2) REPORT.—Not later than June 1, 1995, the Federal Election Commission, in consultation with the Federal Communications Commission, shall submit a report to the Congress analyzing the effects of the free broadcast time provided by the amendments made by this section, including an analysis of—

(A) the effect of such time on the cost of Senate election campaigns;

(B) the cost to the broadcast industry of providing such time; and

(C) any technical problems in providing such time.

Subtitle B—Broadcast Discount

SEC. 511. BROADCAST DISCOUNT.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) in the 45 days preceding a primary election, and in the 60 days preceding a general election, candidates for political office need to be able to buy, at the lowest unit charge, nonpreemptible advertising spots from broadcast stations and cable television stations to ensure that their messages reach the intended audience and that the voting public has an opportunity to make informed decisions;

(2) since the Communications Act of 1934 was amended in 1972 to guarantee the lowest unit charge for candidates during these important preelection periods, the method by which advertising spots are sold in the broadcast and cable industries has changed significantly;

(3) changes in the method for selling advertising spots have made the interpretation and enforcement of the lowest unit charge provision difficult and complex;

(4) clarification and simplification of the lowest unit charge provision in the Communications Act of 1934 is necessary to ensure compliance with the original intent of the provision; and

(5) in granting discounts and setting charges for advertising time, broadcasters and cable operators should treat candidates for political office at least as well as the most favored commercial advertisers.

(b) AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ACT.—Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315), as amended by section 501, is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(1)(A), by striking "class and";

(2) by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively; and

(3) by inserting immediately after subsection (b) the following new subsections:

"(c) During any period specified in subsection (b)(1)—

"(1) a licensee shall not preempt the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for public office who has purchased such use pursuant to subsection (b)(1), or is entitled to such use pursuant to subsection (b)(2);

"(2) a licensee shall not deny the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for public office who seeks to use reasonable amounts of time in, around, or adjacent to any programs aired by the station; and

"(3) a licensee shall certify, under penalty of perjury, that the charges made for the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for public office are at the lowest unit charge of the station for the same amount of time for the same period.

"(d) The Commission shall monitor compliance with this section with timely auditing of licensees' records relating to use, and requests for use, of broadcast stations by candidates.".

TITLE VI—CONGRESSIONAL MASS MAILINGS

SEC. 601. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this title—

(1) the term "Commission" means the Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards of the House of Representatives; and

(2) the term "Sergeant at Arms" means the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

SEC. 602. STATEMENT OF COSTS AND RELATED EXPENSES OF CONGRESSIONAL MASS MAILINGS.

(a) SENATE.—(1) Two weeks after the close of each calendar quarter, or as soon as practicable thereafter, the Sergeant at Arms shall send to each Senator a statement of the cost of postage and paper and of the other operating expenses incurred as a result of mass mailings processed for such Senator during such quarter.

(2) A statement described in paragraph (1) shall—

(A) separately identify the cost of postage and paper and other costs;

(B) distinguish the costs attributable to newsletters and all other mass mailings; and

(C) include the total cost per capita in the Senator's State.

(3) The Sergeant at Arms shall submit to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate a compilation of the statements sent to Senators under paragraph (1).

(4)(A) A summary tabulation of the information contained in the statements sent to Senators under paragraph (1) shall be published quarterly in the Congressional Record and included in the semiannual Report of the Secretary of the Senate.

(B) The summary tabulation shall set forth for each Senator—

(i) the Senator's name;

(ii) the number of pieces of mass mail mailed during the quarter;

(iii) the total cost of such mail; and

(iv) the number of pieces and the cost of such mail divided by the population of the Senator's State.

(b) HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—(1) Two weeks after the close of each calendar quarter, or as soon as practicable thereafter, the Commission shall send to each Member of the House of Representatives a statement of the cost of postage and paper and of the other operating expenses incurred as a result of mass mailings processed for such Member during such quarter.

(2) A statement described in paragraph (1) shall—

(A) separately identify the cost of postage and paper and other costs;

(B) distinguish the costs attributable to newsletters and all other mass mailings; and

(C) include the total cost per capita in the Member's congressional district.

(3) The Commission shall submit to the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives a compilation of the statements sent to Members under paragraph (1).

(4)(A) A summary tabulation of the information contained in the statements sent to Members under paragraph (1) shall be published quarterly in the Congressional Record and included in the quarterly Report of the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

(B) The summary tabulations shall set forth for each Member—

(i) the Member's name;

(ii) the number of pieces of mass mail mailed during the quarter;

(iii) the total cost of such mail; and

(iv) the number of pieces and cost of such mail divided by the population of the Member's congressional district.

SEC. 603. RESTRICTIONS ON FRANKED CONGRESSIONAL MASS MAILINGS EXCEEDING APPROPRIATED FUNDS.

Section 3216(c) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(c)"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) If at any time during a fiscal year the Postal Service determines that the postage on and fees and charges in connection with matter mailed under the frank by the Senate during that year have exhausted the amount appropriated for use by the Senate, no more mass mailings (as defined in section 3210(a)(6)(E)) may be mailed by any Member of the Senate during the remainder of that fiscal year unless additional funds are appropriated for use by the Senate and paid to the Postal Service.

"(B) If at any time during a fiscal year the Postal Service determines that the postage on and fees and charges in connection with matter mailed under the frank by the House of Representatives during that year have exhausted the amount appropriated for use by the House of Representatives, no more mass mailings (as defined in section 3210(a)(6)(E)) may be mailed by any Member of the House of Representatives during the remainder of that fiscal year unless additional funds are appropriated for use by the House of Representatives and paid to the Postal Service.".

SEC. 604. EXTENSION OF TIME PERIOD WHEN FRANKED MASS MAILINGS ARE PROHIBITED.

Section 3210(a)(6) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by striking clause (i) and inserting the following:

"(i) if the mass mailing is mailed during the calendar year of any primary or general election (whether regular or runoff) in which the Member is a candidate for reelection; or"; and

(B) in clause (ii)(II) by striking "fewer than 60 days immediately before the date" and inserting "during the year"; and

(2) in subparagraph (C) by striking "fewer than 60 days immediately before the date" and inserting "during the year".

SEC. 605. REPORTING AND PUBLICATION OF FRANKED MASS MAILINGS.

Section 3210(a)(6) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by redesignating subparagraphs (D), (E), and (F) as subparagraphs (E), (F), and (G), respectively; and

(B) by inserting after subparagraph (C) the following new subparagraph:

"(D)(i)(I) When a Member of the Senate disseminates information under the frank by a mass mailing, the Member shall register such mass mailings annually with the Secretary of the Senate. Such registration shall be made by filing with the Secretary of the Senate a copy of the matter mailed and providing, on a form supplied by the Secretary of the Senate, a description of the group or groups of persons to whom the mass mailing was mailed.

"(II) The Secretary of the Senate shall promptly make available for public inspection and copying a copy of the mail matter registered and a description of the group or groups of persons to whom the mass mailing was mailed."

"(ii)(I) When a Member of the House of Representatives disseminates information under the frank by a mass mailing, the Member shall register such mass mailings annually with the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Such registration shall be made by filing with the Clerk of the House of Representatives a copy of the matter mailed and providing, on a form supplied by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, a description of the group or groups of persons to whom the mass mailing was mailed.

"(II) The Clerk of the House of Representatives shall promptly make available for public inspection and copying a copy of the mail matter registered and a description of the group or groups of persons to whom the mass mailing was mailed."

SEC. 606. TRANSFERS OF OFFICIAL MAIL COSTS.

(a) PROHIBITION OF TRANSFERS TO CANDIDATES.—(1) During any fiscal year in which appropriations for official mail costs of the Senate are allocated among offices of the Senate, no such office may transfer any of its allocation to the office of a Member of the Senate who is a candidate for Federal office.

(2) During any fiscal year in which appropriations for official mail costs of the House of Representatives are allocated among offices of the House of Representatives, no such office may transfer any of its allocation to the office of a Member of the House of Representatives who is a candidate for Federal office.

(b) REPORTING AND PUBLICATION.—(1)(A) Each office of the Senate that transfers or receives a transfer of an official mail cost allocation to or from another Senate office shall report to the Sergeant at Arms—

(i) the name of the office to which the transfer is made or from which the transfer was received;

(ii) the amount of the transfer;

(iii) the amount of the allocation made to the office for the fiscal year;

(iv) the total amount of allocations that have been transferred by and to the office to date during the fiscal year; and

(v) the amount of the allocation remaining available to the office for the fiscal year.

(B) The information reported to the Sergeant at Arms pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be published quarterly in the Congressional Record and included in the semiannual report of the Secretary of the Senate.

(C) Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, all offices of the Senate that have transferred or received a transfer of official mail cost allocations to or from another office of the Senate during the portion of fiscal year 1991 preceding such date of enactment shall report to the Sergeant at Arms the information described in paragraph (A) with respect to such transfers, and such information shall be published in the Congressional Record.

(2)(A) Each office of the House of Representatives that transfers or receives a transfer of an official mail cost allocation to or from another office of the House of Representatives shall report to the Commission—

(i) the name of the office to which the transfer is made or from which the transfer was received;

(ii) the amount of the transfer;

(iii) the amount of the allocation made to the office for the fiscal year;

(iv) the total amount of allocations that have been transferred by and to the office to date during the fiscal year; and

(v) the amount of the allocation remaining available to the office for the fiscal year.

(B) The information reported to the Commission pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be published quarterly in the Congressional Record and included in the quarterly report of the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

(c) AMENDMENT OF STANDING RULES OF THE SENATE.—(1) Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"7. (a) Each office of the Senate that transfers or receives a transfer of an official mail cost allocation to or from another Senate office shall report on the date of the transfer or receipt of the transfer to the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate—

"(1) the name of the office to which the transfer is made or from which the transfer was received;

"(2) the amount of the transfer;

"(3) the amount of the allocation made to the office for the fiscal year;

"(4) the total amount of allocations that have been transferred by and to the office to date during the fiscal year; and

"(5) the amount of the allocation remaining available to the office for the fiscal year.

"(b) The information reported to the Sergeant at Arms pursuant to subparagraph (a) shall be published quarterly in the Congressional Record and included in the semiannual Report of the Secretary of the Senate."

(2) Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, all offices of the Senate that have transferred or received a transfer of official mail cost allocations to or from another office of the Senate during fiscal year 1990 shall report to the Sergeant at Arms the information described in paragraph 7(a) of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate with respect to such transfers, and such information shall be published in the Congressional Record.

(3) This subsection is enacted—

(A) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate; and

(B) with full recognition of the constitutional right of the Senate to change the rules at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of the Senate.

SEC. 607. USE OF OFFICIAL EXPENSE ACCOUNTS AND OTHER SOURCES OF FUNDS FOR MASS MAILINGS.

Section 506(a)(3) of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1973 (2 U.S.C. 58(a)(3)) is amended by striking subparagraph (A).

TITLE VII—GERRYMANDERING

SEC. 701. LIMITATIONS ON GERRYMANDERING.

(a) REAPPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.—Section 22 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress," approved June 18, 1929 (2 U.S.C. 2a), is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (c); and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c)(1) In each State entitled in the One Hundred Third Congress or in any subsequent Congress to more than one Representative under an apportionment made pursuant to the second paragraph of the Act entitled 'An Act for the relief of Doctor Ricardo Vallejo Samala and to provide for congressional redistricting', approved December 14, 1967 (2 U.S.C. 2c), as in effect prior to the date of enactment of this subsection, there shall be established in the manner provided by the law of the State a number of districts equal to the number of Representatives to which such State is so entitled, and Representatives shall be elected only by eligible voters from districts so established, no district to elect more than 1 Representative.

"(2) Such districts shall be established in accordance with the provisions of this Act as soon as practicable after the decennial census date established in section 141(a) of title 13, United States Code, but in no case later than such time as is reasonably sufficient for their use in the elections for the One Hundred Third Congress and in each fifth Congress thereafter.

"(d)(1) The number of persons in congressional districts within each State shall be as nearly equal as is practicable, as determined under the then most recent decennial census.

"(2) The enumeration established according to the Federal decennial census pursuant to article I, section II, United States Constitution, shall be the sole basis of population for the establishment of congressional districts.

"(e) Congressional districts shall be comprised of contiguous territory, including adjoining insular territory.

"(f) Congressional districts shall not be established with the intent or effect of diluting the voting strength of any person, group of persons, or members of any political party.

"(g) Congressional districts shall be compact in form. In establishing such districts, nearby population shall not be bypassed in favor of more distant population.

"(h) Congressional district boundaries shall avoid the unnecessary division of counties or their equivalent in any State.

"(i) Congressional district boundaries shall be established in such a manner so as to minimize the division of cities, towns, villages, and other political subdivisions.

"(j)(1) It is the intent of the Congress that congressional districts established pursuant to this section be subject to reasonable public scrutiny and comment prior to their establishment.

"(2) At the same time that Federal decennial census tabulations data, reports, maps, or other material or information produced or obtained using Federal funds and associated with the congressional reapportionment and redistricting process are made available to any officer or public body in any State, those materials shall be made available by the State at the cost of duplication to any person from that State meeting the qualifications for voting in an election of a Member of the House of Representatives.

"(k) Nothing in this section shall be construed to supersede any provision of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C. 1973 et seq.).

"(l)(1) A State may establish by law criteria for implementing the standards set forth in this section.

"(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed as limiting the power of a State to strengthen or add to the standards set forth in this section, or to interpret those standards in a manner consistent with the law of the State, to the extent that any additional criteria or interpretations are not in conflict with this section."

"(m)(1) The district courts of the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine any action to enforce subsections (c) through (l).

"(2) A person who meets a State's qualifications for voting in an election of a Member of the House of Representatives from the State may bring an action in the district court for the district in which the person resides to enforce subsections (c) through (l) with regard to the State in which the person resides.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the district courts of the United States shall have authority to issue all judgments, orders, and decrees necessary to ensure that any criteria established by State law pursuant to this section are not in conflict with this section.

"(4) With the exception of actions brought for the relief described in paragraph (3), the district court for the purposes of this section shall be a three-judge district court pursuant to section 2284 of title 28, United States Code.

"(5) On motion of any party in accordance with section 1657 of title 28, United States Code, it shall be the duty of the district court to assign the case for briefing and hearing at the earliest practicable date, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited. The district court shall have authority to enter all judgments, orders and decrees necessary to bring a State into compliance with this Act.

"(6) An action to challenge the establishment of a congressional district in a State after a Federal decennial census may not be brought after the end of the 9-month period beginning on the date on which the last such district is so established.

"(7) For the purposes of this section, an order dismissing a complaint for failure to state a cause of action shall be appealable in accordance with section 1253 of title 28, United States Code.

"(8) If a district court fails to establish a briefing and hearing schedule that will permit resolution of the case prior to the next general election, any party may seek a writ of mandamus from the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the district court sits. The court of appeals shall have jurisdiction over the motion for a writ of mandamus and shall establish an expedited briefing and hearing schedule for resolution of the motion. Such a motion shall not stay proceedings in the district court.

"(9) If a district court determines that the congressional districts established by a State's redistricting authority pursuant to this Act are not in compliance with this Act, the court shall remand the plan to the State's redistricting authority to establish new districts consistent with subsections (c) through (l). The district court shall retain jurisdiction over the case after remand.

"(10) If, after a remand under paragraph (9), the district court determines that the congressional districts established by a State's redistricting authority under the remand order are not consistent with subsections (c) through (l), the district court shall enter an order establishing districts that are consistent with subsections (c) through (l) for the next general congressional election.

"(11) If any question of State law arises in a case under this section that would require abstention, the district court shall not abstain. However, in any State permitting certification of such questions, the district court shall certify the question to the highest court of the State whose law is in question. Such certification shall not stay the proceedings in the district court or delay the court's determination of the question of State law.

"(12) With the exception of actions brought for the relief described in paragraph (3), an appeal from a decision of the district court under this section shall be taken in accordance with section 1253 of title 28, United States Code. An appeal under this paragraph shall be noticed in the district court and perfected by docketing in the Supreme Court within thirty days of the entry of judgment below. Appeals brought to the Supreme Court under this paragraph shall be heard as soon as practicable.

"(13) For purposes of this section, the term "redistricting authority" means the officer or public body having initial responsibility for the congressional redistricting of a State."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS AND REPEALER.—(1) The first sentence of section 1657 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking 'chapter 153 or" and inserting "chapter 153, any action under subsection (m) through (l) of section 22 of the Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress,' approved June 18, 1929 (2 U.S.C. 2a), or".

(2) Section 141(c) of title 13, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In circumstances in which this subsection requires that the Secretary provide criteria to, consult with, or report tabulations of population to (or if the Secretary for any reason provides material or information to) the public bodies having responsibility for the legislative apportionment or districting of a State, the Secretary shall provide, without cost, such criteria, consultations, tabulations, or other material or information simultaneously to the leadership of each political party represented on such public bodies. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'political party' means any political party whose candidates for Representatives to Congress received, as the candidates of such party, 5 percent or more of the total number of votes received statewide by all candidates for such office in any of the 5 most recent general congressional elections. Such materials may include those developed by the Census Bureau for redistricting purposes for the 1990 Census."

(3) The second paragraph of the Act entitled "An Act for the relief of Doctor Ricardo Vallejo Samala and to provide for congressional redistricting", approved December 14, 1967 (2 U.S.C. 2c), is repealed.

TITLE VIII—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. SEVERABILITY.

If any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act, or the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of any other such provision, and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 802. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as otherwise provided in this Act, this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE FAIRNESS IN POLITICS ACT OF 1991

Section 1. Short Title.

This Act may be cited as the "Fairness in Politics Act of 1991."

TITLE I—BAN ON POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES

This Title eliminates all "special interest" political action committees (corporate, union, and trade association PACs). This section also bans all non-connected or ideological PACs and all "leadership" PACs. [Note: if a ban on non-connected PACs is determined to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, the legislation will subject non-connected PACs to a $1,000 contribution limit.]

TITLE II—SEED MONEY

Subtitle A—Challengers. This section permits political party committees to use a special coordinated expenditure fund to "match" early, in-state contributions to challengers. Party committee matching funds would be permitted to a maximum of $150,000 for House challengers and $250,000 for Senate challengers.

Subtitle B—Opposition Research Fund. This section allows the congressional campaign committees and the senatorial campaign committees to establish an "opposition research fund" in connection with a primary or general election for Senate and House challengers. The "opposition research fund" would be financed by the committees up to $50,000. The purpose of the fund is to allow the recognized challenger of a Senate or House incumbent to establish an office and hire staff. Funds for the office and staff would be earmarked exclusively for research into the voting/public record of the incumbent.

TITLE III—TRUTH-IN-INCUMBENCY

This Title allows the State political parties to finance television and radio ads out of their federal accounts for the purpose of discussing the voting/public record of the Senate incumbent. These State-party financed ads may be aired at any time prior to the date of the primary election or the date on which the State party nominates its own candidate, whichever is earlier. The ads may not name or mention the State party's own prospective candidate. They may only discuss the voting/public record of the Senate incumbent.

State-party financed ads authorized by this section must be at least 1 minute in length.

TITLE IV—BAN ON ROLL-OVER OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS

This Title prohibits the roll-over of all surplus House and Senate campaign funds existing on November 9, 1994. Effective November 9, 1994, House Members may roll-over an amount not to exceed $50,000, and Senate Members may roll-over an amount not to exceed $100,000.

This section also prohibits State officials from rolling-over State campaign funds for use in a federal election. In the case of a candidate for the House of Representatives, surplus State campaign funds may be rolled-over in an amount not to exceed $50,000. In the case of a candidate for Senate, surplus State campaign funds may be rolled-over in an amount not to exceed $100,000.

Surplus campaign funds may be (1) transferred to a tax-exempt 501(c)(3) organization, (b) refunded to contributors on a pro rata basis, or (c) paid into the Treasury of the United States and applied to the account to reduce the public debt.

TITLE V—BROADCAST PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Free Time. This section requires television and radio broadcasters to provide, during every 2-year election cycle, 5 hours of free time to legally qualified Senate candidates. For purposes of this subtitle, legally qualified Senate candidates include the winners of the Democratic and Republican primaries, and the candidate of any third party that received 5% or more of the vote in the immediately preceding federal election. Legally qualified Senate candidates also include the candidate of any third party that did not receive 5% of the vote in the immediately preceding election but who was able to garner the signatures of at least 5% of the State's eligible voters in support of a free-time allocation. Third-party candidates are entitled to a pro rata share of the free-time pool.

If a radio or television station's audience is measurable in more than one State by a recognized national media rating service, the station must equally divide the free-time allotment among the candidates of both states. If there is no Senate election in one of the States, then the free time will be allotted to the two Senate candidates in the State holding an election.

One Candidate. A free-time allocation is not required if only 1 legally qualified Senate candidate is running in a State.

Exemption. The Federal Election Commission may exempt a broadcaster from the free-time requirement if the broadcaster can demonstrate that the requirement would impose a significant economic hardship.

September-November Period. This section requires that at least two-third of the free time must be made available during the September-November period immediately preceding the general election.

Length. Free-time spots must be between 1 minute and 1 hour in length, to be determined at the discretion of the Senate candidate.

Sunset and FEC/FCC Study. This section "sunsets" after the two general elections immediately following the date of enactment (1992 and 1994). No later than June 1, 1995, the Federal Election Commission and the Federal Communications Commission are required to submit a report to Congress analyzing a) the effect of free broadcasting time on the cost of Senate campaigns, b) any technical problems associated with allocating free time to legally qualified Senate candidates, and c) the cost of the free-time requirement to the broadcasting industry.

Subtitle B—Broadcast Discount. This section allows Congressional candidates to purchase non-preemptible time at the lowest unit rate for preemptible time, in the last 45 days before a primary and the last 60 days before the general election.

TITLE VI—CONGRESSIONAL MASS MAILINGS

This Title prohibits Members of Congress from conducting franked mass mailings during an election year and prohibits franking transfers to a Member up for re-election. This Title also requires the quarterly publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1) the total number of pieces of mass mail sent by each Member, 2) the total cost of the mailing, and 3) all franking transfers, including information related to a) the name of the office to which the transfer is made or from which the transfer was received, b) the amount of the transfer, c) the amount of the allocation made to the office for the fiscal year, d) the total amount of allocations that have been transferred by and to the office to date during the fiscal year, and e) the amount of the transfer remaining available to the office for the fiscal year.

This Title is based on an amendment offered last year by Senator Don Nickles.

TITLE VII—LIMITATIONS ON GERRYMANDERING

This Title requires new standards for congressional reapportionment and redistricting, including the full and fair enforcement of the Voting Rights Act. This provision will: 1) codify current case law and maintain previous statutory requirements that Congressional districts be of equal population, and be contiguous and compact in form; 2) repeal current statutory provisions permitting multi-member Congressional districts; and 3) limit the division of county and political subdivision lines, as well as redistricting egregious partisan gerrymandering. [S. 1727 (Bush); House Republican Task Force]

TITLE VIII—MISCELLANEOUS

Section 801. Severability. This section provides that if any portion of this Act is found to be invalid, then the remaining portions of the Act shall continue in full force and effect.

Section 802. Effective Date. This section requires the Act to be effective upon enactment, unless a specific section provides otherwise.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. GLENN, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. WARNER, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. FORD, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. BOREN, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BROWN, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. GARN, Mr. GORTON, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. KOHL, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. LOTT, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MCCAIN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. NUNN, Mr. PELL, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. REID, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. SIMON, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. KERRY, Mr. ROBB, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 8. A bill to extend the time for performing certain acts under the internal revenue laws for individuals performing services as part of the Desert Shield operation; to the Committee on Finance.

RELIEF FROM CERTAIN INTERNAL REVENUE PROVISIONS FOR DESERT SHIELD PERSONNEL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to provide our Desert Shield Forces with relief from IRS tax filing deadlines during their service in the Persian Gulf and for 60 days thereafter.

Without this legislation, our service men and women would owe interest to the IRS on any taxes paid after April 15, and would be subject to penalties if their tax returns are not filed by June 15. I believe that our Government should not add to the rigors of Persian Gulf duty with impossible tax deadlines.

In addition, under this bill, those Desert Shield personnel who are owed refunds will receive interest on their money as of April 15, provided that their returns are filed within the 60-day grace period following their tour of duty. That way they will not suffer financially from any filing delay. Finally, this relief is extended to soldiers hospitalized as a result of their service in the Persian Gulf.

This legislation is plain common sense. Our men and women in the Saudi desert have more important things to worry about than compiling records, meeting paperwork deadlines or being penalized by the country they are serving.

Mr. President, this legislation will send an important signal of support to our soldiers and their families. I hope that it will be enacted quickly.

I ask consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 8

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PERFORMING CERTAIN ACTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 77 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to miscellaneous provisions) is amended by inserting after section 7508 the following new section:

"SEC. 7508A. EXTENSION OF TIME FOR DESERT SHIELD OPERATIONS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of applying the internal revenue laws with respect to the tax liability (including any interest, penalty, additional amount, or addition to tax) of any individual who performed Desert Shield services, the period during which such individual performed such services, and the next 60 days thereafter, shall be disregarded in determining whether any of the acts referred to in paragraph (1) of section 7508(a) were performed within the time prescribed therefor.

"(b) SPECIAL RULE FOR OVERPAYMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) shall not apply for purposes of determining the amount of interest on any overpayment of tax.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES.—In the case of any return filed by an individual entitled to the benefits of subsection (a) during the period disregarded under subsection (a), subsections (b)(3) and (e) of section 6611 shall not apply.

"(c) DESERT SHIELD SERVICE.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term "Desert Shield service" means any service in a unit of the Armed Forces of the United States (as defined in section 7701(a)(15)) or in support of any such unit if—

"(A) such service is performed in the Persian Gulf area, and

"(B) such service is performed during the period that there is in effect a designation by the President that such unit is part of the Desert Shield operation.

"(2) PERIODS OF HOSPITALIZATION.—An individual shall be treated as performing Desert Shield services during any period of continuous hospitalization attributable to an injury received while performing Desert Shield services.

"(d) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) APPLICATION TO SPOUSE.—The provisions of this section shall apply to the spouse of any individual entitled to the benefits of subsection (a).

"(2) MISSING STATUS.—The period of service referred to in subsection (c) shall include the period during which an individual entitled to benefits under subsection (a) is in missing status, within the meaning of section 6013(f)(3).

"(3) CERTAIN RULES MADE APPLICABLE.—Rules similar to the rules of section 7508(d) shall apply for purposes of this section."

"(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 77 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 7508 the following new item:

"Sec. 7508A. Extension of time for Desert Shield Operation."

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished Republican leader in introducing legislation today to temporarily extend the time for the men and women serving our country in the Persian Gulf to file their Federal tax returns and pay their taxes.

To us, this may seem like a small gesture. But, I'm sure our men and women serving in the Desert Shield Operation will feel a sense of relief knowing that the paperwork back home can wait while they focus their attention on a more serious job.

The bill gives individuals—and their spouses—60 days after completing Desert Shield service to file their tax returns and pay their taxes. They will not be charged interest on taxes owed, but will receive interest on refunds. For individuals hospitalized for injuries sustained in Desert Shield operations, the 60-day period will begin upon being released from a hospital.

Mr. President, I would like to point out that this bill provides temporary relief from only Federal tax return filings and payments. Since Oregon follows the Federal rules, Oregonians serving in the Desert Shield Operation should automatically receive an extension for filing Oregon tax returns. But, some States do not follow Federal filing rules. I would hope that these States would enact similar legislation as quickly as possible.

Just as the men and women serving in the Persian Gulf have a duty and obligation to protect our national security, we have a responsibility to ease their burdens on the domestic front. I hope my colleagues will join us and pass the legislation immediately.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. SIMPSON):

S. 9. A bill to amend the foreign aid policy of the United States toward countries in transition from communism to democracy; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ASSISTANCE TO DEMOCRATIC GOVERNMENTS AT THE REPUBLIC LEVEL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the world has changed a great deal in the past 2 years; among other things, Eastern Europe is on the road to democracy and the two Germanies have become one. As a result of these dramatic and fundamental changes, one of the biggest challenges the United States faces today is to adapt its policies to meet the demands of this new emerging world.

Now, it is easy to adjust diplomatically—speeches and letters are easy to write. However, it is much more difficult to change the policies, rules, and regulations by which we act, even if the principles remain the same. And, it is extremely difficult to make these changes quickly.

In my view, U.S. foreign aid policy has lagged far behind in meeting the demands of the changing world. In particular, United States foreign aid policy lacks the flexibility to deal with developments in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Last year, I raised the issue of reallocation of U.S. foreign aid resources so that Eastern Europe would get a fair share of our support, and I will address this issue again at a later date.

Today, however, I wish to introduce this bill which seeks to add flexibility to our foreign aid policy so that we can more effectively help build democracy and free market economies in other countries. It does so very simply: By amending our policy to permit the provision of direct assistance to democratic governments at the Republic level that exist within countries that still have a Communist ruling majority in other Republic governments and/or at the Federal level.

In my view, this bill would appropriately address one of the toughest situations we face in Eastern Europe: How to assist hybrid nations—in other words, countries whose governments include both democratic and Communist elements. A perfect example of this is Yugoslavia: four of its six Republics elected democratic governments into office last year. However, the largest Republic, Serbia, and its smaller ally, Montenegro, elected hardline Communists into government last December. And, Yugoslavia's Federal Government is still run by Communists, in addition to being dominated by Serbia.

Under the present system, to provide United States aid to Yugoslavia, we would have to go through the Central Government—the Government that has threatened to send troops into the fledging democratic Republics in one week if those Republics refuse to disarm their national guard and militia units. However, if this bill is enacted, we would be able to bypass the Central Government and get U.S. aid directly to these democratic Republics. In addition, this provision would allow us to prevent aid from going to the Communist government of Serbia, which for the past 2 years, has been systematically violating the rights of the 2 million Albanian people in the Province of Kosova. As I saw last August, the people of Kosova live under Stalinist conditions—in my view, the United States should not reward the Serbian Government for its actions.

This type of flexibility would also apply to the Soviet Union. Last weekend we witnessed the onset of a brutal crackdown against the Lithuanian people. Who knows how much more suffering they will have to endure—the Lithuanians and the Latvians and Estonians, face not only political and military oppression, but economic crises, food, and fuel shortages, as well. But, under today's foreign aid program if we wanted to send these poor people any type of humanitarian assistance we would have to send it through Moscow.

Well, I think I can say with some confidence after this weekend's events, Moscow wouldn't be sympathetic and wouldn't cooperate. Only a few weeks ago, in response to the critical food shortages across the Soviet Union, the United States agreed to provide grain credits to Gorbachev's government—a decision I strongly advocated. To my great disappointment, I learned last week from the Prime Minister of the Republic of Moldova, that Gorbachev has made it clear that the only Republics that will get the U.S. grain and feed are those who sign the Union Treaty. There is only one word for that tactic: Blackmail.

Mr. President, I believe that the United States should not be a party to that blackmail. And, I have already stated that I believe a suspension of U.S. grain credits is in order until we get assurances from Gorbachev that all those who need grain and feed will get it.

Under today's foreign aid system, we are boxed in; help all or hurt all. In Yugoslavia, in the Soviet Union, we can only support the democrats, if we are willing to support the Communists. If we want to weaken the Communists, we can only do so by weakening the democrats.

Mr. President, these are the kinds of choices we don't want to make. As a result we tend to sit on the sidelines, hoping for democracy, but not helping it. But, I say to my colleagues today, this is not a time to sit on the sidelines, this is not the time to watch quietly while new democratic governments are coerced, threatened, and finally snuffed out. This is a historic opportunity to spread democracy and to make democracy permanent.

Sure, there are some who will say that directing aid to democratic Republics is impossible. In my view, that argument is simply a bureaucratic "out"—a reluctance to change the system because the bureaucracy is comfortable with the way things are being done now. Changing the foreign aid system, in their view, is inconvenient. Well, to me, inconvenience is not a compelling argument. What is compelling is the survival and growth of democracy.

Mr. President, the United States needs to do all it can to support democracy around the world. So, let us not make bureaucratic excuses, let us enact this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 9

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROVISION FOR DIRECT UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE TO DEMOCRATIC GOVERNMENTS AT THE REPUBLIC LEVEL.

An essential purpose of United States foreign assistance is to foster the development of democratic institutions and free enterprise systems. In regard to United States assistance to those nations which are in transition from communism to democracy, it is the policy of the United States to provide foreign aid, to the extent feasible, directly to democratic governments at the republic level that exist within countries which include a ruling communist majority in other republic governments and/or at the Federal level.

S. 10. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to phase out the earnings test over a 5-year period for individuals who have attained retirement age, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY EARNINGS LIMITATIONS ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, at the outset of the last Congress, I noted that President Bush had called on us to harness the unused talent of the elderly. There is no better way for us to underscore our seriousness in this endeavor than to repeal the very law that discourages the elderly from remaining in the work force, and that is the Social Security earnings limitation.

The Senate has on two occasions in the last 8 years, in 1983 and again in 1990, passed legislation that either phased out or increased the amount our senior citizens could earn before seeing a reduction in their Social Security benefits.

It is time to see final action on legislation to repeal these restrictions.

Under current law, Social Security beneficiaries under age 70 face sharp reductions in their monthly benefit if their earnings exceed a specified amount. In 1990, these seniors lost $1 of benefits for every $3 of earnings above $9,360. In 1991, that amount is $9,720.

Simply stated, this law is unfair and counter productive. Senior citizens are actually penalized if they want to continue working.

Under the bill, the earnings limitation would be increased by $3,000 a year beginning in 1992 and eliminated entirely by the end of 1996 for beneficiaries above the normal retirement age, currently age 65. The legislation would also accelerate the effective date of the 8-percent delayed retirement credit contained in current law from 2009 to 1997.

It is rather ironic that we want our senior citizens to remain active, but present them with incentives to do exactly the opposite. Indeed, we explicitly recognize that senior citizens possess great stores of wisdom, the kind of knowledge and experience our Nation needs. Certainly it is neither justified nor just that we punish these worthy citizens. And that, my colleagues, is precisely what we do.

America's elderly have already borne the burden of decades of hard work. They have paid Social Security taxes throughout their working lives. Is it fair that they lose some of these benefits simply because they choose to continue offering their abilities to America?

The earnings limit effectively denies benefits to those retirees making more than a certain amount of money per year. It does not matter that these retirees contributed a significant portion of their income throughout their careers in order to enjoy these benefits.

At a time when our 41st President is calling for the continued contributions of our Nation's seniors, we are offering them a choice that cannot help but drive productive individuals to a full retirement or force them to forgo benefits they have worked for over a lifetime. With many economists predicting that shortages of workers will be one of the most severe economic problems we will face in the 1990's, it would certainly seem wise to reform policies which discourage workers who have a lifetime of experience.

If the earnings test is such a bad idea, some may ask, why was it part of earlier legislation? The answer to this question lies in the economic climate of our Nation at that point in history. Social Security was started in the wake of the Great Depression—a time when government wanted to make it more attractive for the elderly to leave the work force, thereby opening jobs to others. Toward that end, the earnings test was an important step. In this day and age, however, there is no social or economic excuse for this tax on senior citizens.

Finally, there is the all important issue of cost. Eliminating the earnings test immediately for all beneficiaries would cost $9.7 billion in the first year alone and approximately $65.6 billion over 5 years. By limiting repeal to those over age 65, delaying implementation until 1992 and phasing out the limit over 5 years, the cost of the proposal drops to $450 million in the first year and $5.9 billion over 5 years, a fraction of the projected trust fund surpluses during this period.

Moreover, there is good reason to believe the cost of this proposal would be much less than this since the estimate does not take into account additional revenues flowing to the Government as the result of a larger work force paying income and Social Security payroll taxes, higher wage levels subject to taxation for those no longer constrained by the earnings limit, and additional revenues derived from the existing tax on Social Security benefits.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 10

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LIBERALIZATION OF EARNINGS TEST OVER THE PERIOD 1992–1996 FOR INDIVIDUALS WHO HAVE ATTAINED RETIREMENT AGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1991, subparagraph (D) of section 203(f)(8) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, the exempt amount which is applicable to an individual who has attained retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)) before the close of the taxable year involved shall be increased by $3,000 in each taxable year over the exempt amount for the previous taxable year, beginning with any taxable year ending after 1991 and before 1993.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The second sentence of section 223(d)(4) of such Act is amended by striking out "which is applicable to individuals described in subparagraph (D) thereof" and inserting in lieu thereof "which would be applicable to individuals who have attained retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)) without regard to any increase in such amount resulting from a law enacted in 1991".

SEC. 2. REPEAL OF EARNINGS TEST IN 1997 FOR INDIVIDUALS WHO HAVE ATTAINED RETIREMENT AGE.

Effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1996—

(1) clause (B) in the third sentence of section 203(f)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "age seventy" and inserting in lieu thereof "retirement age (as defined in section 216(1))"; and

(2) section 203(f)(3) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "33½ percent" and all that follows through "other individual" and inserting in lieu thereof "50 percent of his earnings for such year in excess of the product of the applicable exempt amount as determined under paragraph (8)", and

(B) by striking out "age 70" and inserting in lieu thereof "retirement age (as defined in section 216(1))".

SEC. 3. CONFORMING AND RELATED AMENDMENTS.

Effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1996—

(1) section 203(c)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "is under the age of seventy" and inserting in lieu thereof "is under retirement age (as defined in section 216(1))";

(2) the last sentence of subsection (c) of section 203 of such Act is amended by striking out "nor shall any deduction" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "nor shall any deduction be made under this subsection from any widow's or widower's insurance benefit if the widow, surviving divorced wife, widower, or surviving divorced husband involved became entitled to such benefit prior to attaining age 60.";

(2) paragraphs (1)(A) and (2) of section 203(d) of such Act are each amended by striking out "under the age of seventy" and inserting in lieu thereof "under retirement age (as defined in section 216(l))";

(3) section 203(f)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out clause (D) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(D) for which such individual is entitled to widow's or widower's insurance benefits if such individual became so entitled prior to attaining age 60, or";

(4) subparagraph (D) of section 203(f)(5) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "(D) In the case of" and all that follows down through "(ii) an individual" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(D) An individual";

(B) by striking out "became entitled to such benefits" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "became entitled to such benefits, there shall be excluded from gross income any such other income."; and

(C) by shifting such subparagraph as so amended to the left to the extent necessary to align its left margin with that of subparagraphs (A) through (C) of such section;

(5) section 203(f)(8)(A) of such Act is amended by striking out "the new exempt amounts (separately stated for individuals described in subparagraph (D) and for other individuals) which are to be applicable" and inserting in lieu thereof "the new exempt amount which is to be applicable";

(6) section 203(f)(8)(B) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out all that precedes clause (i) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

(B) The exempt amount which is applicable for each month of a particular taxable year shall be whichever of the following is the larger—";

(B) by striking out "corresponding" in clause (i); and

"(C) by striking out "an exempt amount" in the matter following clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "the exempt amount";

(7) section 203(f)(8)(D) of such Act (as amended by section 1(a) of this Act) is repealed;

(8) section 203(f)(9) of such Act is repealed;

(9) section 203(h)(1)(A) of such Act is amended by striking out "age 70" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)";

(10) section 203(j) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"ATTAINMENT OF RETIREMENT AGE

"(j) For purposes of this section—

"(1) an individual shall be considered as having attained retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)) during the entire month in which he attains such age; and

"(2) the term 'retirement age (as defined in section 216(l))', with respect to any individual entitled to monthly insurance benefits under section 202, means the retirement age (as so defined) which is applicable in the case of old-age insurance benefits, regardless of whether or not the particular benefits to which the individual is entitled (or the only such benefits) are old-age insurance benefits.";

(11) section 202(w)(2)(B)(ii) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "either"; and

(B) by striking out "or suffered deductions under section 203(b) or 203(c) in amounts equal to the amount of such benefit"; and

(12) the second sentence of section 223(d)(4) of such Act (as amended by section 1(b) of this Act) is further amended by striking out "without regard to any increase in such amount resulting from a law enacted in 1991" and inserting in lieu thereof "but for the liberalization and repeal of the earnings test for such individuals in 1992".

SEC. 4. ACCELERATION OF 8 PERCENT DELAYED RETIREMENT CREDIT.

Effective with respect to taxable years ending after 1991, paragraph (6) of section 202(w) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "2005" in subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof "1993"; and

(2) by striking out "2004" in subparagraph (D) and inserting in lieu thereof "1992".

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the reintroduction of legislation I cosponsored during the 101st Congress, the Older Americans' Freedom to Work Act. This bill does a very important and necessary service to the senior citizens of this Nation: It repeals the earnings limit on retirees aged 65–69.

It's hard to believe that we still have a Federal law that penalizes certain people who want to work, but that in fact is the case. While spending millions to prepare people for the work force, we charge one group of trained workers for the right to hold a well-paying job.

Currently, all Social Security recipients aged 65–69 who choose to work are required to give up $1 for every $3 they earn over the limit of $9,720.

People who want to work should be encouraged to work, not penalized by a 33-percent tax that applies only to them. They already pay income and Social Security taxes on these earnings. In fact, senior citizens between the ages of 65 and 69 who make $10,000 or more actually pay a marginal tax rate of up to 56 percent when you add their income tax, Social Security tax, and the earnings limit penalty.

More people are living longer and finding that the work place is the only place in which they can find the satisfaction they seek and the means for living a comfortable life. They should be applauded for their contributions, not penalized.

This year should be the year senior citizens are relieved of the discriminatory earnings tax. We should retire the earnings limit instead of productive workers.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to join as an original cosponsor of two important measures—one offered by the distinguished Republican leader and the other by my colleague from Arizona, Senator McCAIN—which call for the elimination of the Social Security earnings test.

The earnings test is a patently unfair provision of the Social Security Act. Effective January 1, 1991, the earnings test denies workers age 65 to 69 $1 in Social Security benefits for every $3 they earn over $9,720 per year. This benefit reduction is a 33-percent effective tax, plain and simple, that when combined with Federal, State, and Social Security taxes, makes senior citizens the most heavily taxed group in our population.

Not only is this blatantly discriminatory against senior citizens; it also threatens our economy by discouraging vast numbers of senior citizens from remaining in the work force. At a time when our Nation faces a growing labor shortage, we cannot afford to let such an enormous pool of experienced and productive citizens simply fall by the wayside. We should be encouraging our seniors, not penalizing them.

Both measures we are introducing today would do away with this outdated policy. The measure offered by Senator DOLE would do so in stages, increasing the earnings limit $3,000 a year beginning in 1992 and eliminating it entirely in 1997. The measure offered by Senator McCAIN would simply repeal the earnings limit outright.

Both measures deserve the support of this body. In my view, there is no reason why we ought not to scrap the earnings test immediately. While some have said that repeal would be too costly, there is a strong current of opinion that repeal will not cost us anything. In fact, one recent study using dynamic revenue models projects that repealing the earnings test will actually net the Government $140 million in additional revenue.

I think our Nation's senior citizens have waited more than long enough for Congress to address the unfairness inherent in the earnings limit. There is no excuse for continued delay. We now have before us two measures that would correct this inequitable policy. One of these measures should become law in the 102d Congress.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

WHEN IS IT GOING TO STOP?

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the public debt currently stands at $3.4 trillion. The estimated Federal deficit for fiscal year 1991 is more than $300 billion. When is it going to stop?

Our system is broken, and it needs repair. The budget agreement of 1990 is not the answer. The Federal budget deficit will rise significantly in the upcoming fiscal year. Only in Washington can one claim victory when the problem gets worse.

We do not need another summit agreement, we need fundamental reform of our system.

Senator THURMOND's bill calls for a constitutional amendment that requires outlays not exceed receipts during any fiscal year—a balanced budget amendment. It is the simplest of principles but the most commonly ignored. The Federal Government should not spend more than it receives. The American people strongly support a balanced budget amendment, and so should every Member of Congress. The public debt is crippling our Nation; passage of this legislation would be a huge first step toward recovery.

The proposal by Senators COATS and McCAIN to increase the President's rescission authority is also long overdue. Perhaps if legislation of this nature had been enacted earlier, the Federal Government would not be spending money on a tribute to Lawrence Welk, or a ferryboat for American Samoa, or a convention center in Washington. The American people are sick of self-serving pork barrel projects. The legislative line-item veto act will provide the President with an effective tool for combating wasteful spending.

Last, I would like to express my strong support for Senator SYMMS' legislation that would provide for a line-item veto amendment to the Constitution. When our Founding Fathers drafted the Constitution, I am certain that they did not envision a reconciliation bill embodying child care legislation, tax increases, increased Medicaid benefits, et cetera. The President needs the ability to veto each new legislative initiative separately, and an amendment to the Constitution can put this issue to rest once and for all.

Federal spending is out of control. These intiatives can help reign it in.•

HARRODSBURG'S COMPANY D

• Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, today I rise to pay tribute to the 66 members of Company D, 192d Light Tank Batallion of the Kentucky Army National Guard from Harrodsburg, KY. I would like to insert into the RECORD their story, told in the December 5, 1990, issue of the Louisville Courier-Journal.

The courageous men of Company D were mobilized to the Philippine Islands, and became the first American force to engage the enemy in tank warfare in World War II. It is said that Gen. George Patton himself picked the outfit for duty in the Philippines. Later cited for outstanding performance in the war, the men endured many hardships when the Japanese overran the islands in early 1942.

Hardships for the survivors came in the form of the "Bataan Death March," forcing 37,000 wounded and weary soldiers to march 70 to 90 miles to prison camps, if they were not killed along the way. According to 70-year-old Bland Moore of Danville, credited with saving the lives of two comrades during the death march, "If you got too tired or got weak and had to sit down, they killed you."

Now, 50 years after the mobilization of the 192d, Moore is 1 of Company D's 17 living survivors. He and others endured repeated beatings and threats of execution, to come back and tell of their experiences. On Sunday, December 2, they did just that. And 250 Harrodsburg residents came to hear the story, to let them know they had not been forgotten, and to tell them they knew why an Army tank is parked on a little hill beside the American flag at the edge of town.

Mr. President, I salue the members of Company D, and congratulate them on their 50th anniversary. Their story is the story of the hard-fought battle for continued freedom, one none of us should ever forget.

The article follows:

HARRODSBURG'S TANK IS REMINDER OF WORLD WAR II HEROISM, TRAGEDY

(By Byron Crawford)

HARRODSBURG, KY.—Passers-by often wonder why a World War II Army tank is permanently parked on the outskirts of Harrodsburg, near the American flag and the sign proclaiming the town Kentucky's first settlement.

Most are probably going too fast to notice the bronze plaque encased in a stone marker beside the tank. It is inscribed with the names of 66 members of Company D, 192nd Light Tank Battalion of the Kentucky Army National Guard from Harrodsburg, which, in 1941, became the first American force to engage in tank warfare in World War II.

The 192nd had distinguished itself in maneuvers against regular Army tankers at Camp Polk, La., earlier that year, and Gen. George Patton Jr. himself is said to have picked the outfit for mobilization to the Philippine Islands.

The 192nd would later be cited for its outstanding performance in the war, but when the Japanese overran the islands in early 1942, members of the Harrodsburg Guard unit were among the outnumbered American troops who for four months withstood shortages of food, ammunition and medical supplies to beat back attacks on the Bataan Peninsula—only to be eventually surrendered.

The subsequent Bataan Death March, in which the Japanese marched approximately 37,000 battle-weary and wounded American and Filipino prisoners 70 to 80 miles to prison camps, killing many of the captives as they went, brought the horror of war home to Harrodsburg to stay.

Life Magazine's July 6, 1942, issue contained a seven-page picture story titled "Missing In Action" that stated: "Harrodsburg is one of the first towns in the entire country to taste the last full measure of war—loved ones reported 'missing in action.' By the next Fourth of July the U.S. will have a great many Harrodsburgs. For until it does this war cannot be won," Life said.

Twenty-nine men of Company D died, either on the Death March or in camps where the prisoners of war were held until September 1945.

Last Sunday about 250 people from Harrodsburg and the surrounding area showed up at the National Guard Armory to mark the 50th anniversary of the 192nd's mobilization, and to pay tribute to members of Company D. Eight of the company's 17 living survivors were in attendance—as was a doctor from another company of the 192nd.

Among them was Bland Moore, 70, of Danville, who is credited by his fellow soldiers with saving the lives of two of his buddies by helping them survive the Death March.

Moore told reporters that he considers it a miracle that he himself survived.

"If you got too tired or got weak and had to sit down, they killed you," he said. "I quit perspiring . . . and I couldn't get any salt, I was getting real weak and dizzy.

"We were going through a little town, and some of the Filipinos were throwing rice balls out to us. That was the last thing I wanted. All I wanted to do was stay on my feet. By that time, the men were a whole lot like animals.

"But . . . a little brown package landed in my hand, and it was salt. I ate that salt, and shared it with others, and finished the march. I wasn't reaching for anything when it fell in my hand. Nothing could tell me otherwise but that Jesus Christ had a hand in saving me."

Later, Moore and his fellow soldiers would face death many times, during repeated beatings, and many of their number were executed.

Once, Moore himself was scheduled to be executed after defying a Japanese officer.

Several of his teeth were knocked out with the hilt of a saber, he was forced to stand at attention for 13 hours and was tied to a tree for four days—and then he was brought out for execution before a squad of Japanese soldiers with bayonets.

"As I walked by Grover Brummett from Louisville, who still lives there, I said, 'Grover, tell my wife and my folks that I died like a man, and that I didn't beg for nothin'.'" Moore remembered.

As the Japanese officer snapped the soldiers to attention, "I just looked him in the eye," Moore said, "And you know, just at the snap of a finger, he told me—"Go to work."

"I was the first one on the truck."

Many such stories were exchanged Sunday when the handful of survivors of Company D met in Harrodsburg to be honored by the community and by other military personnel.

"The reason I was there was because of my love for the guys who didn't come back," said Moore. "I wish that everyone who has ever burned an American flag could go through the first three months of hell that these men went through."

Harrodsburg hasn't forgotten them. That is why a World War II Army tank is parked on a little hill beside the American flag at the edge of town.●

A SALUTE TO RHODE ISLAND SCOUTS

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, as we begin the year 1991 and a new session of Congress, I bring to your attention 44 young women and 105 young men of my State of Rhode Island who have distinguished themselves in 1990 through the Boy Scouts and the Girl Scouts of America.

Since 1910, Scouting has helped build the character and spirit of our youth by promoting the ability of young men and women to do for themselves, by teaching them patriotism, courage, self-reliance, and helping them realize the satisfaction earned through service to others.

It may be difficult for some to believe that there are youngsters in the United States who still believe in these ideals and live their lives accordingly. Yet, every year thousands of young girls and boys participate in Scouting activities.

The Eagle Scout Award is given to the Boy Scout who has earned 21 merit badges and it is the highest honor in Boy Scouting. The Silver Award is awarded to girls in junior high school upon completion of a service project. The highest honor for a Senior Girl Scout is the Gold Award, which is presented at the culmination of a major service project.

Scouting in America is stronger than ever.

So, it is with pride that I pay tribute today to these young boys and girls, to their Scout leaders, and to their families.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. PELL, and Mr. HATCH):

S. 11. A bill to cut Social Security contribution rates and return Social Security to pay-as-you-go financing, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY TAX CUT ACT

• Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce as S. 11 the Social Security Tax Cut Act of 1991, a bill to reduce Social Security contribution rates and return the program to traditional pay-as-you-go financing. It is a bill to strengthen the financing of the Social Security Program, stimulate the weakening economy, and provide a fair tax cut to 132 million workers and 6 million employers and self-employed individuals. I am introducing the measure in the company of my distinguished cosponsors, Senators HOLLINGS, KASTEN, PELL, and HATCH.

In S. 11 we propose to cut the Social Security tax rate from the current 6.2 percent for employees and employers each to 5.7 percent on July 1 of this year, and further cut it to 5.5 percent on January 1, 1994, and 5.2 percent on January 1, 1996.

We also propose increases in the maximum wage subject to the Social Security tax, from $53,400 this year to $60,600 next year and $82,200 by 1996. The maximum wage level has traditionally been set to cover about 90 percent of wages in the economy but presently covers only about 86 percent. I would note that workers with earnings at or above the proposed maximum wage levels would still, with the proposed tax rates, realize a tax cut compared to current law.

The proposal is designed, of course, to build and maintain a safe level of reserves in the Social Security trust funds. Before the first rate cut goes into effect we will have about a year's worth of benefits in reserve. We have not had a year's reserve in the trust funds since 1970. Reserve levels are estimated to continue to grow under the proposal to a year and a half's worth of benefits.

Maximum tax cut savings for an individual worker would be $134 for the last 6 months of this year, $279 next year, and $693 in 1996. Maximum cumulative tax cut savings for the individual worker would be about $2,300 over the 5-year transition to pay-as-you-go financing.

I think its about time the American worker got a break. In constant 1977 dollars, average weekly earnings in the United States in 1989 were about $3 higher than they were in 1959. After accounting for rising FICA taxes, the average worker actually made less in 1989 than he did 30 years ago. We have more working mothers now so that families can maintain the same living standard they had in 1973. Despite higher female labor force participation rates, real median family income has been virtually flat since then.

The basic arguments for going back to pay-as-you-go can be stated briefly. We are running large and growing surpluses in the Social Security trust funds and using the money as if it were general revenue—some $74 billion in the current fiscal year, $83 billion in the next, $126 billion in 1995, and over $225 billion in the year 2000. It is the dirty little secret of last year's budget summit agreement that we will spend $500 billion of Social Security tax revenue on general government expenses over the next 5 years. This practice violates the integrity of the Social Security trust funds and makes government finance more regressive.

The tax structure of the United States is fast becoming one of the most regressive of any Western nation. In the 1980's we cut income taxes for the better off and raised payroll taxes for low- and middle-income workers. Social Security tax revenue as a percent of total Federal revenue rose by 23 percent from 1980 to 1988, while personal and corporate income tax revenue as a percent of total Federal revenue declined by 6 percent and 23 percent, respectively. At the end of 1987, Senator GEORGE MITCHELL observed in the Wall Street Journal that "there has been a shift of about $80 billion in annual revenue collections from the progressive income tax to the regressive payroll tax." There have been two increases in the Social Security payroll tax rate since then. Last year the Social Security Administration estimated that in 1990 about 74 percent of taxpayers would pay more in FICA taxes—including the employer's share—than in income taxes.

Further, Mr. President, since I first introduced this bill a year ago, we have been presented with yet another, and urgent, reason to cut Social Security taxes. I speak, of course, of the economic recession that is upon us. We do not know how long it will last or how bad it will be. But we do know that we must do something about it. That is why voters send us here. Workers and businesses in this country are already being knocked hard by this economic downturn, and fear that it is going to get worse before it gets better. They would be helped by this measure. A Social Security tax cut is an anti-recession measure. It is a tax cut for both workers and businesses, in equal shares. It would stimulate the purchasing power of consumers and help create jobs for unemployed workers.

Professor Gary Hufbauer, a Georgetown University economist and former Treasury official in the Carter administration, has estimated that a Social Security tax cut would create a million jobs. Michael Boskin, now Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, has made similar statements in the past about the labor effects of the Social Security tax. Even before the recession, Nobel Laureate Franco Modigliani endorsed a Social Security tax cut as economically sound.

Mr. President, I said at the outset that this legislation would also strengthen the financing of the Social Security Program. Let me now explain how it would do so.

By way of background, I would note first that the Social Security Program was financed on a pay-as-you-go basis for decades prior to 1977. Under this financing method, Congress would schedule Social Security tax rates for the future that would produce the revenue needed to meet expected outlays. Generally, the goal was to keep the system in close actuarial balance over the long-term 75-year projection period.

In 1977 and again in 1983, in response to short-term financing problems, Congress accelerated the schedule for Social Security tax rate increases. The higher rates in the 1980's, together with better-than-estimated economic performance, produced the current surpluses.

But the Social Security system is not currently in close actuarial balance over the long term. That is because our current financing arrangements call for us to build up a huge reserve over the next 30 years and then draw it down over the following 20 years. The trust fund are expected to be exhausted in the early 2040's. How will we finance benefits then? Well, even though there are no more rate increases scheduled in current law, we would obviously have to raise the rate at that time. And it would be a pretty big jump, to around 8 percent.

This legislation calls for getting to that ultimate rate in a more rational fashion. We would schedule a series of rate increases for the next century as costs rise, consistent with pay-as-you-go financing. Significantly, we would not have to go back to the current rate of 6.2 percent until 2015, and would not have to go above that rate until 2020. The rate would ultimately rise to 8.1 percent in 2050. We would, then, in a sense, just smooth out, or fine tune the current arrangements. And in the process we would put the system back in close actuarial balance over the long term.

I have stated before but it bears repeating that this improvement in the financing of Social Security has been urged for years by Robert J. Myers, who served as chief actuary of Social Security for 23 years and was a member of that venerable group that created our Social Security system back in 1934. The proposal has also been endorsed by the American Academy of Actuaries.

Mr. President, I would make just one further point. Senators will recall that last October 9 and 10 we had a floor debate on this proposal. A budget point of order was raised against consideration of the bill. Sixty votes were needed to waive the point of order. We got 54, 42 Democrats and 12 Republicans. Not bad really—a majority of the Senate after all. And this even though our timing could not have been worse, with the debate coming on the heels of final agreement to a budget resolution based on the long-awaited budget summit agreement.

But here's the point. Senators should be aware that a Social Security tax cut can be passed with a simply majority. They should also be aware that under the law budget process rules, the Social Security tax is the one tax we can cut without offsets, without producing a sequester, and without making it harder to reach deficit reduction target. So no one need think that we are bound to repeat last year's outcome. We are in a much better position to pass the bill this year, and as I stated earlier, there are even more reasons to do so.

Let me conclude by saying this is not a partisan matter. This proposal has a broad base of bipartisan support. It is supported by organizations ranging from the AFL–CIO to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, from the Democratic National Committee to the Heritage Foundation. Governor Mario Cuomo supports this proposal, as does former Gov. Pete du Pont. And support from political commentators comes from Michael Kinsley and Eleanor Clift as well as James Kilpatrick and George Will.

Mr. President, we must cut Social Security taxes. We don't need the money for Social Security, so let's give it back to the workers who earned it and need it. It's just not fair to keep it for other government expenses. A return to pay-as-you-go financing will strengthen the financing of Social Security, restore honesty and integrity to Federal finances, stimulate the economy, and provide a fair tax cut to 132 million Social Security taxpayers.

Mr. President, I ask that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 11

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Social Security Tax Cut Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. RETURN SOCIAL SECURITY TO PAY-AS-YOU-GO FINANCING.

(a) FICA TAXES.—

2040 through 2049	7.9 percent
2050 or thereafter	8.1 percent."

(2) TAX ON EMPLOYERS.—The table in section 3111(a) of such Code (relating to rate of tax on employers for old-age survivors, and disability insurance) is amended to read as follows:

"In the case wages received during:	The rate shall be:
January 1, 1991 through June 30, 1991	6.2 percent
July 1, 1991 through 1993	5.7 percent
1994 or 1995	5.5 percent
1996 through 2009	5.2 percent
2010 through 2014	5.6 percent
2015 through 2019	6.2 percent
2020 through 2024	6.8 percent
2025 through 2029	7.5 percent
2030 through 2039	7.8 percent
2040 through 2049	7.9 percent
2050 or thereafter	8.1 percent."

(3) REALLOCATION TO FEDERAL DISABILITY INSURANCE TRUST FUND.—Section 201(b)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401(b)(1)) is amended by striking "(O) 1.20 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 1989, and before January 1, 2000, and so reported, and (P) 1.42 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 1999, and so reported" and inserting "(O) 1.20 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 1989, and before January 1, 1992, and so reported, (P) 1.24 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 1991, and before January 1, 2000, and so reported, (Q) 1.40 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid on or after December 31, 1999, and before January 1, 2005, and so reported, (R) 1.60 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 2004, and before January 1, 2015, and so reported, (S) 1.70 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 2014, and before January 1, 2030, and so reported, and (T) 1.80 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 2029, and so reported".

(b) TAX ON SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The table in section 1401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to rate of tax on self-employment income for old-age survivors, and disability insurance) is amended to read as follows:

"In the case of a taxable year

Beginning after:	And before:	Percent:
December 31, 1990	January 1, 1992	11.9
December 31, 1991	January 1, 1994	11.4
December 31, 1995	January 1, 2010	10.4
December 31, 2009	January 1, 2015	11.2
December 31, 2014	January 1, 2020	12.4
December 31, 2019	January 1, 2025	13.6
December 31, 1993	January 1, 1996	11.0
December 31, 2024	January 1, 2030	15.0
December 31, 2029	January 1, 2040	15.6
December 31, 2039	January 1, 2050	15.8
December 31, 2049		16.2."

(2) REALLOCATION TO FEDERAL DISABILITY INSURANCE TRUST FUND.—Section 201(b)(2)) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401(b)(2)) is amended by striking "(O) 1.20 per centum of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, and before January 1, 2000, and (P) 1.42 per centum of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1999" and inserting "(O) 1.20 per centum of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, and before January 1, 1992, (P) 1.24 per centum of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1991, and before January 1, 2000, (Q) 1.40 per centum of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1999, and before January 1, 2005, (R) 1.60 per centum of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 2004, and before January 1, 2015, (S) 1.70 per centum of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 2014, and before January 1, 2030, and (T) 1.80 per centum of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 2029".

(c) OASDI TAXABLE WAGE BASE INCREASED.— Section 230(c)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 430(c)(2)) is amended by striking subclauses (A), (B), (C), and (D) and inserting the following:

"(A) in 1992 shall be $60,600,

"(B) in 1993 shall be $64,200,

"(C) in 1994 shall be $70,200,

"(D) in 1995 shall be $73,800, and

"(E) in 1996 shall be $82,200."•

• Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, although the hearts and minds of all Americans are focused on the situation in the Persian Gulf, I think it's important that we not lose sight of our dire economic troubles here at home.

It's painfully clear to most of us that the United States is headed for an economic slowdown—perhaps a full-blown recession. Economic growth has ground to a halt. Unemployment has jumped to 6.1 percent. The financial sector in the Northeast is teetering on the edge of collapse. Small business optimism is at its lowest level since 1982.

This economic slowdown has been caused, in part, by the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait and the subsequent rise in oil prices. I believe most of the blame, however, rests on the misguided policies inflicted on the economy by Washington.

Since 1986, capital gains and payroll taxes have gone up. New regulatory burdens are stifling entrepreneurial activity. And, perhaps most devastating of all, we are imposing the largest tax increase in U.S. history on consumers, savers, and producers this year.

I rise today to join Senator MOYNIHAN in introducing legislation that will jumpstart the economy and reduce taxes on working families as well. Our legislation would return Social Security to pay-as-you-go financing, returning the tax surplus to the working people who earned it.

Mr. President, I want to make a special appeal to my Republican colleagues to join us in sponsoring this important measure. Thanks to last fall's budget debate, Republicans are losing the so-called tax fairness debate.

A recent Harris Poll found that by a margin of 62 to 36 percent, Americans believe that Republicans were wrong to oppose tax increases on the wealthy; and by a 50-to-30 margin, they think congressional Democrats were more right on how to cut the deficit than Republicans.

This poses a critical challenge to me and my fellow Republicans. Unless we propose a politically attractive alternative, we will remain on the defensive—and eventually lose outright the political debate over taxes.

Fortunately, there is a way out. We can take the political and economic offensive again—by making Social Security payroll tax cuts a centerpiece of the economic empowerment agenda.

The currently controversial "empowerment" initiatives are aimed at giving individuals more control over their own lives. What could be more empowering than letting workers keep more of the wages they have earned?

The American Dream still eludes too many of today's working families. They are finding it harder to achieve the same standard of living that their parents enjoyed. And the chief cause is the skyrocketing of Federal taxes: Today's median-income families face an effective tax rate—income and payroll taxes combined—more than double what their parents faced in the 1950's.

Throughout the 1980's, Republicans worked to reduce that tax burden. The 1981 Reagan tax bill slashed income tax rates by 25 percent for middle-income Americans, and the 1986 tax reforms removed 4 million poor taxpayers from the tax rolls altogether. The people responded by giving three consecutive landslide victories to the GOP.

However, at the same time the Reagan-Bush tax cuts were reducing the burden of income taxes, the 30 percent increase in payroll tax rates legislated in 1977 under Jimmy Carter kept the middle-class tax burden excessively high. Today, three out of four workers pay more in payroll taxes than they do in income taxes.

This tax is punishing working-class Americans—and crippling the economy as well. It raises labor costs, inhibits job creation, cuts profits, and reduces the availability of capital. It is a direct tax on America's ability to compete.

And as if all this were not enough, Social Security is collecting more taxes than are needed to pay benefits to seniors. This revenue buildup—proceeding at a rate of more than $1 billion per week—is used to subsidize the rest of the Federal budget.

Last December, our colleague PAT MOYNIHAN proposed returning Social Security to a pay-as-you-go system in which income roughly matches expenses, leaving the money in the hands of the people who earned it. This isn't a new idea: In 1988, then-Congressman Jack Kemp and I introduced similar legislation to cut payroll taxes.

Under the plan we are introducing today, the payroll tax rate would be reduced from 6.2 to 5.2 percent in over the next 5 years. For a worker for an individual or a two-earner couple making $69,300, the annual savings would add up to $693 under pay-as-you-go financing.

In addition, the maximum taxable wage base would be increased modestly above what it would be under current law. Senator MOYNIHAN has argued that the wage base must be increased in order to maintain historic 90 percent of wages in the economy covered by the taxable maximum.

While I do have some concerns about the precedent that increasing the taxable maximum wage base may set, I think it's important to point out that, under the Moynihan-Kasten plan, all taxpayers will receive a tax cut.

Mr. President, in Wisconsin, $693 more in take-home pay will go a long way. This money can help build a nest egg for retirement. It can buy a new washer and dryer. It can pay for part of children's daycare. It can buy a year of parochial grammar school in Milwaukee. Overall, this tax cut plan will pump $3.8 billion into Wisconsin's economy over the 1992–96 period.

I ask unanimous consent that a table on the estimated tax cut savings, by State be printed at this point in the RECORD:

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, we can go ahead and tax millionaires all we want—but it won't do anything to reduce the burden on middle-income families.

I think it's also important to point out that Social Security is off-budget. Therefore, reducing the payroll tax will not effect our efforts to meet the statutory Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction mandates.

Also, the newly enacted budget reforms make it relatively easier to cut Social Security taxes than other kinds of taxes because they would not trigger and automatic reduction in spending to offset the revenue loss.

And from an economic standpoint, any negative impact of the rise in government borrowing will be offset by the stimulative impact of lower payroll taxes on wage earners and small business.

Now more that ever, our economy needs a shot in the arm. Payroll tax cuts are the best cure for recession because it shows up immediately in workers' paychecks. Former Treasury economist Gary Hufbauer estimates that this pro-growth tax cut would create 1 million new jobs over the next 4 years.

Even without the Social Security tax surplus, the deficit problem is manageable. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the non-Social Security budget deficit will decline from 5.6 percent to 1.9 percent of gross national product over the fiscal 1991–95 period.

House Majority Leader RICHARD GEPHARDT said recently that, to him, the key is "not to beat up on the rich, but try to get the poor and middle class moving up quickly." I agree. We ought to give working families the opportunity to move up the economic ladder. And cutting payroll taxes is the best way to do it.●

By Mr. DANFORTH (for himself, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. GORE, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. METZENBAUM):

S. 12. A bill to amend title VI of the Communications Act to ensure carriage on cable television of local news and other programming and to restore the right of local regulatory authorities to regulate cable television rates, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

CABLE TELEVISION CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, it is time for Congress to address the many constituent complaints about the cable television industry.

In 1984, I voted for legislation to deregulate cable. Like many others, I thought that developing competition could replace regulation. But since deregulation, consumers, cities, broadcasters, small cable operators, wireless distributors of video programming, and satellite dish owners have come to Congress for help. A poll conducted by Cable News Network [CNN] last summer demonstrates the widespread discontent with the unbridled cable industry. The CNN poll asked: "Should cable TV be regulated?" Did half of those polled say "yes, cable should be regulated"? Did three quarters? Mr. President, 92 percent responded that cable television should be regulated.

Today, cable is an unregulated monopoly. The results of an unregulated monopoly are predictable: high rates; indifferent service; cable operators who drop local broadcasters, or place them on high channels; discrimination in the pricing of programming; problems with access to cable systems.

That is why the Chairman of the Communications Subcommittee, Senator INOUYE, the Chairman of the Commerce Committee, Senator HOLLINGS, and others are joining me in introducing the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991 today. This cable reform bill is very similar to one that was reported out of the Commerce Committee last year by a vote of 18 to 1.

RATE REGULATION

Perhaps the most visible symptoms of our premature deregulation of cable has been the skyrocketing rates for cable service. As an example of the astounding rate increases, let me cite the testimony of Mr. Allen Garner, counsel to Jefferson City, MO, before the Commerce Committee last year. He testified that, in the preceding 3½ years, cable rates increased in Missouri's capital by 186 percent.

Where there is no true competition, States and cities should have the option of regulating cable rates. Under the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act, States or cities can regulate rates, within Federal Communications Commission [FCC] guidelines, if there is no effective competition from another cable system, a microwave system, or any other multichannel video provider and a sufficient number of broadcast signals.

Under today's rules, a cable operator's rates cannot be regulated if a certain number of broadcast stations serve the same area. But broadcast signals are not the same as cable service—that is why consumers are willing to pay for cable even where broadcast signals are available for free.

This bill's definition of effective competition as another multichannel video provider will protect consumers from monopoly pricing. This definition also provides an incentive for the cable industry to allow competiion to develop: if there is a second provider, the cable operator's rates are deregulated. Under this legislation, rate regulation sunsets automatically where there is effective competition.

FRANCHISE RENEWALS, LIABILITY, AND CUSTOMER SERVICE STANDARDS

This bill addresses the complaint of cities that they lack authority over cable operators who raise rates, give poor service, or fail to meet their franchise requirements. If a cable operator is not serving its community's interests, the city should be able to find an operator who will. The bill clarifies the renewal proceedings to ease the burden for a franchising authority to deny renewal of an unsatisfactory cable operator's franchise. Additionally, the bill provides that, if franchising authorities act pursuant to the Cable Act, they may only be subject to injunctive relief, declaratory relief, or attorneys' fees for claims asserting First Amendment rights. This bill also allows franchising authorities to enforce tougher customer service standards.

ACCESS TO PROGRAMMING AND PROGRAMMING DISTRIBUTION

This legislation addresses concerns raised by potential cable competitiors that they cannot obtain access to programming. Small cable operators, home satellite dish owners, wireless cable operators, and other potential distributors of video programming complain that they are denied programming or are charged more for programming than the large cable operators affiliated with cable programmers. They point out that cable programmers who are affiliated with cable system operators have an incentive to favor their cable operators over other distributors of video programming.

Mr. President, this bill addresses the problem by barring programmers affiliated with cable operators from unreasonably refusing to deal with video distributors. Such programmers are also barred from discriminating in the price, terms, and conditions if that action would impede retail competition.

The bill also requires those programmers to deal with purchasing groups, such as cable cooperatives, on terms similar to those given to cable systems. Additionally, the bill bars cable operators from requiring a financial interest in programming as a condition for carrying that programming.

These nondiscrimination provisions are essential to meaningful cable reform. Without access to popular programming, cable can keep programming locked up and prevent competition from developing. On the other hand, once competition is allowed to develop, we can let the market, rather than regulation, protect consumers. Policies aimed at promoting competition and preventing market abuses simultaneously advance diversity in the market place of ideas.

CABLE INDUSTRY CONCENTRATION

Mr. President, the cable industry has become highly concentrated. A few multiple system operators [MSO's] dominate the industry. The large MSOs have the market power to determine what programming services can succeed on cable. Concentration in the cable industry also means a reduction in the number of media voices available to consumers. This legislation requires the FCC to set a limit on the size of cable operators. Similar limits already apply to the broadcast industry. For example, one broadcaster may own no more than 12 television stations. To encourage diversity of programming, the bill also directs the FCC to limit the number of channels that can be occupied on a cable system by a single programmer.

CABLE OWNERSHIP OF POTENTIAL COMPETITORS

To prevent cable from warehousing its potential competition, the bill prohibits a cable operator from owning the microwave or satellite-delivery system in his cable area. A cable/direct broadcast satellite cross-ownership ban also would be applied after 10 percent of the Nation subscribes to direct broadcast satellite services.

LEASED ACCESS

Under current law, anyone who is interested may lease a channel from a cable company. The goal was to establish an electronic soapbox. But the right of access has been used infrequently and the goal has not been met, because the cable operator can set any price he wants for the leased channel. If he is affiliated with a cable programmer, the cable operator may have an incentive to price the channels out of reach. This bill therefore directs the FCC to set maximum rates for leased access.

TECHNICAL STANDARDS

One of the most frequent complaints by cable consumers is that the picture quality is poor. To address that problem, this legislation directs the FCC to establish minimum technical standards for the operation of cable systems.

MUST CARRY AND CHANNEL POSITIONING

Today, cable operators are free to act as gatekeepers who decide whether to carry local broadcasters on their systems and what channel number to give them. The bill we are introducing codifies "must carry" rules to ensure that cable subscribers have access to local broadcasting stations. It also requires cable companies to carry broadcasters on the channels assigned under the old must carry rules, on their over-the-air channel numbers, or on other channels by mutual agreement. The bill lets the FCC resolve disputes over channel positioning.

The must carry and channel positioning rules of this legislation promote three longstanding, substantial governmental interests: First, the public's first amendment right of access to diverse sources of information; second, the preservation of vigorous competition among communications services; and third, the promotion of a nationwide broadcasting service built upon local outlets—one of the statutory obligations of the FCC.

CONCLUSION

This bill is good government based on sound economics. Where there is neither competition nor regulation, the consumer is the loser. This legislation permits regulation where there is no competition, takes steps to encourage competition, and automatically sunsets rate regulation where there is competition. I urge my colleagues to stand up for consumers and support this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD immediately following these remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 12

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds and declares the following:

(1) Pursuant to the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984, rates for cable television services have been deregulated in approximately 97 percent of all franchises since December 29, 1986. Since rate deregulation, monthly rates for the lowest priced basic cable service have increased by 40 percent or more for 28 percent of cable television subscribers. Although the average number of basic channels has increased from about 24 to 30, average monthly rates have increased by 29 percent during the same period. The average monthly cable rate has increased almost three times as much as the Consumer Price Index since rate deregulation.

(2) For a variety of reasons, including local franchising requirements and the extraordinary expense of constructing more than one cable television system to serve a particular geographic area, most cable television subscribers have no opportunity to select between competing cable systems. Without a sufficient number of local television broadcast signals and without the presence of another multichannel video programming distributor, a cable system faces no local competition. The result is undue market power for the cable operator as compared to that of consumers and video programmers.

(3) There is a substantial governmental and First Amendment interest in promoting a diveristy of views provided through multiple technology media.

(4) There has been a substantial increase in the penetration of cable television systems over the past decade, with cable television services now available to 71.3 million of the 92.1 million households with televisions. Nearly 54 million households, over 58 percent of the households with televisions, subscribe to cable television, and this percentage is almost certain to increase. As a result of this growth, the cable television industry has become a dominant nationwide video medium.

(5) The cable industry has become highly concentrated. The potential effects of such concentration are barriers to entry for new programmers and a reduction in the number of media voices available to consumers.

(6) Cable television rates for video programming provided on other than the basic service tier should not be governmentally regulated except in extraordinary circumstances, which may include the need to control undue market power.

(7) The cable television industry has become vertically integrated; cable operators and cable programmers often have common ownership. As a result, cable operators have the incentive and ability to favor their affiliated programmers. This could make it more difficult for non-cable-affiliated programmers to secure carriage on cable systems. Vertically integrated program suppliers also have the incentive and ability to favor their affilitated cable operators over non-affiliated cable operators and programming distributors using other technologies.

(8) There is a substantial governmental and First Amendment interest in ensuring that cable subscribers have access to local noncommerical educational stations which Congress has authorized, as expressed in section 396(a)(5) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 396(a)(5)). The distribution of unique noncommercial, educational programming services, including those transmitted by noncommerical educational television stations serving local communities or markets, advances that interest in providing for the further education of our citizens and encouraging "public telecommunications services which will be responsive to the interests of people both in particular localities and throughout the United States, which will constitute an expression of diversity and excellence, and which will constitute a source of alternative telecommunications services for all the citizens of the Nation".

(9) The Federal Government has a substantial interest in making all nonduplicative local public television services available on cable systems because—

(A) public television provides educational and informational programming to the Nation's citizens, thereby advancing the Government's compelling interest in educating its citizens;

(B) public television is a local community institution, supported through local tax dollars and voluntary citizen contributions in excess of $10,800,000,000 since 1972, that provides public service programming that is responsive to the needs and interests of the local community;

(C) the Federal Government, in recognition of public television's integral role in serving the educational and informational needs of local communities, has invested more than $3,000,000,000 in public broadcasting since 1969; and

(d) absent carriage requirements there is a substantial likelihood that citizens, who have supported local public television services, will be deprived of those services.

(10) A primary objective and benefit of our Nation's system of regulation of television and radio broadcasting is the local origination of programming. There is a substantial governmental interest in ensuring its continuation.

(11) Broadcast television stations continue to be an important source of local news and public affairs programming and other local broadcast services critical to an informed electorate.

(12) Broadcast television programming is supported by revenues generated from advertising broadcast over stations. Such programming is otherwise free to those who own television sets and do not require cable transmission to receive broadcast signals. There is a substantial governmental interest in promoting the continued availability of such free television programming, especially for viewers who are unable to afford other means of receiving programming.

(13) As a result of the growth of cable television, there has been a marked shift in market share from broadcast television to cable television services.

(14) Cable television systems and broadcast television stations increasingly compete for television advertising revenues. As the proportion of households subscribing to cable television increases, proportionately more advertising revenues will be reallocated from broadcast to cable television systems.

(15) A cable television system which carries the signal of a local television broadcaster is assisting the broadcaster to increase its viewership, and thereby attract additional advertising revenues that otherwise might be earned by the cable system operator. As a result, there is an economic incentive for cable systems to terminate the retransmission of the broadcast signal, refuse to carry new signals, or reposition a broadcast signal to a disadvantageous channel position. There is a substantial likelihood that absent the reimposition of such a requirement, additional local broadcast signals will be deleted, repositioned, or not carried.

(16) As a result of the economic incentive that cable systems have to delete, reposition, or not carry local broadcast signals, coupled with the absence of a requirement that such systems carry local broadcast signals, the economic viability of free local broadcast television and its ability to originate quality local programming will be seriously jeopardized.

(17) Consumers who subscribe to cable television often do so to obtain local broadcast signals which they otherwise would not be able to receive, or to obtain improved signals. Most subscribers to cable television systems do not or cannot maintain antennas to receive broadcast television services, do not have input selector switches to convert from a cable to antenna reception system, or cannot otherwise receive broadcast television services.

(18) Cable television systems often are the single most efficient distribution system for television programming. A government mandate for a substantial societal investment in alternative distribution systems for cable subscribers, such as the "A/B" input selector antenna system, is not an enduring or feasible method of distribution and is not in the public interest.

(19) The compulsory license was created by Congress as part of a delicate balance between cable television systems and broadcast television stations that included mandatory carriage obligations for cable systems. Cable systems are able to procure programming through the compulsory license at a cost substantially below the cost paid by the broadcast television stations. Cable systems, however, may rely upon the compulsory license as an alternative to negotiatiang for such programming in the marketplace, but are no longer subject to mandatory carriage obligations. This has created a competitive imbalance between the two industries.

(20) The Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984, in its amendments to the Communications Act of 1934, limited the regulatory authority of franchising authorities over cable operators. Franchising authorities are finding it difficult under the current regulatory scheme to deny renewals to cable systems that are not adequately serving cable subscribers.

(21) Given the lack of clear guidelines in applying the First Amendment to cable franchise decisions, cities are unreasonably exposed to liability for monetary damages under the Civil Rights Acts.

(22) Cable systems should be encouraged to carry low power television stations licensed to the communities served by those systems where the low power stations creates and broadcasts, as a substantial part of its programming day, local programming.

STATEMENT OF POLICY

SEC. 3. It is the policy of the Congress in this Act to—

(1) promote the availability to the public of a diversity of views and information through cable television and other video distribution media;

(2) rely on the marketplace, to the maximum extent feasible, to achieve that availability;

(3) ensure that cable operators continue to expand, where economically justified, there capacity and the programs offered over their cable systems;

(4) where cable television systems are not subject to effective competition, ensure that consumer interests are protected in receipt of cable service; and

(5) ensure that cable television operators do not have undue market power vis-a-vis video programmers and consumers.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. (a) Section 602 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 522) is amended by redesignating paragraph (1) as paragraph (2), by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively, by redesignating paragraphs (4) through (10) as paragraphs (7) through (13), respectively, by redesignating paragraphs (11) and (12) as paragraphs (16) and (17), respectively, by redesignating paragraph (13) as paragraph (19), by redesignating paragraphs (14) and (15) as paragraphs (22) and (23), respectively, and by redesignating paragraph (16) as paragraph (26).

(b) Section 602 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 522), as amended by this section, is further amended by inserting immediately before paragraph (2), as so redesignated, the following new paragraph:

"(1) the term 'activated channels' means those channels engineered at the headend of a cable system for the provision of services generally available to residential subscribers of the cable system, regardless of whether such services actually are provided, including any channel designated for public, educational, or governmental use;".

(c) Section 602 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 522), as amended by this section, is further amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (2), as so redesignated, the following new paragraph:

"(3) the term 'available to a household' or 'available to a home' when used in reference to a multichannel video programming distributor means a particular household which is a subscriber or customer of the distributor or a particular household which is actively and currently sought as a subscriber or customer by a multichannel video programming distributor;".

(d) Section 602 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 522), as amended by this section, is further amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (5), as so redesignated, the following new paragraph:

"(6) the term 'cable community' means the households in the geographic area in which a cable system provides cable service;".

(e) Section 602 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 522), as amended by this section, is further amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (13), as so redesignated, the following new paragraphs:

"(14) the term 'headend' means the location of any equipment of a cable system used to process the signals of television broadcast stations for redistribution to subscribers;

"(15) the term 'multichannel video programming distributor' means a person such as, but not limited to, a cable operator, a multichannel multipoint distribution service, a direct broadcast satellite service, or a television receive-only satellite program distributor, who makes available for purchase, by subscribers or customers, multiple channels of video programming;".

(f) Section 602 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 522), as amended by this section, is further amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (17), as so redesignated, the following new paragraph:

"(18) the term 'principal headend' means—

"(A) the headend, in the case of a cable system with a single headend, or

"(B) in the case of a cable system with more than one headend, the headend designated by the participating operator as the principal headend, except that such designation shall not undermine or evade the requirements of section 614;".

(g) Section 602 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 522), as amended by this section, is further amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (19), as so redesignated, the following new paragraphs:

"(20) the term 'qualified local commercial broadcast station' means any television broadcast station licensed and operating on a channel regularly assigned to its community by the Commission (except where such station would be considered a distant signal under section 111 of title 17, United States Code) that, with respect to a particular cable system—

"(A) is licensed to a comunity whose reference point, as defined in section 76.53 of title 47, Code of Federal Regulations, or any successor regulations thereto, is within 50 miles of the principal headend of the cable system, and which delivers to the cable system principal headend either a signal level of −45 dBm for UHF signals and −49 dBm for VHF signals at the input terminals of the signal processing equipment, or a baseband video signal, and

"(B) which is not a qualified noncommercial educational television station and is determined by the Commission to be a commercial station; such term shall not include low power television stations, television translator stations, and other passive repeaters which operate pursuant to part 74 of title 47, Code of Federal Regulations, or any successor regulations thereto;

"(21) the term 'qualified noncommercial education television station' means any television broadcast station which—

"(A)(i) under the rules and regulations of the Commission in effect on March 29, 1990, is licensed by the Commission as a noncommercial educational television broadcast station and which is owned and operated by a public agency, nonprofit foundation, corporation, or association; or

(ii) is owned and operated by a municipality and transmits only noncommercial programs for educational purposes; and

"(B) has as its licensee an entity which is eligible to receive a community service grant, or any successor grant thereto, from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, or any successor organization thereto, on the basis of the formula set forth in section 396(k)(6)(B) (47 U.S.C. 396(k)(6)(B)); such term includes (I) the translator of any noncommercial educational television station with five watts or higher power serving the cable community, (II) a full service station or translator if such station or translator is licensed to a channel reserved for noncommercial educational use pursuant to section 73.606 of title 47, Code of Federal Regulations, or any successor regulations thereto, and (III) such stations and translators operating on channels not so reserved as the Commission determines are qualified as noncommercial educational stations".

(h) Section 602 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 522), as amended by this section, is further amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (23), as so redesignated; and

(2) by inserting immediately after such paragraph (23) the following new paragraphs:

"(24) the term 'usable activated channels' means activated channels of a cable system, except those channels whose use for the distribution of broadcast signals would conflict with technical and safety regulations as determined by the Commission;

"(25) the term 'video programmer' means a person engaged in the production, creation, or wholesale distribution of a video programming service for sale; and".

REGULATION OF CABLE RATES

SEC. 5. Section 623 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 543) is amended to read as follows:

"REGULATION OF RATES

"SEC. 623. (a) Any Federal agency, State, or franchising authority may not regulate the rates for the provision of cable service, or for the installation or rental of equipment used for the receipt of cable service, except to the extent provided under this section and section 612. Any franchising authority may regulate the rates for the provision of cable service, or any other communications service provided over a cable system to cable subscribers, but only to the extent provided under this section.

"(b)(1) If the Commission finds that a cable system is not subject to effective competition, the Commission shall ensure that the rates for the provision of basic cable service, including for the installation or rental of equipment used for the receipt of basic cable service, or charges for changes in service tiers, are reasonable; except that if fewer than 30 percent of all customers to that cable system subscribe only to basic cable service, the Commission also shall ensure that rates are reasonable for the lowest-priced tier of service subscribed to by at least 30 percent of the cable system's customers.

"(2)(A) Upon written request by a franchising authority, the Commission shall review the State and local laws and regulations governing the regulation of rates of cable systems under the jurisdiction of such franchising authority. The Commission shall authorize such franchising authority to carry out such regulation pursuant to paragraph (1) in lieu of the Commission if the Commission finds that—

"(i) such State and local laws and regulations conform to the procedures, standards, requirements, and guidelines prescribed under paragraph (4) and any interpretative rulings, decisions, and orders of the Commission that relate to rate regulation under this subsection; and

"(ii) such franchising authority will provide the level of protection to consumers required by the Commission and that carries out the national policy established in this title.

"(B) Upon petition by a cable operator or other interested party, the Commission shall review such regulation of cable system rates by a franchising authority authorized under this paragraph. If the Commission finds that the franchising authority has acted inconsistently with the requirements in subparagraph (A), the Commission shall grant appropriate relief. If the Commission, after the franchising authority has had a reasonable opportunity to comment, determines that the State and local laws and regulations are not in conformance with subparagraph (A)(i) or (ii), the Commission shall revoke such authorization.

"(3) A cable operator may add to or delete from a basic cable service tier any video programming other than retransmitted local television broadcast signals. Any obligation imposed by operation of law inconsistent with this subsection is preempted and may not be enforced.

"(4) Within 120 days after the date of enactment of the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991, the Commission shall prescribe by rule procedures, standards, requirements, and guidelines for the establishment of reasonable rates charged for basic cable service by a cable operator not subject to effective competition.

"(5) A cable operator may file with the Commission, or with a franchising authority authorized by the Commission under paragraph (2) to regulate rates, a request for a rate increase in the price of a basic cable service tier. Any such request upon which final action is not taken within 180 days after such request shall be deemed granted.

"(c)(1) When a franchising authority or a subscriber of any cable system found by the Commission not to be subject to effective competition files, within a reasonable time after a rate increase for cable programming service of that system, including an increase which results from a change in that system's service tiers or from a change in the per channel rate paid by subscribers for a particular video programming service, a complaint which establishes a prima facie case that rates for such cable programming service are unreasonable based on the criteria established by the Commission, the Commission shall determine whether such rates for cable programming service are unreasonable. In making its determination, the Commission shall inquire of the cable operator of such system as to the reasons for such rates. If the Commission finds that such rates cannot be justified under reasonable business practices, the Commission shall establish reasonable rates.

"(2) Within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991, the Commission shall prescribe by rule—

"(A) the criteria for determining whether rates for cable programming service are unreasonable, and

"(B) criteria for determining that (i) a complaint described under paragraph (1) is filed within a reasonable period after a rate increase and (ii) the complaint establishes a prima facie case that rates for cable programming service are unreasonable.

"(3) In establishing the criteria for determining whether rates for cable programming service are unreasonable pursuant to paragraph (2)(A), the Commission shall consider, among other factors—

"(A) the extent to which service offerings are offered on an unbundled basis;

"(B) rates for similarly situated cable systems offering comparable services, taking into account, among other factors, similarities in facilities, regulatory and governmental costs, and number of subscribers;

"(C) the history of rates for such service offerings of the system;

"(D) the rates for all cable programming service offerings taken as a whole; and

"(E) the rates for such service offerings charged by cable systems subject to effective competition, as defined in subsection (d).

"(d) Under this section, a cable system shall be presumed to be subject to effective competition if—

"(1) fewer than 30 percent of the households in the cable community subscribe to the cable service of such cable system; or

"(2) the cable community is served by a sufficient number of local television broadcast signals and by more than one multichannel video programming distributor.

For purposes of paragraph (2), a cable community shall be considered as served by more than one multichannel video programming distributor if (A) comparable video programming is available at comparable rates to at least a majority of the households in the cable community from a competing cable operator, multichannel multipoint distribution service, direct broadcast satellite program distributor, television receive-only satellite program distributor, or other competing multichannel video programming distributor, and (B) the number of households subscribing to programming services offered by such competing multichannel video programming distributor, or by a combination of such distributors, is in the aggregate at least 15 percent of the households in the cable community. No competing multichannel video programming distributor serving households in a cable community which, directly or indirectly, is owned or controlled by, or affiliated through substantial common ownership with, the cable system in that cable community, shall be included in any determination regarding effective competition under this subsection.

"(e) Nothing in this title shall be construed as forbidding any Federal agency, State, or franchising authority from—

"(1) prohibiting discrimination among customers of cable service; or

"(2) requiring and regulating the installation or rental of equipment which facilitates the reception of cable service by hearing-impaired individuals.

"(f) For purposes of this section, the term 'cable programming service' means all video programming services, including installation or rental of equipment not used for the receipt of basic cable service, regardless of service tier, offered over a cable system except basic cable service and those services offered on a per channel or per program basis.

"(g) Within 120 days of enactment of this subsection, the Commission shall, by regulation, establish standards, guidelines, and procedures to prevent evasions of the rates, services, and other requirements of this section.".

NONDISCRIMINATION WITH RESPECT TO VIDEO PROGRAMMING

SEC. 6. Part IV of title VI of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 551 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new sections:

"NONDISCRIMINATION WITH RESPECT TO VIDEO PROGRAMMING

"SEC. 640. (a) A video programmer in which a cable operator has an attributable interest and who licenses video programming for national or regional distribution—

"(1) shall not unreasonably refuse to deal with any multichannel video programming distributor;

"(2) shall not discriminate in the price, terms, and conditions in the sale of the video programmer's programming among cable systems, cable operators, or other multichannel video programming distributors if such action would have the effect of impeding retail competition.

"(b) A video programmer in which a cable operator has an attributable interest and who licenses video programming for national or regional distribution shall make programming available on similar price, terms, and conditions to all cable systems, cable operators, or their agents or buying groups: Provided however, That such video programmer may—

"(1) impose reasonable requirements for creditworthiness, offering of service, and financial stability;

"(2) establish different price, terms, and conditions to take into account differences in cost in the creation, sale, delivery, or transmission of video programming;

"(3) establish price, terms, and conditions which take into account economies of scale or other cost savings reasonably attributable to the number of subscribers served by the distributor; and

"(4) permit price differentials which are made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor.

"(c) The Commission shall prescribe rules and regulations to implement this section. The Commission's rules shall—

"(1) provide for an expedited review of any complaints made pursuant to this section; and

"(2) provide for penalties to be assessed against any person filing a frivolous complaint pursuant to this section.

"(d) Any person who encrypts any satellite cable programming for private viewing shall make such programming available for private viewing by C-band receive-only home satellite antenna users.

"(f) This section shall not apply to the signal of an affiliate of a national television broadcast network or other television broadcast signal that is retransmitted by satellite and shall not apply to any internal satellite communication of any broadcaster, broadcast network, or cable network.

"(g) For purposes of this section, any video programmer who licenses video programming for distribution to more than one cable community shall be considered a regional distributor of video programming. Nothing contained in this section shall require any person who licenses video programming for national or regional distribution to make such programming available in any geographic area beyond which such programming has been authorized or licensed for distribution.

"AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CABLE OPERATORS AND VIDEO PROGRAMMERS

"SEC. 641. Within one year after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall establish regulations governing program carriage agreements and related practices between cable operators and video programmers. Such regulations shall—

"(1) include provisions designed to prevent a cable operator or other multichannel video programming distributor from requiring a financial interest in a program service as a condition for carriage on one or more of such operator's systems;

"(2) include provisions designed to prohibit a cable operator or other multichannel video programming distributor from coercing a video programmer to provide exclusive rights against other multichannel video programming distributors as a condition of carriage on a system;

"(3) contain provisions designed to prevent a multichannel video programming distributor from engaging in conduct the effect of which is to unreasonably restrain the ability of an unaffiliated video programmer to compete fairly by discriminating in video programming distribution on the basis of affiliation or nonaffiliation in the selection, terms, or conditions for carriage of video programmers;

"(4) provide for expedited review of any complaints made by a video programmer pursuant to this section; and

"(5) provide penalties to be assessed against any person filing a frivolous complaint pursuant to this section.".

LEASED COMMERCIAL ACCESS

SEC. 7. (a) Section 612(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 532(a)) is amended by inserting "to promote competition in the delivery of diverse sources of video programming and" immediately after "purpose of this section is".

(b) Section 612(c) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 532(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by inserting "and with rules prescribed by the Commission under paragraph (4)" immediately after "purpose of this section"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) The Commission shall have the authority to—

"(i) determine the maximum reasonable rates that a cable operator may establish pursuant to paragraph (1) for commercial use of designated channel capacity, including the rate charged for the billing of rates to subscribers and for the collection of revenue from subscribers by the cable operator for such use; and

"(ii) establish reasonable terms and conditions for such use, including those for billing and collection.

"(B) Within 180 days after the date of enactment of this paragraph, the Commission shall establish rules for determining the maximum reasonable rate under subparagraph (A)(i) and for establishing terms and conditions under subparagraph (A)(ii).".

(c) Paragraph (5) of section 612(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 532(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) For the purposes of this section, the term 'commercial use' means the provision of video programming, whether or not for profit.".

LIMITATIONS ON CONTROL AND UTILIZATION

SEC. 8. Subsection (f) of section 613 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 533) is amended to read as follows:

"(f)(1) In order to enhance effective competition, the Commission shall, within one year after the date of enactment of the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1990, conduct a rulemaking proceeding to prescribe rules and regulations establishing—

"(A) reasonable limits on the number of cable subscribers a person is authorized to reach through cable systems owned by such person, or in which such person has an attributable interest; and

"(B) reasonable limits on the number of channels on a cable system that can be occupied by a video programmer in which a cable operator has an attributable interest.

"(2) In prescribing rules and regulations under paragraph (1), the Commission shall, among other public interest objectives—

"(A) ensure that no cable operator or group of cable operators can unfairly impede, either because of the size of any individual operator or because of joint actions by a group of operators of sufficient size, the flow of video programming from the video programmer to the consumer;

"(B) ensure that cable operators affiliated with video programmers do not favor such programmers in determining carriage on their cable systems or do not unreasonably restrict the flow of such programming to other video distributors;

"(C) take particular account of the market structure, ownership patterns, and other relationships of the cable television industry, including the nature and market power of the local franchise, the joint ownership of cable systems and video programmers, and the various types of non-equity controlling interests;

"(D) account for any efficiencies and other benefits that might be gained through increased ownership or control;

"(E) make such rules and regulations reflect the dynamic nature of the communications marketplace;

"(F) not impose limitations which would bar cable operators from serving previously unserved rural areas; and

"(G) not impose limitations which would impair the development of diverse and high quality video programming.".

CROSS-OWNERSHIP

SEC. 9. (a) Section 613(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 533(a)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" immediately after "(a)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) It shall be unlawful for a cable operator to hold a license for multichannel multipoint distribution service, or to offer satellite master antenna television service separate and apart from any franchised cable service, in any portion of the cable community served by that cable operator's cable system. The Commission—

"(A) shall waive the requirements of this paragraph for all existing multichannel multipoint distribution services and satellite master antenna television services which are owned by a cable operator on the date of enactment of this paragraph; and

"(B) may waive the requirements of this paragraph to the extent the Commission determines is necessary to ensure that all significant portions of the affected cable community are able to obtain video programming.".

(b) Section 613(c) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 533(c)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" immediately after "(c)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) If ten percent of the households in the United States with television sets subscribe to service provided by multichannel video programming distributors directly via satellite to home satellite antennae, the Commission shall promulgate appropriate regulations (A) limiting ownership of any such distributor by cable operators or any person having other media interests and (B) requiring access to such satellite service by unaffiliated video programmers.".

CUSTOMER SERVICE

SEC. 10. (a) Section 632(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 552(a)) is amended by inserting "may establish and" immediately after "authority" and in paragraph (1) by inserting immediately after "operator" the following: "that (A) subject to the provisions of subsection (e), exceed the standards set by the Commission under this section, or (B) prior to the issuance by the Commission of rules pursuant to subsection (d)(1), exist on the date of enactment of the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991".

(b) Section 632 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 552) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(d)(1) The Commission, within 180 days after the date of enactment of this subsection, shall, after notice and an opportunity for comment, issue rules that establish customer service standards that ensure that all customers are fairly served. Thereafter the Commission shall regularly review the standards and make such modifications as may be necessary to ensure that customers of the cable industry are fairly served. A franchising authority may enforce the standards established by the Commission.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) and this subsection, nothing in this title shall be construed to prevent the enforcement of—

"(A) any municipal ordinance or agreement in effect on the date of enactment of this subsection, or concerning customer service that imposes customer service requirements that exceed the standards set by the Commission under this section.

"(B) any State law,

"(e) In the event that a particular franchising authority, pursuant to its authority under subsection (a), requires provisions for enforcement of customer service requirements of the cable operator that exceed the standards established by the Commission, the cable operator may petition the Commission for a declaration, after notice and hearing and based upon substantial evidence, that the particular franchising authority's requirements are not in the public interest. In determining whether a particular franchising authority's provisions for enforcement of customer service requirements are not in the public interest, the Commission shall consider the needs of the local area served by the particular franchising authority.".

FRANCHISE RENEWAL

SEC. 11.(a) Section 626(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 546(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "Submission of a timely written renewal notice by the cable operator specifically requesting a franchising authority to initiate the formal renewal process under this section is required for the cable operator to invoke the renewal procedures set forth in subsections (a) through (g); except that nothing in this section requires a franchising authority to commence the renewal proceedings during the 6-month period which begins with the 36th month before the franchise expiration.".

(b) Section 626(c)(1) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 546(c)(1)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "pursuant to subsection (b)" immediately after "renewal of a franchise"; and

(2) by striking "completion of any proceedings under subsection (a)" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "date of the submission of the cable operator's proposal pursuant to subsection (b)".

(c) Section 626(c)(1)(A) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 546 (c)(1)(A)) is amended by inserting "throughout the franchise term" immediately after "law".

(d) Section 626(c)(1)(B) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 546(c)(1)(B)) is amended—

(1) by striking "mix, quality, or level" and inserting in lieu therof "mix or quality"; and

(2) by inserting "throughout the franchise term" immediately after "needs".

(c) Section 626(d) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 546(d)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "which has been submitted in compliance with subsection (b)" immediately after "Any denial of a proposal for renewal"; and

(2) by striking all after "unless" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the operator has notice and opportunity to cure, or in any case in which it is documented that the franchising authority has waived in writing its right to object.".

(f) Section 626(e)(2)(A) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 546(e)(2)(A)) is amended by inserting immediately after "section" the following: "and such failure to comply actually prejudiced the cable operator".

(g) Section 626 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 546) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(i) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a) through (h), any lawful action to revoke a cable operator's franchise for cause shall not be negated by the initiation of renewal proceedings by the cable operator under this section.".

REQUIREMENT FOR CERTAIN EQUIPMENT ON TELEVISION SETS SEC. 12. SECTION 303(S) OF THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934 (47 U.S.C. 303(S) IS AMENDED—

(1) by inserting ", and be equipped with an electronic switch permitting users of the apparatus to change readily among all video distribution media," immediately after "television broadcasting"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period at the end of the following: ", except that such electronic switch shall be required only if the Commission determines that the installation of the switch is technically and economically feasible".

LIMITATION OF FRANCHISING AUTHORITY LIABILITY

SEC. 13. Part III of title VI of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 621 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"LIMITATION OF LIABILITY

"SEC. 628.(a) In any court proceeding pending on the date of enactment of this section, or initiated after such date, involving any claim under the Civil Rights Acts asserting a violation of First Amendment constitutional rights by a franchising authority or other governmental entity or by any official, member, employee, or agent of such authority or entity, arising from actions expressly authorized or required by this title, any relief shall be limited to injunctive relief, declaratory relief, and attorney's fees and legal costs, except as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) The limitation required by subsection (a) shall not apply to actions that, prior to such violation, have been determined by a final order of a court of binding jurisdiction, no longer subject to appeal, to be in violation of constitutional rights under the First Amendment or of the Civil Rights Act.".

MINIMUM TECHNICAL STANDARDS

SEC. 14. Section 624(e) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 544(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e)(1) The Commission shall, within one year after the date of enactment of the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1990, establish minimum technical standards to ensure adequate signal quality for all classes of video programming signals provided over a cable system, and thereafter shall periodically update such minimum standards to reflect improvements in technology.

"(2) The Commission may establish standards for technical operation and other signals provided over a cable system including but not limited to high-definition television (HDTV).

"(3) The Commission may require compliance with and enforce any standard established under this subsection, adjusted as appropriate for the particular circumstances of the local cable system and cable community.

"(4) The Commission shall establish procedures for complaints or petitions asserting the failure of a cable operator to meet the technical standards and seeking an order compelling compliance; except that nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit the ability of a complainant or petitioner to seek any other remedy that may be available under the franchise agreement or State or Federal law or regulation.

"(5) After the establishment of technical standards by the Commission pursuant to this section, neither a State or political subdivision thereof, nor a franchising authority or other governmental entity of a State or political subdivision thereof, shall—

"(A) establish any technical standards described in this subsection;

"(B) enforce any such standards that have not been established by the Commission; or

"(C) enforce any such standards that are inconsistent with the standards established by the Commission.".

REQUIREMENT TO CARRY LOCAL BROADCAST SIGNALS

SEC. 15. Part II of title VI of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 531 et seq.) is amended by inserting immediately after section 613 the following new sections:

"CARRIAGE OF LOCAL COMMERCIAL BROADCAST SIGNALS

"SEC. 614. (a) Each cable operator that relies upon compulsory licensing pursuant to section 111 of title 17, United States Code, for secondary transmissions by its cable system (hereafter in this section referred to as a 'participating operator') shall carry the signals of qualified local commercial broadcast stations in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(b)(1) A participating operator of a cable system with 12 or fewer usable activated channels shall carry the signals of a minimum of three qualified local commercial broadcast signals.

"(2) A participating operator of a cable system with more than 12 usable activated channels shall carry the number of signals of qualified local commercial broadcast stations that is equal to one-third of the aggregate number of usable activated channels of such system.

"(c)(1) Whenever the number of qualified local commercial broadcast stations exceeds the minimum number of signals of such stations that a participating operator of a cable system is required to carry under this section, the participating operator shall have discretion in selecting which signals shall be carried on its cable system in order to meet the carriage requirements of this section; except that if the participating operator elects to carry an affiliate of a broadcast network entity, such operator shall carry the affiliate of such broadcast network entity whose city of license reference point, as defined in section 76.53 of title 47, Code of Federal Regulations, or any successor regulations thereto, is closest to the principal headend of the cable system. The carriage of each signal of a qualified local commercial broadcast station shall be included in determining whether a participating operator of a cable system has complied with the requirements of this section, even if the signal of one such station substantially duplicates that of another station. For purposes of this paragraph, the term "broadcast network entity" means an organization which produces programs available for simultaneous transmission by 10 or more affiliated broadcast stations and which has distribution locality or circuits available to such affiliated stations at least 12 hours each day.

"(2) Each signal carried in fulfillment of carriage obligations of a participating operator of a cable system under this section shall be carried on the cable system channel number on which the qualified local commercial broadcast station is broadcast over the air, or on the channel on which it was carried on July 19, 1985, at the election of the broadcaster, or on such other channel number as mutually agreed upon by the broadcaster and the participating operator. Any disputes regarding the positioning of a qualified local commercial broadcast station shall be resolved by the Commission.

"(3) A participating operator of a cable system shall carry in its entirety the primary video and accompanying audio transmission of each of the qualified local commercial broadcast stations the operator selects to carry in accordance with this section. Retransmission of material in the vertical blanking interval or other enhancements of the primary video and audio signal (including multi-channel sound, teletext, and materials carried on subcarriers) shall be within the discretion of the participating operator.

"(4) The signals of a qualified local commercial broadcast station that are carried on the cable system of a participating operator shall be carried without material degradation.

"(5) A participating operator of a cable system shall not be required to carry the signal of any qualified local commercial broadcast station that substantially duplicates the signal of another qualified local commercial broadcast station that is carried by the operator.

"(6) Signals carried in fulfillment of carriage obligations of a participating operator under this section shall be available on the lowest priced tier of service separately available to each cable subscriber to which subscription is required for access to all other tiers of service. Such signals shall be viewable via cable on all television receivers of a subscriber connected to a cable system by a cable operator. If a participating operator of a cable system authorizes subscribers to install additional receiver connections, but does not provide the subscriber with such connections, or with the equipment or materials for such connections, the operator shall notify such subscribers in writing of all broadcast stations within 50 miles of the principal headend of the cable system that are not available without a cable converter box and shall offer to sell or lease such a converter box to such subscribers.

"(7) A participating operator shall identify, upon request by any person, those signals carried in fulfillment of the signal carriage obligations of the operator under this section.

"(8) A participating operator of a cable system shall provide written notice to a qualified local commercial broadcast station, the franchising authority of such cable system, and subscribers of such cable system at least 30 days prior to either deleting from carriage or repositioning the signal of that qualified local commercial broadcast station. No such deletion or repositioning shall occur during a sweeps period in which major television rating services measure the size of audience of qualified local commercial broadcast stations.

"(9) A participating operator of a cable system shall not accept monetary payment or other valuable consideration in exchange for carriage of the signal of any qualified local commercial broadcast station carried in fulfillment of signal carriage obligations of the operator under this section, except that any such station may be required to bear any cost associated with delivering to the headend of the cable system a signal of the quality defined in section 602(20).

"(d)(1) Whenever a qualified local commercial broadcast station believes that a participating operator of a cable system has failed to comply with the signal carriage requirements of this section, the station may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall allege the manner in which such operator has failed to comply with such requirements and state the basis for such allegations.

"(2) The Commission shall afford such participating operator an opportunity to present data, views, and arguments to establish that the operator has complied with the signal carriage requirements of this section.

"(3) Within 120 days after the date a complaint is filed under this subsection, the Commission shall determine whether the participating operator has complied with the requirements of this section. If the Commission determines that the participating operator has failed to comply with such requirements, the Commission shall state with particularity the basis for such findings and order the operator to take such remedial action as is necessary to meet such requirements. If the Commission determines that the participating operator has fully complied with such requirements, the Commission shall dismiss the complaint.

CARRIAGE OF NONCOMMERCIAL EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION SIGNALS

"SEC. 615. (a) In addition to the carriage requirements set forth in section 614, each operator of a cable system (hereafter in this section referred to as an 'operator') shall carry the signals of qualified noncommercial educational television stations in accordance with the provisions of this section. The provisions of this section apply without regard for whether the operator is a participating operator as defined in section 614(a).

"(b)(1) Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3) and subsection (e), each operator shall carry, on the cable system of that operator, each qualified local noncommercial educational television station requesting carriage.

"(2)(A) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), an operator of a cable system with 12 or fewer usable activated channels shall be required to carry the signal of only one qualified local noncommercial educational television station; except that an operator of such a system shall comply with subsection (c) and may, in its discretion, carry the signals of other qualified noncommercial educational television stations.

"(B) In the case of a cable system described in subparagraph (A) which operates beyond the presence of any qualified local noncommercial educational television station—

"(i) the operator shall carry on that system the signal of one qualified noncommercial educational television station;

"(ii) the selection for carriage of such a signal shall be at the election of the operator; and

"(iii) in order to satisfy the requirements for carriage specified in this subsection, the operator of the system shall not be required to remove any other programming service actually provided to subscribers on March 29, 1990; except that such operator shall use the first channel available to satisfy the requirements of this subparagraph.

"(3)(A) Subject to subsection (c), an operator of a cable system with 13 to 36 usable activated channels—

"(i) shall carry the signal of at least one qualified local noncommercial educational television station but shall not be required to carry the signals of more than three such stations, and "(ii) may, in its discretion, carry additional such stations.

"(B) In the case of a cable system described in this paragraph which operates beyond the presence of any qualified local noncommercial educational television station, the operator shall import the signal of at least one qualified noncommercial educational station to comply with subparagraph (A)(i).

"(C) The operator of a cable system described in this paragraph which carries the signal of a qualified local noncommercial educational station affiliated with a State public television network shall not be required to carry the signal of any additional qualified local noncommercial educational television station affiliated with the same network if the programming of such additional station is substantially duplicated by the programming of the qualified local noncommercial educational television station receiving carriage.

"(D) An operator of a system described in subparagraph (A) which increased the usable activated channel capacity of the system to more than 36 channels on or after March 29, 1990 shall, in accordance with the other provisions of this section, carry the signal of each qualified local noncommercial educational television station requesting carriage, subject to subsection (e).

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, all operators shall continue to provide carriage to all qualified local noncommercial educational television stations whose signals were carried on their systems as of March 29, 1990. The requirements of this subsection may be waived with respect to a particular operator and a particular such station, upon the written consent of the operator and the station.

"(d) An operator required to add the signals of qualified local noncommerical educational television stations to a cable system under this section may do so by placing such additional stations on public, educational, or governmental channels not in use for their designated purposes.

"(e) An operator of a cable system with a capacity of more than 36 usable activated channels which is required to carry the signals of three qualified local noncommercial educational television stations shall not be required to carry the signals of additional such stations the programming of which substantially duplicates the programming broadcast by another qualified local noncommercial educational television station requesting carriage. Substantial duplication shall be defined by the Commission in a manner that promotes access to distinctive noncommercial educational television services.

"(f) A qualified local noncommercial educational television station whose signal is carried by an operator shall not assert any network non-duplication rights it may have pursuant to section 76.92 of title 47, Code of Federal Regulations, to require the deletion of programs aired on other qualified local noncommercial educational television stations whose signals are carried by that operator.

"(g)(1) An operator shall retransmit in its entirety the primary video and accompanying audio transmission of each qualified local noncommercial educational television station whose signal is carried on the cable system, and, to the extent technically feasible, program-related material carried in the vertical blanking interval, or on subcarriers, that may be necessary for receipt of programming by handicapped persons or for educational or language purposes. Retransmission of other material in the vertical blanking interval or on subcarriers shall be within the discretion of the operator.

"(2) An operator shall provide each qualified local noncommercial educational television station whose signal is carried in accordance with this section, with bandwidth and technical capacity equivalent to that provided to commercial television broadcast stations carried on the cable system and shall carry the signal of each qualified local noncommercial educational television station without material degradation.

"(3) The signal of a qualified local noncommercial educational television station shall not be repositioned by an operator unless the operator, at least 30 days in advance of such repositioning, has provided written notice to the station and all subscribers of the cable system. For purposes of this paragraph, repositioning includes (A) assignment of a qualified local noncommercial educational television station to a cable system channel number different from the cable system channel number to which the station was assigned as of March 29, 1990, and (B) deletion of the station from the cable system.

"(4) Notwithstanding the other provisions of this section, an operator shall not be required to carry the signal of any qualified local noncommercial educational television station which does not deliver to the cable system's principal headend a signal of good quality, as may be defined by the Commission.

"(h) Signals carried in fulfillment of the carriage obligations of an operator under this section shall be available to every subscriber as part of the cable system's lowest priced service that includes the retransmission of local television broadcast signals.

"(i)(1) An operator shall not accept monetary payment or other valuable consideration in exchange for carriage of the signal of any qualified local noncommercial educational television station carried in fulfillment of the requirements of this section, except that such a station may be required to bear the cost associated with delivering a good quality signal to the principal headend of the cable system.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, an operator shall not be required to add the signal of a qualified local noncommercial educational television station not already carried under the provision of subsection (c), where such signal would be considered as a distant signal for copyright purposes unless such station reimburses the operator for the incremental copyright costs assessed against such operator as a result of such carriage.

"(j)(1) Whenever a qualified local noncommercial educational television station believes that an operator of a cable system has failed to comply with the signal carriage requirements of this section, the station may file a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall allege the manner in which such operator has failed to compy with such requirements and state the basis for such allegations.

"(2) The Commission shall afford such participating operator an opportunity to present data, views, and arguments to establish that the operator has complied with the signal carriage requirements of this section.

"(3) Within 120 days after the date a complaint is filed under this subsection, the Commission shall determine whether the operator has complied with the requirements of this section. If the Commission determines that the operator has failed to comply with such requirements, the Commission shall state with particularity the basis for such findings and order the operator to take such remedial action as is necessary to meet such requirements. If the Commission determines that the operator has fully complied with such requirements, the Commission shall dismiss the complaint.

"(k) An operator shall identify, upon request by any person, those signals carried in fulfillment of the requirements of this section.

"(l) For purposes of this section, 'qualified local noncommercial educational television station' is defined as a qualified noncommercial educational television station—

"(A) which is licensed to a principal community whose reference point, as defined in section 76.53 of title 47, Code of Federal Regulations (as in effect on March 29, 1990), or any successor regulations thereto, is within 50 miles of the principal headend of the cable system; or

"(B) whose Grade B service contour, as defined in section 73.683(a) of such title (as in effect on March 29, 1990), or any successor regulations thereto, encompasses the principal headend of the cable system.".

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 16. Section 635 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 555) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any civil action challenging the constitutionality of section 614 of this Act or any provision thereof shall be heard by a district court of three judges convened pursuant to the provisions of section 2284 of title 28, United States Code.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, an interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order of the court of three judges in an action under paragraph (1) holding section 614 of this Act or any provision thereof unconstitutional shall be reviewable as a matter or right by direct appeal to the Supreme Court. Any such appeal shall be filed not more than 20 days after entry of such judgment, decree, or order.".

HOME WIRING

SEC. 17. Section 624 of the Communications Act of 1934 (17 U.S.C. 544) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g) Within 120 days after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Commission shall prescribe rules and regulations concerning the disposition, after a subscriber to a cable system terminates service, of any cable installed by the cable operator within the premises of such subscriber.".

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 18. If any provision of this Act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this Act, or the application as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 19. Except as otherwise specified in this Act, the requirements of this Act shall be effective 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act. The Federal Communications Commission may promulgate such regulations as it determines necessary to interpret such requirements that are not inconsistent herewith.●

Mr. GORE. Madam President, I do not plan to speak today on the cable legislation that will be introduced by Senator DANFORTH and Senator HOLLINGS, except to say that I am proud to be a cosponsor of it and to make a brief statement.

New legislation to control rapidly increasing rates on cable television is still necessary. The situation is no better today than it was 2 years ago. In fact, it is worse. It is a monopoly that is neither regulated nor faces any competition, and no business in America should be in that situation. It is imperative that this Congress act this year to give some relief to people who are paying outrageous increases in their rates for cable television.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991. I have followed the communications industry for decades and am continually impressed by its progress and achievements. Who would have thought a decade ago that over half of the American public would be willing to pay to watch television? After all, we had the best television in the world, and you could receive it for free. Yet, it is clear that the public sees something special in cable television—over 57 percent of American homes now subscribe to cable—and people are willing to pay a significant amount to receive it.

This tremendous growth in the cable industry has produced much of value. Most cable subscribers have access to 36 channels, and this amount is steadily increasing. Many systems already offer twice as many channels as before enactment of the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984. This increase in capacity has been accompanied by a great increase in the programming that is offered, and here too, more is on the horizon. That is an outstanding record.

This growth also has produced problems. The Commerce Committee has heard about undue rate increases, customer service problems, and various anticompetitive market practices. I know that many of these problems are the result of certain "bad actors". I can assure everyone that we will not set policy based on isolated events.

However, there is more here than isolated events. The cable industry is no longer a second-class video distributor that only retransmits broadcast programming. It now serves more than half of American homes, and that amount is increasing. Furthermore, it has de facto exclusive franchises. It appears well on its way to becoming the dominant video distributor.

I know that cable systems face some competition from over-the-air broadcasters and from video rental stores. However, most often there exists no multichannel competitor, and most people subscribe to cable because of the wide group of satellite-delivered signals. Cable systems thus have become important gatekeepers. They are to be commended for their growth, but they also must recognize that they have achieved a new status and have acquired new responsibilities. These new attributes will become even more important if cable continues its impressive growth.

Last Congress, under the leadership of Senator Inouye, the chairman of the Communications Subcommittee, the Commerce Committee began to examine what should be done to address the cable industry and the concerns raised by consumers. The committee carefully and deliberately compiled an extensive record through numerous hearings and meetings. The committee then drafted legislation that represented a true consensus of the committee's members. In fact, that legislation was reported by the committee by a vote of 18 to 1. The legislation we are introducing today is based on that same bill.

It reflects my concerns and those of my colleagues about the need to have some control over rates and to ensure that customers are properly served. We must prevent monopolistic practices. At the same time, we want to encourage the growth of programming, the increase in channel capacity, and the development of new technologies.

The bill we are introducing today seeks the proper balance among these competing objectives. It represents a substantial effort. I look forward to continuing to work with my colleagues, and with representatives of consumers, the cable industry, broadcasters and other interested parties to advance this legislation and ensure that it accomplishes its objectives.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, with the introduction of S. 12, The Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991, we renew the long-running debate on cable television policy. The bill is essentially the same as the legislation reported out of the Commerce Committee last year. But the fact that we are introducing this bill today—at the beginning of this Congress—should send a clear message that advocates of legislation are as determined as ever to act.

When S. 1880 died last October—largely at the instigation of an obstinate White House and some powerful forces in the cable industry—the issues and the problems that sparked these efforts did not disappear. The problems that beseiged this industry and its consumers last year are with us this year.

Mr. President, I want to be sure to note that not all cable executives worked to kill this bill last year. As the 101st Congress came to its end in October, several industry leaders were entirely forthcoming and cooperative in helping us reach important compromises designed to advance the bill. The so-called Gore-Wirth compromise on exclusivity was hammered out after weeks of good-faith negotiations with key representatives within the industry. While that compromise is not part of the new bill—and may not be included as this bill advances—I was pleased to work with these industry leaders who viewed legislation as a responsible course.

Passage of the bill last year would have put this issue to rest. None of us wanted to continue this drumbeat of criticism of an industry which, in fact, has brought many wonderful new forms of television entertainment and information to millions of families. We are all grateful to cable for its efforts to create and then support coverage of the Congress through C-SPAN, new educational programming services from local institutions, coverage of local government decision-making, innovative children's programming, and so much more.

But for the past 6 years, the question has been simple: when you have an industry that looks like a monopoly, acts like a monopoly, smells like a monopoly, and charges captive customers like a monopoly, what do we, as Federal policy makers do about it even while the industry is claiming it is not a monopoly?

The 1984 Cable Act took away the authority of local officials to control abuses, such as when franchises are bought and sold like the junk bonds that finance so many of these franchise takeovers.

Since deregulation consumers have faced alarming rate hikes—in some cases a doubling of rates overnight, as in 22 West Tennessee communities in 1988. In that example, a stable, locally based cable operator was providing essential services to small communities at a fair price. A go-go multi-system operation from Connecticut, MultiVision, using highly leveraged venture capital, paid far too much money to take over these rural systems. Left with a huge debt service, MultiVision had no choice but to jack up rates for basic service to meet their interest payments alone, while adding no new services whatsoever.

The now-infamous MultiVision case may have been one of the most glaring examples of abuse by the cable industry, but it was by no means unique. Practically every Congressional office has a fat file of complaints—in my case more than 4,000 letters—about unwarranted rate increases—and new complaints are added to this file every day.

While some rate adjustments in Tennessee and throughout the country were reasonable, and resulted in improved services and more cable channels, in far too many cases rate hikes were purely efforts to increase profits from captive consumers who have become increasingly dependent upon cable as a primary conduit for information services to their homes.

Clearly, some regulatory adjustments to the 1984 Cable Act were in order. Yet too many cable systems have gone too far in testing what the market will bear, and for too long have ignored their service responsibilities. Direct basic rate increases are not the only devices cable operators have used to enhance profits. More recently we have seen customers facing moderate basic rate increases, but new—and totally unjustified—rental charges for cable decoders already in place. Other disguised rate hikes were thrown at consumers in the form of basic rates held level only if customers purchase expensive premium services—HBO, Showtime, etc.—otherwise basic rates would be forced up.

S. 12 provides local communities with tools to keep precipitous rate hikes in check, while preserving the revenue flows so cable operators and programmers can improve services and add programming.

Unfortunately, the prospect of competition—which clearly can hold rates in check—is as elusive as ever. The most direct form of competition—local overbuilders of cable systems—is practically non-existent. Out of 9,000 cable franchises nationwide, consumers in fewer than 50 communities have the option of a competing system. Consumers' Research recently found that local cable rates were on average 18 percent lower in communities with overbuilds than those with only one system. But the prospect of this kind of competition is bleak to zero.

Other technological competitors are severely disadvantaged as well. The telephone companies are expressly prohibited from competing with cable. Wireless cable and home satellite dish program distributors often cannot get fair treatment from the companies selling cable programming, and are forced to pay much higher prices for programming, if they can get it at all. The long-awaited, high-powered direct-broadcast satellite systems [DBS] with small home dishes will never get up and running if they suffer the same fate as traditional home dish businesses. Some progress has been made—such as HBO's decision last year to make its services available to most distributors at non-discriminatory prices. But all too often this approach is rejected in favor of highly discriminatory behavior, such as ESPN's continued determination to keep process artificially high for satellite dish distributors.

Moreover, many cable programmers, especially those who are not owned by cable MSOs, fear that the major cable companies which represent their primary source of revenues will retaliate if they allow equal access to cable's competitors. Cable MSOs often have a life-or-death control over new programming services, and have at times exercised this control in devastating ways. Several years ago TCI Inc.—the country's largest cable operator—refused to grant access to NBC's startup cable news service, and NBC was forced to kill the new channel. And even when TCI agreed to take NBC's next cable effort, CNBC, it demanded that NBC buy Tempo, a worthless programming service from TCI.

Our legislative effort is designed to prevent such anticompetitive behavior by requiring that programming services not discriminate against non-cable distributors of programming. Similarly, cable MSOs would not be allowed to extract "exclusive" distribution deals from programmers as a condition of carrying their programming.

Preventing the abuse of exclusive distribution contracts in the cable industry will stimulate competition for cable—competition which can ultimately solve the spiraling rate problem now nearly out of control in this country.

We have been debating these issues since the 1984 Cable Act deregulated cable operators. The problem facing consumers—skyrocketing prices, anticompetitive program distribution, poor customer service—all began to occur immediately after deregulation. Advocates of deregulation said: "Let's let the Act work, the problems will go away." But the problems haven't been solved, the industry is still severely distorted, little has changed. And in fact, from the standpoint of many consumers it has gotten worse.

The goal of S. 12 is to give consumers of cable television services at least modest relief from skyrocketing rates and the pervasive anticompetitive practices within the cable/programming industry. There will again be powerful forces opposing the bill, but the tide clearly has turned in the favor of consumers when it comes to Federal cable policy.

Mr. President, I urge our colleagues to carefully review this new bill, and to join us in sending a message to consumers in their States that the Senate is prepared to finally bring some reason to the morass of regulatory problems in the cable marketplace.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I join today with Senator DANFORTH, Senator HOLLINGS and Senator GORE to support the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991. I want to thank these Senators for all of their work on this legislation. This bill should not come as a surprise. It is essentially the same bill that was approved by the Commerce Committee last June by a vote of 18 to 1 and which was authored by Senators HOLLINGS and DANFORTH and myself.

Until the 1984 act, there was no Federal policy for cable television. The FCC had only indirect authority to oversee the cable industry, which it obtained by virtue of its obligation to ensure that broadcasters served the public interest. About a dozen States had laws in effect controlling certain cable activities, and in those States where no law existed, the cities and other local government entities exercised control because cable systems had to pass through public rights of way. As a result, the cable industry was subjected to a crazy quilt of regulation, often to its detriment and to that of the subscriber.

The 1984 act changed this cable landscape significantly. It defined more precisely the roles of each governmental entity. The State or local authorities continued to regulate rates in the absence of effective competition and to control the franchising process, but under new constraints. The Federal Government controlled basic rate deregulation and technical standards. The 1984 act provided the cable industry with the potential to develop its systems and its programming. Actions by the FCC to implement the act further freed the industry from regulation, giving it the certainty to increase capital expenditures.

The 1984 act has achieved many of its objectives. Over the past 6 years, the cable industry has grown dramatically. Most of America is now wired to receive cable; almost 90 percent of the homes in the country are passed by cable systems, and over 60 percent of these homes subscribe to cable service. System capacity has increased; the average cable system offers about 36 channels, and this number is steadily increasing. Programming choices have also grown about 50 percent since the act was passed, with many more offerings now being planned. Cable television has become our Nation's dominant video distribution medium.

With this growth have come problems. In certain instances, rate increases have been excessive. For many systems, customer service has been abominable. Programmers have argued that they cannot get carried on cable systems without relinquishing control of their product. In addition, competing video distributors allege that these programmers refuse to deal with them. In general, it is argued that the cable industry now possesses undue market power which is used to the detriment of consumers, programmers, and competing video distributors. These concerns are addressed by this legislation.

As chairman of the Communications Subcommittee, I knew in the last Congress that we had to address these matters expeditiously, and I immediately began a series of hearings. My subcommittee held 10 hearings on cable-related issues. We listened to over 30 hours of testimony from about 75 different witnesses. Out of this exhaustive examination, virtually all members of the committee concluded that the 1984 Cable Act has been a success but has been accompanied by problems and that legislation was necessary to correct these problems. While we would prefer to remedy these problems through greater competition, such competition will not be forthcoming in the near future. Thus, it is necessary to impose greater regulation.

These conclusions are reflected in the legislation we are introducing today. This legislation addresses the concerns of consumers, programmers, and competitors about the market power of the cable industry. At the same time, it continues to permit the cable industry to grow and bring to the American public a new array of programming and other services. This bill represents a balanced package.

For the record, let me now summarize the major provisions of the legislation.

SUMMARY OF MAJOR PROVISIONS

SECTION 5—RATE REGULATION

The test for determining whether cable systems are subject to effective competition is made more stringent than existing FCC regulations. It requires that there be both a sufficient number of television signals and a multichannel video competitor prior to deregulation. If cable systems are not subject to competition, the FCC shall ensure that rates for basic cable service—the tier with retransmitted television signals—as well as the equipment used for the provision of that service, are reasonable. If fewer than 30 percent of a cable operator's customers subscribe to only the basic tier, the rates for the next tier can be regulated.

In addition, the FCC, upon complaint, shall ensure that rates for other—nonbasic and not offered on a per channel or per program basis—cable services and equipment used for the provision of those services are not unreasonable. Franchising authorities can obtain jurisdiction over basic rate regulation by certifying to the FCC that it will follow the FCC's procedures and standards. If the franchising authority does not follow these FCC requirements, its rate regulation authority can be revoked.

SECTION 6—PROGRAM DISTRIBUTION AND EXCLUSIVITY

National and regional cable programmers affiliated with cable operators cannot unreasonably refuse to deal with other video distributors. In addition, such programmers cannot discriminate in prices, terms, and conditions in the sale of programming to others if such discrimination would have the effect of impeding retail competition. Further, such a programmer must deal with cable operators and buying agents of cable operators on similar terms, but may take into account cost differentials as well as certain other factors. Cable operators cannot discriminate against unaffiliated cable programmers or require that a programmer give the operator a financial interest in the programmer as a condition of carriage. Finally, cable programmers who encrypt their satellite transmissions [C-Band] must make their programming available to home satellite dishowners.

SECTION 7—LEASED ACCESS

The FCC is given the authority to establish rates, terms, and conditions for access to these channels, including for billing and collection.

SECTION 8—LIMITATIONS ON CONTROL AND UTILIZATION

The FCC is required to conduct a rulemaking to prescribe reasonable limitations on first, the number of subscribers a cable operator can reach nationwide, and second, the number of channels that can be occupied on a cable system by programmers affiliated with a cable operator.

SECTION 9—CROSS-OWNERSHIP

A cable operator cannot own a multichannel multipoint distribution service [MMDS] system or a satellite master antenna television [SMATV] system in its franchise area, except that waivers can be granted. When approximately 10 percent of the Nation receives some form of direct satellite video service, the FCC is required to impose (A) limitations on the ownership of such services by cable operators and other persons having media ownership interests, and (B) access requirements for unaffiliated programmers.

SECTION 10—CUSTOMER SERVICE

The FCC is required to establish minimum customer service standards. Franchising authorities may set standards which exceed the FCC's standards. Cable operators may challenge a franchise authority's tougher standards at the FCC. Existing State laws, municipal ordinances and agreements that set customer service standards that are tougher than the FCC's are grandfathered.

SECTION 11—FRANCHISE RENEWAL

The legislation makes a series of changes to the procedural requirements in the current act.

SECTION 12—REQUIREMENTS FOR EQUIPMENT IN TELEVISION SETS

The FCC is given the authority—if it demonstrates technical and economic feasibility—to require television set manufacturers to include electronic switches to permit users to change readily among all video distribution media.

SECTION 13—LIMITATIONS ON FRANCHISING AUTHORITY LIABILITY

If franchising authorities act pursuant to the provisions of this act, they may be subject only to injunctive relief, declaratory relief, or attorneys' fees for claims asserting violations of first amendment rights.

SECTION 14—MINIMUM TECHNICAL STANDARDS

The FCC is required to establish minimum technical standards for the operation of cable systems.

SECTION 15—REQUIREMENT TO CARRY LOCAL BROADCAST SIGNALS

The bill requires carriage of local broadcasters and limits the discretion of cable systems to shift channel positions. It requires cable systems to devote up to one-third of their capacity to broadcast stations. The bill also includes the agreement reached between the public broadcasters and the cable industry.

SECTION 17—HOME WIRING

The FCC is required to prescribe rules concerning the disposition of cable-installed wires inside a home when the subscriber terminates service.

While this legislation is very similar to that approved by the Commerce Committee last Congress, we will be holding extensive hearings on this bill early in the year. It is our intention to move this legislation quickly, but not without providing all interested parties an opportunity to present their views.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join again as a cosponsor of the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991, which Senators DANFORTH, HOLLINGS, and INOUYE are introducing today. Last year, under their leadership, we came extremely close to passing cable reform legislation. I sincerely hope that we can build on last year's efforts and secure passage of a strong, proconsumer cable reform bill.

The bill being offered today is much stronger than S. 1880, the bill reported out of the Commerce Committee last year. I am especially pleased that the sponsors of this bill have seen fit to incorporate the substance of two amendments I, along with Senator METZENBAUM, was prepared to offer last year if cable legislation came to the floor.

First, while this bill retains S. 1880 division of cable services into broadcast basic, expanded basic programming—such as ESPN, CNN, MTV, C-SPAN and Nickelodeon—and premium services—such as HBO, Showtime, and the Movie Channel—it has significantly strengthened the standards under which the FCC may review rates for expanded basic programming. Under S. 1880, the FCC could scrutinize rate increases for the tier of service including ESPN, CNN, C-SPAN, MTV, and Nickelodeon, but only to ensure that rates were not significantly excessive. This was a clear signal to cable operators that they could commit petty, but not grand larceny in structuring their rates. This year, Senators DANFORTH, HOLLINGS, and INOUYE have incorporated my and Senator METZENBAUM's proposed amendment which makes clear that cable operators cannot charge unreasonable rates for these services.

I am also pleased that the sponsors of this bill have incorporated my proposed amendment from last year to require the FCC to set minimum nationwide customer service standards, but to allow the States and franchising authorities to adopt tougher standards as their local needs dictate.

I believe this bill can and should be stronger. I will shortly be introducing, along with my friend Congressman

CHRIS SHAYS, the Cable Consumer Protection Act of 1991, which I believe better protects consumers, and I intend to work to strengthen the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1991 as it works its way through Congress. Nevertheless, I also believe it is important to send a strong signal to the cable industry, and its friends and patrons in the administration, that the interests of the American consumer will not be denied this year.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I share Senator DANFORTH'S concerns about the state of the cable industry in this country. The core of this issue lies in the plight of consumers who have experienced skyrocketing rates and poor cable service since the deregulation of the industry under the 1984 Cable Act. The cable industry was deregulated with the expectation that competition would flourish as other technologies entered into the field. The competition intended to benefit consumers has not materialized, and the public has been left to deal with a monopoly. The competitive force operating now is a take it or leave it philosophy by which the cable industry is exploiting a captive market.

There is evidence of this nationwide as cable rates have increased dramatically. Increases in basic cable rates have been reported to be an average of 29 percent. In Tucson, AZ, for example, rates have risen an average of more than 68 percent since deregulation took effect in 1986, and over 120 percent since passage of the 1984 Cable Act. Rates in the city of Mesa, AZ, have risen over 73 percent.

The consumer is the ultimate victim of these anticompetitive activities. Would-be operators and competitors from other industries are locked out of the cable marketplace by the industry's abuse of concentrated ownership. In doing this, the cable industry is actively stifling competition through unfair business practices. The result is limiting buying power for the consumer who suffers the impact of rising subscription costs, limited program choices, and poor service. As it stands now, consumers have two choices: they can either subscribe to this kind of service, which consumers have come to rely on more and more, or, as in the case of viewers in rural areas, be totally isolated from information and entertainment services.

These concerns prompted me to cosponsor S. 1880, the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act of 1989 in the 101st Congress. Like S. 1880, the legislation introduced by Senator DANFORTH today offers swift solutions to stemming the abuses by the industry. I commend Senator DANFORTH for his unwavering commitment to bringing this issue to the forefront.

While I have been a strong supporter of this initiative in the past, I am encouraged by a recent proposed rulemaking by the Federal Communications Commission [FCC] which establishes a threshold standard for effective competition. I am awaiting further developments in the rulemaking process before determining whether or not legislation requiring reregulation is the only means available to level the playing field so that other competitors might enter the market. I realize that these are difficult times for consumers who rely on cable services and feel that they have few alternatives for information and entertainment services. Nonetheless, I believe that it is important to allow the expert agency in this field an opportunity to act.

Reregulation should be the solution of last resort. Once the rulemaking outcome is known, the answer will be clear as to which alternative best assists the consumer and nurtures a healthy marketplace from which he or she can choose. The cable industry is on notice that the Senate is able and willing to act, and that reregulation of the industry is a very real possibility. If the FCC is unable to provide the solution to this problem, I, for one, am prepared, as I have been in the past, to support legislation to require reregulation of the cable industry, and to actively promote its passage.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 13. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude from gross income the gain on certain sales of land subject to ground leases; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX TREATMENT OF LAND SUBJECT TO GROUND LEASES

• Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude from gross income, profits on lease fee conversions of residential properties. This exemption, available until 1995, would provide an incentive for landowners to sell their fee simple interests to those persons currently leasing the land. It specifically addresses the situation involving condominium and co-op owners who are currently leasing the land on which their buildings or houses are situated.

This bill would increase the chances of residential and condominium owners, who currently lease their land, to become homeowners in the true sense of the word by purchasing the land on which they live.

The impact of this bill would be tremendous. In Hawaii, an estimated 70,000 people would be affected by this legislation. Much of the land in Hawaii is owned by a few large estates. Allowing these estates to sell some of their fee simple interests would benefit the State and its residents by increasing the number of landowners and thereby redistributing the wealth.

The large landholding estates in Hawaii would welcome this legislation as an opportunity to dispose of some of their land. The current system addresses the goal of broadening the number of landowners by mandatory conversions. This is a costly procedure requiring government condemnation of the land as part of the transfer. This bill would create an incentive for voluntary lease fee conversions. This would effectively remove the need for the government's involvement in this process.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my bill be placed in the RECORD following this statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 13

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to items specifically excluded from gross income) is amended by redesignating section 136 as section 137 and by inserting after section 135 the following new section:

"SEC. 136. GAIN ON CERTAIN LAND SUBJECT TO GROUND LEASE.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Gross income shall not include any gain on a qualified sale of land.

"(b) QUALIFIED SALE.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified sale' means any sale or exchange of land if—

"(1) such land was subject to a ground lease on the date of the enactment of this section and at all times thereafter before the date of such sale or exchange,

"(2) such sale or exchange is to the lessee under such ground lease,

"(3) the only buildings on such land are residential buildings (or appurtenant structures), and

"(4) such sale or exchange is on or before December 31, 1995.

"(c) RESIDENTIAL BUILDING.—For purposes of this section, the term 'residential building' means—

"(1) any single-family house, and

"(2) any building containing 2 or more dwelling units (as defined in section 167(k)(3)(C)) if 80 percent or more of such building (other than common areas) consists of dwelling units (as so defined)."

(b) The table of sections of part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such code is amended by striking the item relating to section 136 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 136. Gain on certain sales of land subject to ground lease.

"Sec. 137. Cross references to other Acts."

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to sales or exchanges after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.•

By Mr. SARBANES (for himself, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. WARNER, and Mr. ROBB):

S. 14. A bill to assist in restoration of the Chesapeake Bay, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

CHESAPEAKE BAY RESTORATION ACT

• Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, today I am introducing S. 14, legislation to reauthorize and enhance the Chesapeake Bay Program. This bill, entitled the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1991, not only continues the tremendously successful program authorized in the 1987 Water Quality Act, but expands and strengthens cooperative efforts to restore and protect the Chesapeake Bay.

This bill was first introduced near the end of the 101st Congress in preparation for early consideration this year. I am pleased that my colleagues from Maryland and Virginia—Senators MIKULSKI, WARNER, and ROBB—are joining me today in reintroducing this important legislation and I want to note that a companion measure will be introduced in the House.

I spoke last October on the need for this legislation and I want to review the most compelling reasons today. First, the existing authorization for the Chesapeake Bay Program expired along with other Water Quality Act programs last September, at the end of fiscal year 1990. The program is being continued through authorities and funding in the appropriations process. However, there is still much more work that needs to be done on the bay and the need for a new authorization is perhaps greater now than ever before. Second, with the signing of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement in December 1987, the bay area jurisdictions and the Federal Government committed to an ambitious program to achieve improved water quality and living resources productivity. The bay area States have moved swiftly to enact legislation and dedicate funding to meet their commitments under the agreement. In order to assure effective implementation of the pact at the Federal level, it is essential that new authorities and resources be provided.

The Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act provides those much-needed resources. It authorizes $20 million a year for the next 4 years for the Chesapeake Bay Program—an increase of $7 million over the previously authorized level. It establishes a new initiative to address key issues such as toxic pollution, the decline of the bay's living resources, and population growth and land use. In my view, it represents the third leg of the three-legged stool on which the Chesapeake Bay Program must rest. The first two legs were established in the 1987 Water Quality Act authorization—a $3 million authorization for EPA to administer the program and a $10 million authorization for grants to the bay area States which has been used primarily for nonpoint source reduction efforts. The third leg, which this legislation would authorize, is this legislation which would provide the resources that are necessary for Federal agencies to begin implementing the strategies called for under the 1987 bay agreement.

The legislation has been carefully crafted with the assistance of the bay area States, the District of Columbia, the Chesapeake Bay Commission, the Citizens Advisory Committee, the Scientific and Technical Advisory Committee, the Local Government Advisory Committee, the Alliance for the Chesapeake Bay, the Chesapeake Bay Foundation, the bay area congressional delegation, and many others. It represents a consensus of the highest priority needs as identified by the agencies and organizations responsible for implementing the strategies and programs called for under the bay agreement. It is not intended as a catchall bill which addresses every aspect of every Federal agency's participation in the bay cleanup effort. Rather, it is intended to continue and improve upon the Chesapeake Bay Program that was authorized in the 1987 Clean Water Act.

We have come a long way since the first Chesapeake Bay Agreement was signed in December 1983 initiating the cooperative Federal-State effort to clean up the bay. Over the past 7 years, remarkable progress has been made in laying the groundwork for the restoration, protection and enhancement of the bay. An interstate and Federal-State management structure is in place, including memoranda of understanding between EPA and other major Federal agencies, outlining their responsibilities for the bay program. States have adopted far-reaching initiatives and activities that are now underway. The bay area congressional delegation has worked closely together and has been successful in protecting and even increasing funding for the Federal agencies involved in the bay program. There is strong public support and a high degree of cooperation and coordination among all parties. Indeed, the Chesapeake Bay Program has been heralded as a model for other estuaries throughout the country and around the world.

There are signs that the bay is improving. Since 1985, phosphorus discharges from municipal treatment plants, industry, and nonpoint sources into the bay have been reduced by 35 percent. This is a direct result of the phosphate detergent ban now in place in each State and the District of Columbia, new sewage treatment plant construction featuring processes for advanced phosphorus removal, and the bay program's unique nonpoint source controls. Submerged aquatic vegetation [SAV], which provides critical habitat for the bay's living resources, has made a slow but steady comeback from dramatic declines in the 1960's and 1970's. This can be directly traced to improved water quality. Striped bass have also made a significant recovery from the depleted stocks of the early 1980's. This success demonstrates that management controls can make a difference in the health of the bay's resources.

Despite these great efforts, it is clear that we have a long way to go before actual improvements to the bay's water quality and living resources will be apparent. Conditions over the past few years, including medical wastes washing up on the shores near Baltimore Harbor and Annapolis, oilspills that spread thousands of gallons across the bay, the spread of MSX and other deadly oyster diseases throughout the Chesapeake, as well as the toxic chemicals and nutrients that continue to pollute the bay's surface and bottom waters underscore the difficult problems continuing to face the bay.

Addressing these serious problems will require a significant and sustained effort on the part of all participants, as well as significant financial resources. My colleagues and I are hopeful that S. 14 will be incorporated in the Clean Water Act. Enactment of the provisions in our legislation would set the course of efforts to protect and restore our national treasure over the next several years.

Mr. President, I ask that letters and statements from Governors Schaefer, Wilder, and Casey; the Chesapeake Bay Commission, and the Chesapeake Bay Foundation, in support of this legislation be included in the RECORD following my statement. I also ask that the bill be made part of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 14

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This act may be cited as the "Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS

The Congress finds that—

(1) the Chesapeake Bay is a national treasure and a resource of worldwide significance;

(2) the productivity and water quality of the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries in recent years have been diminished by pollution, excessive sedimentation, shoreline erosion, the impacts of growth and development of population in the watershed, and other factors;

(3) the Chesapeake Bay Agreement established an institutional framework, including Chesapeake Executive Council with oversight, to implement a series of goals, objectives, and commitments to protect, restore, and enhance the estuary's ecosystem;

(4) there is a need to expand and strengthen Federal support of research, monitoring, and management activities in the Bay in order to meet the goals, objectives, and commitments of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement, particularly in the areas of water quality; living resources; public information, education and participation; population growth, development, and governance;

(5) the United States Environmental Protection Agency should continue to lead a cooperative Federal initiative with the United States Army Corps of Engineers, United States Department of Agriculture, United States Department of the Interior, Department of Defense, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, United States Coast Guard, and other Federal agencies in the effort to attain the goals embodied in the Chesapeake Bay Agreement, working with State and local authorities;

(6) the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has an important role in the Bay restoration program through participation in the Bay research, monitoring, assessment, and management studies and should continue these activities;

(7) the various research and monitoring programs related to the Chesapeake Bay should be closely coordinated to achieve improved water quality and living resources productivity;

(8) public information, education, and participation are essential to foster stewardship of the Bay's resources, to help identify and prioritize the Bay-related problems of each watershed or river basin, and to formulate goals and objective for addressing these problems;

(9) there is a clear correlation between population growth and development, and environmental degradation in the Chesapeake Bay system and accurate and timely land use data is essential to plan for and manage growth and development and associated impacts on the Chesapeake Bay system and its living resources;

(10) the Federal Government has a special responsibility to ensure that its activities and programs are consistent with State and local efforts to improve the health of the Chesapeake Bay, and Federal facilities and programs must achieve the highest standards of environmental sensitivity and protection;

(11) the local government and citizens' role in the Chesapeake Bay clean-up effort is a vital component for attaining the goals of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement;

(12) the productivity, diversity, and abundance of living resources are the best ultimate measures of the Chesapeake Bay's condition and research and assessment programs directed toward monitoring and enhancing the condition of these resources should be accorded a high priority; and

(13) the fisheries of the Chesapeake Bay provide hundreds of millions of dollars in annual economic activity and thousands of related jobs for the region, and proper management of these vital fisheries resources must include consideration of both biological, environmental, and socioeconomic factors.

SEC. 3. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this Act to expand and strengthen the cooperative efforts to restore and protect the Chesapeake Bay and to achieve the goals embodied in the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

SEC. 4. MANAGEMENT OF CHESAPEAKE BAY PROGRAM.

Section 117(a) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1267) is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall continue the Chesapeake Bay Program as a member of and in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council. The Administrator shall continue to lead and coordinate Federal agency participation in the Federal program.

"(2) The Administrator shall maintain in the Environmental Protection Agency a Chesapeake Bay Liaison Office, which shall provide support to the Chesapeake Executive Council in the following areas:

"(A) providing support and coordinating Federal, State, an local efforts to improve the water quality and living resources of the Chesapeake Bay;

"(B) assisting the Bay program signatories as requested in developing and implementing specific action plans, in cooperation with appropriate Federal, State, and local authorities, to carry out the responsibilities under the Chesapeake Bay Agreement;

"(C) coordinating actions of the Environmental Protection Agency with the actions of other Federal agencies and State and local authorities in developing strategies to improve the water quality and living resources of the Bay and obtain the support of these agencies and authorities in achieving the objectives of such agreement;

"(D) collecting and making available, through publications and other appropriate means, information pertaining to the environmental quality and living resources of the Bay; and

"(E) continuing to coordinate the systemwide monitoring and data collection program to assess the impact of natural and man-induced environmental changes on the water quality, habitat, and living resources of the Bay with particular emphasis on toxic pollutants and nutrient loadings.".

SEC. 5. CHESAPEAKE BAY PROGRAM SCIENCE, RESEARCH, MONITORING, AND DATA COLLECTION.

(a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council, shall jointly implement comprehensive, coordinated science, research, monitoring, and data collection activities supporting the Chesapeake Bay Program.

(b) The Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration shall direct relevant agency programs to be conducted in such a manner as to assist the cooperative, intergovernmental Chesapeake Bay Program to meet the commitments of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement. The Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration shall—

(1) provide information about and insight into the processes that shape the Chesapeake Bay system and affect its living resources;

(2) consult with the Chesapeake Executive Council in establishing priorities for research, monitoring, modeling, other analysis and data gathering for programs that have applicability to the Chesapeake Bay system and its living resources; and

(3) consult with the Chesapeake Executive Council in assessing the abundance, health, harvest, and potential economic value of Chesapeake Bay fisheries and the socioeconomic costs and benefits of management alternatives; and

(4) establish and staff a local office for coordinating National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration-wide activities related to the goals and objectives of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

(c) The Administrators of the Environmental Protection Agency and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration shall jointly ensure that any project for which funds have been requested has undergone appropriate peer review to determine that it has acceptable scientific and technical merit.

(d) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, there is authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994.

SEC. 6. BASINWIDE TOXICS REDUCTION.

(a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council, implement the Comprehensive Basinwide Toxics Reduction Strategy which establishes basinwide goals and describes actions necessary to achieve a multijurisdictional approach for reducing toxic inputs to Chesapeake Bay and its watershed. The strategy addresses all pathways by which toxic substances can pollute the Chesapeake Bay's waters, habitats, and resources through basinwide implementation of innovative toxics reduction, prevention, and management actions.

(b) The Administrator shall undertake such research and monitoring activities as necessary to improve understanding of intermedia transfers, eventual fate and biological effects of toxics within the Bay watershed and shall develop and implement innovative toxics reductions and prevention programs.

(c) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency $2,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994.

SEC. 7. POPULATION GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT; LAND USE DATA INITIATIVE.

(a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the United States Forest Service, the United States Soil Conservation Service, the United States Geological Survey, the Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Army Corps of Engineers, shall facilitate and expedite the development of a coordinated Chesapeake Bay watershed land use data base to provide information necessary to plan for and manage growth and development and associated impacts on the Chesapeake Bay system and its living resources.

(b) The data base shall incorporate resource inventories and analyses including the use of satellite and aerial imagery in conjunction with electronic geographic information systems for data storage, retrieval, and resource capability determination in order to evaluate different land use patterns on hydrological cycles, water quality, living resources, and other environmental features, and as an aid to making sound land use management decisions.

(c) The data base shall utilize a digital format that can be easily integrated into existing and developing planning and management programs and systems at Federal, State, and local agencies and institutions, so that it can have the greatest range of potential users and uses.

(d) The data base shall be approached as a model for application to the management of watersheds to protect aquatic environments, and its technical procedures shall be developed in a manner that will allow transfer to local and State governments and other areas of the nation and the world.

(e) Emphasis should be placed on the creation, maintenance, and use of an accessible, adaptable, and affordable data base in a manner that combines the best of available technology and data with the collective experience of the local, State, and Federal Governments and other major land use data suppliers and users.

(f) For the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this section, there is authorized to be appropriated $250,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994.

SEC. 8. DEVELOPED LANDS INITIATIVE.

(a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council, shall establish a demonstration program (hereafter called the "developed lands initiative") in order to address problems associated with urban and suburban runoff. The initiative shall—

(1) identify "developed areas" consisting of subwatersheds of urban and suburban land for the purpose of water quality monitoring;

(2) establish appropriate monitoring network responsive to storm events;

(3) ensure that data collected during the monitoring effort is compatible among the participating Bay States and the District of Columbia and is designed to support management decisions necessary to balance cost and technology for the benefit of the Chesapeake Bay cleanup;

(4) ensure that data collected identifies all major sources of pollution, including atmospheric deposition and pesticides, and shall be characterized according to their contribution to a watershed; and

(5) develop management strategies to address the identified stormwater impacts.

(b) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, there is authorized to be appropriated $500,000.

SEC. 9. CHESAPEAKE BAY COMPREHENSIVE LIVING RESOURCES PROGRAM.

(a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and the Director of the Fish and Wildlife Service, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council, shall implement a comprehensive, coordinated living resources program for the Chesapeake Bay and its watershed, to meet the commitments in the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

(b) The program shall include monitoring, digital mapping, periodic assessments, development and implementation of management plans; and restoration and protection of habitats of commercially, recreationally, and ecologically valuable living resources.

(c) The program shall be designed as a national model for identifying, protecting, restoring, and managing estuarine living resources and the habitats upon which they depend.

(d) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, there is authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994.

SEC. 10. STUDY OF CHESAPEAKE BAY PROTECTION PROGRAM.

(a) Not later than January 1, 1994, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council, shall complete a study and prepare a report to the Congress which shall address at least the following issues:

(1) evaluating implementation of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement including activities of the Federal Government and State and local authorities;

(2) determining whether Federal environmental programs and other activities adequately address the priority needs identified in the Chesapeake Bay Agreement;

(3) assessing priority needs as required by the Chesapeake Bay Program management strategies and how the priorities are being met; and

(4) making recommendations for improved management of the Chesapeake Bay restoration program.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, to carry out this section, not to exceed $250,000.

SEC. 11. AUTHORIZATIONS.

(a) Section 117(d)(1) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1267(d)(1)) is amended by deleting "and 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994".

(b) Section 117(d)(2) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended by deleting "and 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994".

(c) Moneys appropriated pursuant to the authorizations under this section shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 12. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this Act the term—

(1) "Chesapeake Bay Program" means the regional, intergovernmental, cooperative effort to restore and protect the Chesapeake Bay system and its living resources. The Program is directed by the Chesapeake Executive Council in accordance with the Chesapeake Bay Agreement;

(2) "Chesapeake Bay Agreement" means the formal, voluntary agreements reached to achieve the goal of restoring and protecting the Chesapeake Bay system and its living resources. The first Agreement was signed in 1983. The second agreement was signed in 1987, by the Governors of Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, the mayor of the District of Columbia, the chairman of the tri-State Chesapeake Bay Commission, and the Administrator of the United States Environmental Protection Agency for the executive branch of the Federal Government. As used in this section, the term shall mean the existing agreements and any subsequent agreements that may be reached; and

(3) "Chesapeake Executive Council" means the signatories of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

STATEMENT ON FEDERAL CHESAPEAKE BAY LEGISLATION BY GOV. WILLIAM DONALD SCHAEFER

I want to comment Senator Sarbanes and all the Members of Congress who seized the initiative and put together this new legislation. The bill being introduced today marks the beginning of an important new chapter in the Chesapeake Bay clean up effort.

The Chesapeake Bay program has been a model for saving estuaries around the country. We have been successful in the Bay program because we never stand still; because we are never satisfied with the status quo; because we are constantly forging ahead; and because we work together in a strong federal-state partnership.

The time has come to take the next step. We must match the rhetoric about the need to clean up the Bay with the resources necessary to do the job. This legislation will give the federal government the resources needed to keep its promises.

Our efforts to restore the Bay took a giant leap forward in 1987 with the signing of the historic Chesapeake Bay Agreement. That Agreement strengthened the partnership between the Chesapeake Bay states and the federal government. It also set out ambitious goals for reducing pollution in the Bay. We have made much progress since then, but we still have a long way to go.

This legislation is the next step in our long march to restore and protect our nation's greatest estuary. The federal government took on many new responsibilities in the 1986 Bay Agreement. While the EPA and other federal government agencies have worked hard to meet those responsibilities, they need additional resources to meet their commitments.

This legislation will bring the federal contribution in line with its commitments. It will increase federal funding for many important Bay projects. It will boost federal support for our toxics clean up effort. And it pulls the federal government into our fight against pollution caused by urban and suburban runoff—which is a major problem throughout the Bay watershed.

Just last weekend we held a statewide Community Service Day in Maryland. Citizens from around the state helped pull litter and trash out of the Anacostia River, Rock Creek, and other tributaries that empty into the Bay. Citizens from throughout the Chesapeake Bay watershed want to clean up the Bay and they want to do it now.

We can all take pride in the progress we have made in cleaning up the Bay, but we must not become complacent. We must not look back on how far we have come. We must look forward at how much farther we still have to go.

So we are here today to look ahead and to open the next chapter in the Bay clean up effort. The next chapter calls for an expanded federal role in our fight to save the Chesapeake Bay. This bill will bring the federal government's contribution under the Bay Agreement in line with its commitments and improve coordination within the Bay Program. I thank Senator Sarbanes and his Congressional colleagues for launching this initiative and I urge the quick adoption of this important legislation.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Richmond, VA, October 15, 1990.

Hon. PAUL S. SARBANES,
Member, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SARBANES: As a member of the Chesapeake Executive Council and as the Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, I am committed to cleaning up the Chesapeake Bay, and I endorse the reauthorization bill you are introducing.

The Chesapeake Bay system is a regional and national resource that can be restored and protected only if we work together. The principal cooperative mechanism through which we will be able to attain the goal of a permanently healthy and productive Bay is the Chesapeake Bay Program.

Congress' dedication to the Bay has been critical in the successful evolution of this unique regional enterprise. Your support for reauthorization of the program will greatly assist the challenging process of restoration and protection.

With best wishes, I am
Very truly yours,
LAWRENCE DOUGLAS WILDER.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Harrisburg, October 16, 1990.

Hon. PAUL S. SARBANES,
Member, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SARBANES: I strongly support the proposed "Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990," to reauthorize the Chesapeake Bay Program. The proposed legislation is the product of extensive discussion and debate among all Chesapeake Bay states, including Pennsylvania.

The current federal mandate under section 117 of the Clean Water Act was enacted before the 1987 Chesapeake Bay Agreement was signed. The time has come to update that legislation and build upon the federal-state partnership we established in the Bay Agreement.

Substantial progress has been made in cleaning up the Chesapeake Bay under the existing program, but much more needs to be done. This legislation marks an important new phase in the Chesapeake Bay program. I have contacted Senator Heinz and Senator Specter to urge their support for the legislation.

Sincerely,

ROBERT P. CASEY.

CHESAPEAKE BAY FOUNDATION,
Annapolis, MD, October 12, 1990.
Hon. PAUL S. SARBANES,
U.S. Senate, Senate Dirksen Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SARBANES: I am writing to express the Chesapeake Bay Foundation's strong support for the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990. As you know, CBF feels that the leadership of the State/Federal Chesapeake Bay Program is crucial for the restoration of the Bay. This legislation is essential to ensuring the continuation and enhancement of the Bay Program's efforts.

The legislation that has been drafted represents the consensus of the Bay community, including both government and non-government organizations; as a true consensus, it is a compromise among groups with different priorities and perspectives on the Bay and its problems. I view this bill as reflecting the best judgment of all of the participants in the Bay cleanup, and I am comfortable with it as it now stands. I do not see it as legislation reflecting any one senator or representative; I hope that the entire delegations of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania will sponsor it.

I am pleased the NOAA's role in the Bay cleanup will be explicitly recognized in this legislation. The establishment of a local NOAA office for the Chesapeake Bay is a necessary part of that commitment. Our view of the appropriations in this legislation is that they belong to the Chesapeake Bay, and not to any particular Federal or State agency. The Bay Program structure appears to be adequate for ensuring the wise use of the lands.

There is a tendency to consider environmental protection a luxury that the nation cannot afford during times of fiscal austerity. The Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act is not a luxury—it is our nation's recognition that if we cannot commit ourselves to Save the Bay, we will never learn how to live on this planet without destroying it. As important as the Bay is to those of us who live near it, it is also a critical national and international model for humanity's evolution from abuse to stewardship of our land and its resources. I urge you to co-sponsor and support this bill.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM C. BAKER,
President.

CHESAPEAKE BAY COMMISSION,
Annapolis, MD, October 16, 1990.
Hon. PAUL S. SARBANES,
Senate Dirksen Office Building, Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR SARBANES: I am writing to express the Chesapeake Bay Commission's strong support for the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990. The Chesapeake Bay Commission is a tri-state legislative advisory commission created to assist the General Assemblies of Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania in addressing Chesapeake Bay-related issues which are of mutual concern to the three member states. This congressional reauthorization and enhancement of the Chesapeake Bay Program is certainly one such issue.

The federal-state partnership which has been established through the Chesapeake Bay Program has become a model for environmental management throughout the country. It is essential that this structure be maintained and enhanced. Over the past several months, our Commission staff in Annapolis have been active participants in developing a consensus of the entire Bay community concerning the future needs and direction of this important program.

We believe this legislation represents a true consensus of governmental and nongovernmental orgainzations that are integrally involved in the Chesapeake Bay restoration and protection efforts. The bill includes important new federal initiatives in the areas of living resources protection, toxics research and population growth and development. These represent major areas in which we, the states, require additional federal assistance.

This legislation is vital to the continued success of our efforts to protect this national treasure, the Chesapeake Bay. It is an issue which I believe warrants and receives the full backing of citizens throughout the Chesapeake Bay watershed. I urge you to sign on as original sponsor of this measure.

Sincerely,

KENNETH J. COLE,
Chairman.

CHESAPEAKE BAY RESTORATION ACT OF 1990—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. Short Title: Establishes the title of the bill, the "Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990."

Section 2. Findings.

Section 3. Purpose:

States that the purpose of the Act is to expand and strengthen the cooperative efforts to restore and protect the Chesapeake Bay and to achieve the goals embodied in the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

Section 4. Management of Chesapeake Bay Program:

Provides authority for EPA to continue to lead and coordinate Federal agency participation in the Chesapeake Bay Program, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council, and to maintain a Chesapeake Bay Liaison Office.

Directs the Chesapeake Bay Liaison Office to provide support and coordinate Federal, state and local efforts in developing strategies and action plans and conducting systemwide monitoring and assessment to improve the water quality and living resources of the Bay.

Section 5. Chesapeake Bay Program Science, Research, Monitoring, and Data Collection:

Directs the Administrators of EPA and NOAA to jointly implement a comprehensive, coordinated program for science, research, monitoring and data collection of the Bay and its watershed. Establishes a local office for coordinating NOAA activities in the Bay. Directs that appropriate peer review be undertaken to ensure scientific and technical merit of projects funded by this section. Authorizes $3 million annually for the activities in this section.

Section 6. Basinwide Toxics Reduction:

Authorizes $2 million annually for EPA to implement the Comprehensive Basinwide Toxics Reduction Strategy called for under the Bay Agreement, in cooperation with the Executive Council.

Section 7. Population Growth and Development:

Provides for development of a coordinated Chesapeake Bay watershed land use database, incorporating resource inventories and analyses in a digital format, to provide information necessary to plan for and manage growth and development and associated impacts on the Bay system. Authorizes $250,000 in fiscal 1991 and $500,000 annually in fiscal years 1992-4.

Section 8. Developed Lands Initiative.

Establishes a demonstration program to address problems associated with urban and suburban runoff. Directs EPA to identify areas within subwatersheds for water quality monitoring, establish a monitoring network, identify all major sources of pollution, and develop management strategies to address the identified stormwater impacts. Authorizes $500,000 for this section.

Section 9. Comprehensive Living Resources Program.

Authorizes $1 million annually to implement the comprehensive, coordinated living resources plan called for under the Bay Agreement.

Section 10. Study of Chesapeake Bay Protection Program.

Directs EPA to undertake an assessment of the Chesapeake Bay Program and evaluate implementation of the Bay Agreement. Also directs EPA to assess priority needs for the Bay and make recommendations for improved management of the program. Authorizes $250,000 for this study.

Section 11. Authorizations.

Continues the $13 million annual authorization under Section 117 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act.

Section 12. Definitions.●

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join as an original cosponsor of the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1991. This important legislation, which, among other things would reauthorize the Chesapeake Bay Program, is supported by a broad range of groups from States bordering the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. President, as we introduce this legislation, my colleagues will recall the history of our efforts to save the bay. It is worth reviewing that history at this time. Early in the eighties, research revealed that an increasing oxygen shortage had caused a decline in bay resources, including oysters, clams, and submerged aquatic vegetation. This discovery led to the signing of the first Chesapeake Bay Agreement in 1983, which was designed to meet this threat to the environment.

In subsequent years Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, and the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] have forged an enviable partnership to restore and protect the Chesapeake Bay. The commitment exhibited by officials from these entities has helped to establish a firm foundation for achieving the goal of significantly improving the management of the bay's resources.

On December 15, 1987, the Chesapeake Bay Executive Council, comprised of representatives from Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, and EPA, signed the 1987 Chesapeake Bay Agreement. This agreement, which set specific goals and timetables for the bay's restoration, was designed to reverse the decline that has imperiled the Chesapeake Bay's status as a major source of jobs, seafood, recreation, and regional culture.

The agreement set an important goal requiring a 40-percent reduction in nitrogen and phosphorous by the year 2000. According to reports, the nutrient reduction plan is being implemented and progress is being made in improving the bay's management.

Despite all of the progress that has been made to date, it is clear that more action is required. The Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1991 represents a crucial step in that process.

In particular, the bill would provide much-needed authority for EPA to continue to lead and coordinate Federal agency participation in the Chesapeake Bay Program, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council. The bill also directs the Administrators of EPA and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] together to implement a comprehensive, coordinated program for science research, monitoring and data collection of the bay and its watershed. In addition, the bill would authorize funds to implement the comprehensive basinwide toxics reduction strategy called for under the bay agreement, provide for development of a coordinated Chesapeake Bay watershed land use data base, and establish a demonstration program to address problems associated with urban and suburban runoff. Finally, EPA is directed to undertake an assessment of the Chesapeake Bay Program and evalute implementation of the bay agreement.

Mr. President, the legislation introduced today represents the consensus of many individuals who are knowledgeable about the methods of preserving the bay as a precious national resource: those in the bay community, Federal, State and local governments, and many others, including nongovernment organizations. As is the case with any consensus agreement, this bill serves to reflect the best judgment of all participants.

The Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia has strongly endorsed the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act. Virginia State officials were active participants in developing this proposal, and they tell me that they are pleased with the result.

Mr. President, I commend my Senate colleagues from Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania for their work on this bill. In particular, I applaud the work of my colleague from Maryland, Senator Sarbanes, for his leadership in working with officials from all of the bay States to bring this legislation to this point. I look forward to working with the members of these delegations to enact this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. BIDEN (for himself, Mr. Cohen, Mr. DeConcini, Mr. Dodd, Mr. Inouye, Mr. Coats, Mr. Simon, Mr. Lieberman, Mr. Exon, Mr. Sarbanes, Mr. Reid, Mr. Harkin, Mr. Bryan, Mr. Akaka, Mr. Riegle, Mr. Pell, Mr. Adams, Mr. Packwood, Mr. Shelby, Mr. Kerry, Ms. Mikulski, Mr. Levin, Mr. Cranston, Mr. McConnell, Mr. Boren, and Mr. Rockefeller):

S. 15. A bill to combat violence and crimes against women on the streets and in homes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT OF 1991

• Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce Senate bill No. 15, the Violence Against Women Act of 1991, the first comprehensive legislation to address the growing problem of violent crime confronting American women. This bill was first introduced during the 101st Congress and was unanimously approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Today, 25 of my colleagues join me as original cosponsors of this important legislation.

Women are the victims of a growing crime epidemic in this country. The enormity of the problem is clear: During her lifetime, one in five women will be raped, and three out of four women will be the victim of some other violent crime. Last year, more women were battered by their spouses than were married.

The need for action is urgent:

From 1974 until 1987, the rate of assaults against young women skyrocketed by close to 50 percent.

In the first 6 months of 1990 alone, the rate of rapes reported to the FBI rose 10 percent—faster than any other increase in the decade.

That makes rape one of the fastest growing crimes in the country.

This is a national outrage. The Nation's criminal justice system is not only unwilling, but also unprepared, to deal with this spiraling gender gap in crime. If increasing violence against women amounts to a national outrage, then our efforts to date to solve that growing problem should count as a national shame.

Today, it is easier to convict a car thief than a rapist; authorities are more likely to arrest a man for parking tickets than for beating his wife; and lawyers still put victims of vicious assaults on the stand to ask what clothes they were wearing at the time of the attack.

There are still counties in this country where 200 rape complaints are ignored by prosecutors; courts where victims are blamed for their own attacks; and cities where authorities refuse to arrest attackers because the bleeding victim was beaten by her spouse.

The Violence Against Women Act is the first attempt by the Congress to address both the outrage and the shame—to make violence against women one of our top law enforcement priorities.

I first introduced this legislation shortly before the end of the last Congress. Frankly, I never anticipated, nor could I have imagined, the kind of overwhelming support and interest that it generated in the short 6 months since its original introduction in the 101st Congress.

Governors, attorneys general, mayors, and police chiefs have all offered their support;

A task force of over 150 groups has come together to offer suggestions and to focus attention on the issues;

People from every State across the country have called and written; letters of support have come from organizations, large and small, liberal and conservative; from women's groups and men's groups; from victims' advocates and professional associations; from battered women's shelters and rape crisis centers; and from far, far, too many survivors of crime.

Recently, one such survivor, who is now a prosecutor, told the Judiciary Committee that this legislation is a tremendous gift for the women of America. My response to her is this: It is not a gift—it is a necessity. And it is a necessity not only for the women of this country, but for our entire society.

Violence against women breeds violence and tragedy throughout this country:

A child is 1,500 times more likely to be abused if his mother is being abused;

Close to two-thirds of all juvenile boys who murder, murder their mother's attackers;

One out of every five rape victims attempts suicide;

And over half of all homeless women and children are on the street because they are fleeing violence in the home.

No American—male or female—can continue to tolerate the level of violence directed against the women of this country. Violence against women must be one of our Nation's highest priorities and it must be one of the Senate's highest priorities during the 102d Congress.

I have reason to hope that this will be one of the Senate's highest priorities. Indeed, I am pleased to note that today, the distinguished Republican leader, Senator Dole, is also introducing new legislation that targets violence against women. While I may disagree with some of his proposed solutions—and believe that his proposal is lacking some important elements—I know that we share the same overall goal. Together, I know we can secure swift passage of a bill that will benefit the women of this country.

The bill I introduce today, with the support of 25 of my colleagues, attacks violence against women in all its forms.

It addresses all violent crime against women, not just rape and domestic violence. It attacks the problems at all levels—from our streets to our homes, from squad cars to courtrooms, from schoolrooms to hospitals.

And it attacks the problem by offering a comprehensive solution: It makes violent crime against women a major law enforcement priority and, at the same time, it takes aim at the kind of attitudes that nurture violence; it creates new offenses and raises penalties and, at the same time, it provides new legal protections and desperately needed help to crime survivors.

Let me explain a few of the bill's key provisions in detail. The bill is divided into four main parts, best summarized by their titles: Safe Streets for Women; Safe Homes for Women; Civil Rights for Women; and Safe Campuses for Women.

TITLE I: SAFE STREETS FOR WOMEN

First, title I of the bill doubles penalties for Federal cases of rape and aggravated rape; creates new penalties for repeat sex offenders; and mandates restitution for victims of sex crimes.

Second, title I would significantly boost the number of police officers on the streets and prosecutors in courts—police and prosecutors targeting violent crimes against women. Of the $300 million authorized, $100 million will go to the hardest hit areas—areas of high intensity violence against women.

In addition to these grants, title I provides funds for more lights in parks and subway stations, authorizes new protections and services for rape victims, and makes significant changes in how Federal courts consider evidence so that irrelevant inquiries about clothing and past sexual history will be excluded.

TITLE II: SAFE HOMES FOR WOMEN

The second title of the bill addresses the crisis confronting the millions of women who are the victims of domestic violence.

Title II recognizes that we need national leadership on an issue that is indisputably of national proportion and seriousness: More than 1 million women a year need medical help because of injuries from battering.

Title II proposes that the Federal Government, for the first time, acknowledge its role in fighting crimes in the home. It creates the first Federal laws barring spouse abuse: For example, the bill declares that it is a Federal crime if an abuser follows his spouse across State lines and continues abuse or violates a stay-away order. And the bill protects women who flee their abusers by making protective court orders issued by one State valid in the 49 others. That way women won't lose protection if they happen to cross a State line.

Title II contains other provisions as well: It triples funding to shelter the abused; requires States to look at new legal protections; encourages States to increase arrest and prosecution rates; and, finally, incorporating provisions drafted by Senator COATS, it revamps existing laws and authorizes a national media campaign against spouse abuse.

TITLE III: CIVIL RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

The third title of the bill recognizes that violence against women is not only a question of criminal justice, but also of equal justice. It takes a dramatic step forward by defining gender-motivated crimes as bias or hate crimes and declaring, for the first time, that such crimes violate citizens' civil rights.

This society has long condemned, in the harshest of terms, hate beatings of blacks, Asians, or Hispanics. When the victim has been singled out because of his race or religion or the color of his skin, society condemns not only the crime but also the intentional deprivation of the survivor's civil rights.

This bill extends the same protection to the women of America. Crimes committed because of gender are not simply random acts of violence. Ninety-seven percent of all sex assaults in this country are committed against women. We all know this; indeed, we assume it; but we ignore the implications. Crimes committed because of gender should be condemned in the same terms as crimes committed because of race or religion—in terms as strong as this society can possibly muster—as violent deprivations of civil rights.

TITLE IV: SAFE CAMPUSES FOR WOMEN

The fourth title of this bill recognizes that young women are peculiarly at risk. Violence on our college campuses poses a special and growing problem: More college-age women will be raped this school year than will be struck by any other major crime.

This title addresses that problem by creating the first Federal program for college rape education and prevention, encouraging campuses across the Nation to inform their students of their rights, provide peer-to-peer counseling, and generally increase campus awareness of the dangers of rape and, in particular, acquaintance rape.

Finally, a fifth title, authored by Senator SIMON, creates a new program for educating judges about domestic violence and sexual assault.

Last year, the Judiciary Committee unanimously approved all of the provisions I have just explained. However, because of the pressures of other legislation, the bill was not brought to the floor for a vote.

Since the end of last Congress, I have continued to work to improve the legislation and, in response to comments from other Senators and interested groups, I have added three new provisions:

A new program calling for the education of young persons about domestic violence;

New protections for victims fleeing from abuse that insure the confidentiality of their whereabouts; and

An expanded campus rape program that requires colleges to prohibit and report all forms of sexual assault on-campus.

I will not take any further time to describe the contents of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that a summary and the complete text of the legislation appear in the RECORD following my remarks.

Let me close by urging my colleagues to join me in supporting this desperately needed legislation. Already, 25 Senators have indicated their support as original cosponsors. I hope that a significant number of others will be added so that we can ensure swift consideration of this legislation by the full Senate.

Let us not wait another year in silence, while rape rates skyrocket, while assault rates climb steadily for women but drop for men, and while more women are out on the streets because their only other choice is to suffer violence in their own homes.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TITLE I—SAFE STREETS FOR WOMEN

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Safe Streets for Women Act of 1991".

Subtitle A—Federal Penalties for Sex Crimes

SEC. 111. REPEAT OFFENDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2247. Repeat offenders

"Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 28, United States Code, the United States Sentencing Commission shall promulgate guidelines or amend existing guidelines to provide that any person who commits a violation of this chapter, after one or more prior convictions for an offense punishable under this chapter, or after one or more prior convictions under the laws of any State or foreign country relating to aggravated sexual abuse, sexual abuse, or abusive sexual contact, is punishable by a term of imprisonment up to twice that otherwise provided in the guidelines, or up to twice the fine authorized in the guidelines, or both.".

(b) TABLE OF SECTIONS.—The table of sections for chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"2247. Repeat offenders.".

SEC. 112. FEDERAL PENALTIES.

(a) RAPE AND AGGRAVATED RAPE.—Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 28, United States Code, the United States Sentencing Commission shall amend its sentencing guidelines to provide that a defendant convicted of aggravated rape under section 2241 of title 18, United States Code, or rape under section 2242 of title 18, United States Code, shall be assigned a base offense level under chapter 2 of the sentencing guidelines that is at least 4 levels greater than the base offense level applicable to such offenses under the guidelines in effect on November 1, 1990, or otherwise shall amend the guidelines applicable to such offenses so as to achieve a comparable minimum guideline sentence. In amending such guidelines, the Sentencing Commission shall review the appropriateness of existing specific offense characteristics or other adjustments applicable to such offenses, and make such changes as it deems appropriate, taking into account the severity of rape offenses, with or without aggravating factors; the unique nature and duration of the mental injuries inflicted on the victims of such offenses; and any other relevant factors.

(b) EFFECT OF AMENDMENT.—If the sentencing guidelines are amended after the effective date of this section, the Sentencing Commission shall implement the instructions set forth in subsection (a) so as to achieve a comparable result.

(b) STATUTORY RAPE.—

(1) Section 2243(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "5 years" and inserting "10 years".

(2) Section 2243(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "one year," and inserting "two years,".

(3) Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 28, United States Code, the United States Sentencing Commission shall promulgate guidelines or amend existing guidelines to incorporate the increase in maximum penalties provided by this section for sections 2243(a) and 2243(b) of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 113. MANDATORY RESTITUTION FOR SEX CRIMES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 2248. Mandatory restitution

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the terms of section 3663 of this title, and in addition to any other civil or criminal penalty authorized by law, the court shall order restitution for any offense under this chapter.

"(b) SCOPE AND NATURE OF ORDER.—(1) The order of restitution under this section shall direct that—

"(A) the defendant pay to the victim the full amount of the victim's losses as determined by the court, pursuant to paragraph (3); and

"(B) the United States Attorney enforces the restitution order by all available and reasonable means.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'full amount of the victim's losses' includes any costs incurred by the victim for—

"(A) medical services relating to physical, psychiatric, or psychological care;

"(B) physical and occupational therapy or rehabilitation;

"(C) lost income;

"(D) attorneys' fees; and

"(E) any other losses suffered by the victim as a proximate result of the offense.

"(3) Restitution orders under this section are mandatory. A court may not decline to issue an order under this section because of—

"(A) the economic circumstances of the defendant; or

"(B) the fact that a victim has, or is entitled to, receive compensation for his or her injuries from the proceeds of insurance or any other source.

"(4)(A) Notwithstanding the terms of paragraph (3), the court may take into account the economic circumstances of the defendant in determining the manner in which and the schedule according to which the restitution is to be paid.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'economic circumstances' includes—

"(i) the financial resources and other assets of the defendant;

"(ii) projected earnings, earning capacity, and other income of the defendant; and

"(iii) any financial obligations of the defendant, including obligations to dependents.

"(C) An order under this section may direct the defendant to make a single lump-sum payment or partial payments at specified intervals. The order shall also provide that the defendant's restitutionary obligation takes priority over any criminal fine ordered.

"(D) In the event that the victim has recovered for any amount of loss through the proceeds of insurance or any other source, the order of restitution shall provide that restitution be paid to the person who provided the compensation, but that restitution shall be paid to the victim before any restitution is paid to any other provider of compensation.

"(5) Any amount paid to a victim under this section shall be set off against any amount later recovered as compensatory damages by the victim from the defendant in—

"(A) any Federal civil proceeding; and

"(B) any State civil proceeding, to the extent provided by the law of the State.

"(c) PROOF OF CLAIM.—(1) Within 60 days after conviction and, in any event, no later than 10 days prior to sentencing, the United States Attorney (or his delegee), after consulting with the victim, shall prepare and file an affidavit with the court listing the amounts subject to restitution under this section. The affidavit shall be signed by the United States Attorney (or his delegee) and the victim. Should the victim object to any of the information included in the affidavit, the United States Attorney (or his delegee) shall advise the victim that the victim may file a separate affidavit.

"(2) If no objection is raised by the defendant, the amounts attested to in the affidavit filed pursuant to subsection (1) shall be entered in the court's restitution order. If objection is raised, the court may require the victim or the United States Attorney (or his delegee) to submit further affidavits or other supporting documents, demonstrating the victim's losses.

"(3) If the court concludes, after reviewing the supporting documentation and considering the defendant's objections, that there is a substantial reason for doubting the authenticity or veracity of the records submitted, the court may require additional documentation or hear testimony on those questions. Any records filed, or testimony heard, pursuant to this section, shall be in camera in the judge's chambers. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, this section does not entitle the defendant to discovery of the contents of, or matters related to, any supporting documentation, including medical, psychological, or psychiatric records.

"(4) In the event that the victim's losses are not ascertainable 10 days prior to sentencing as provided in subsection (c)(1), the United States Attorney (or his delegee) shall so inform the court, and the court shall set a date for the final determination of the victim's losses, not to exceed 90 days after sentencing. If the victim subsequently discovers further losses, the victim shall have 60 days after discovery of those losses in which to petition the court for an amended restitution order. Such order may be granted only upon a showing of good cause for the failure to include such losses in the initial claim for restitutionary relief.

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'victim' includes any person who has suffered direct physical, emotional, or pecuniary harm as a result of a commission of a crime under this chapter, including, in the case of a victim who is under 18 years of age, incompetent, incapacitated, or deceased, the legal guardian of the victim or representative of the victim's estate, another family member, or any other person appointed as suitable by the court: Provided, That in no event shall the defendant be named as such representative or guardian.".

(b) TABLE OF SECTIONS.—The table of sections for chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"2248. Mandatory restitution.".

Subtitle B—Law Enforcement and Prosecution Grants To Reduce Violent Crimes Against Women

SEC. 121. GRANTS TO COMBAT VIOLENT CRIMES AGAINST WOMEN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3711 et seq.) is amended by—

(1) redesignating part N as part O;

(2) redesignating section 1401 as section 1501; and

(3) adding after part M the following:

"PART N—GRANTS TO COMBAT VIOLENT CRIMES AGAINST WOMEN

"SEC. 1401. PURPOSE OF THE PROGRAM AND GRANTS.

"(a) GENERAL PROGRAM PURPOSES.— The purpose of this part is to assist States, Indian tribes, cities, and other localities to develop effective law enforcement and prosecution strategies to combat violent crimes against women and, in particular, to focus efforts on those areas with the highest rates of violent crime against women.

"(b) PURPOSES FOR WHICH GRANTS MAY BE USED.—Grants under this part shall provide additional personnel, training, technical assistance, data collection and other equipment for the more widespread apprehension, prosecution, and adjudication of persons committing violent crimes against women and specifically, for the purposes of—

"(1) training law enforcement officers and prosecutors to more effectively identify and respond to violent crimes against women, including the crimes of sexual assault and domestic violence;

"(2) developing, training, or expanding units of law enforcement officers and prosecutors specifically targeting violent crimes against women, including the crimes of sexual assault and domestic violence;

"(3) developing and implementing police and prosecution policies, protocols, or orders specifically devoted to identifying and responding to violent crimes against women, including the crimes of sexual assault and domestic violence;

"(4) developing, installing, or expanding data collection systems, including computerized systems, linking police, prosecutors, and courts or for the purpose of identifying and tracking arrests, prosecutions, and convictions for the crimes of sexual assault and domestic violence; and

"(5) developing, enlarging, or strengthening victim services programs, including sexual assault and domestic violence programs, to increase reporting and reduce attrition rates for cases involving violent crimes against women, including the crimes of sexual assault and domestic violence.

"(c) GRANTS FOR MULTIPLE USES.—Grants under this part must be used for at least 3 of the 5 purposes listed in subsection (b).

"Subpart 1—High Intensity Crime Area Grants

"SEC. 1411. HIGH INTENSITY GRANTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance (hereafter in this part referred to as the 'Director') shall make grants to areas of 'high intensity crime' against women.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this part, a 'high intensity crime area' means an area with one of the 40 highest rates of violent crime against women, as determined by the Bureau of Justice Statistics pursuant to section 1412.

"SEC. 1412. HIGH INTENSITY GRANT APPLICATION.

"(a) COMPUTATION.—Within 45 days after the date of enactment of this part, the Bureau of Justice Statistics shall compile a list of the 40 areas with the highest rates of violent crime against women based on the combined female victimization rate per population for assault, sexual assault (including, but not limited to, rape), murder, robbery, and kidnapping.

"(b) USE OF DATA.—In calculating the combined female victimization rate required by subsection (a), the Bureau of Justice Statistics may rely on—

"(1) existing data collected by States, municipalities, Indian reservations or statistical metropolitan areas showing the number of police reports of the crimes listed in subsection (a); and

"(2) existing data collected by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, including data from those governmental entities already complying with the National Incident Based Reporting System, showing the number of police reports of crimes listed in subsection (a).

"(c) PUBLICATION.—After compiling the list set forth in subsection (a), the Bureau of Justice Statistics shall convey it to the Director who shall publish it in the Federal Register.

"(d) QUALIFICATION.—Upon satisfying the terms of subsection (e), any high intensity crime area shall be qualified for a grant under this subpart upon application by the chief executive officer of the governmental entities responsible for law enforcement and prosecution of criminal offenses within the area and certification that—

"(1) the funds shall be used to reduce the rate of violent crimes against women and for at least 3 of the purposes outlined in section 1401(b);

"(2) grantees and subgrantees shall develop a plan for implementation, and otherwise consult and coordinate program grants, with nongovernmental nonprofit victim services programs; and

"(3) at least 25 percent of the amount granted shall be allocated to each of the following three areas: prosecution, law enforcement, and victim services.

"(e) APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS.—The application requirements provided in section 513 of this title shall apply to grants made under this subpart. In addition, each application must provide the certifications required by subsection (d) including documentation from nonprofit non-governmental victim services programs showing their participation in developing the plan required by subsection (d)(2). Applications shall—

"(1) include documentation from the prosecution, law enforcement, and victim services programs to be assisted showing—

"(A) need for the grant funds;

"(B) intended use of the grant funds; and

"(C) expected results from the use of grant funds; and

"(2) proof of compliance with the requirements for the payment of forensic medical exams provided in section 162 of this title.

"(f) DISBURSEMENT.—

"(1) No later than 60 days after the receipt of an application under this subpart, the Director shall either disburse the appropriate sums provided for under this subpart or shall inform the applicant why the application does not conform to the terms of section 513 of this title or to the requirements of this section.

"(2) In disbursing monies under this subpart, the Director shall ensure, to the extent practicable, that grantees—

"(A) equitably distribute funds on a geographic basis;

"(B) determine the amount of subgrants based on the population to be served; and

"(C) give priority to areas with the greatest showing of need.

"(g) GRANTEE REPORTING.—Upon completion of the grant period under this subpart, the grantee shall file a performance report with the Director explaining the activities carried out together with an assessment of the effectiveness of those activities in achieving the purposes of this part. The Director shall suspend funding for an approved application if an applicant fails to submit an annual performance report.

"Subpart 2—Other Grants to States to Combat Violent Crimes Against Women

"SEC. 1421. GENERAL GRANTS TO STATES.

"(a) GENERAL GRANTS.—The Director is authorized to make grants to States, for use by States, units of local government in the States, and nonprofit nongovernmental victim services programs in the States, for the purposes outlined in section 1401(b), and to reduce the rate of violent crimes against women.

"(b) AMOUNTS.—From amounts appropriated, the amount of grants under subsection (a) shall be—

"(1) $500,000 to each State: and

"(2) that portion of the then remaining available money to each State that results from a distribution among the States on the basis of each State's population in relation to the population of all States.

"(c) QUALIFICATION.—Upon satisfying the terms of subsection (d), any State shall be qualified for funds provided under this part upon certification that—

"(1) the funds shall be used to reduce the rate of violent crimes against women and for at least 3 of the purposes outlined in section 1401(b);

"(2) grantees and subgrantees shall develop a plan for implementation, and otherwise consult and coordinate, with nonprofit nongovernmental victim services programs, including sexual assault and domestic violence victim services programs;

"(3) at least 25 percent of the amount granted shall be allocated to each of the following three areas: prosecution, law enforcement, and victim services.

"(d) APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS.—The application requirements provided in section 513 of this title shall apply to grants made under this subpart. In addition, each application shall include the certifications of qualification required by subsection (c) including documentation from nonprofit nongovernmental victim services programs showing their participation in developing the plan required by subsection (c)(2). Applications shall—

"(1) include documentation from the prosecution, law enforcement, and victim services programs to be assisted showing—

"(A) need for the grant funds;

"(B) intended use of the grant funds; and

"(C) expected results from the use of grant funds; and

"(2) proof of compliance with the requirements for the payment of forensic medical exams provided in section 162 of this title.

"(e) DISBURSEMENT.—(1) No late than 60 days after the receipt of an application under this subpart, the Director shall either disburse the appropriate sums provided for under this subpart or shall inform the applicant why the application does not conform to the terms of section 513 of this title or to the requirements of this section.

"(2) In disbursing monies under this subpart, the Director shall issue regulations to ensure that States will—

"(A) equitably distribute monies on a geographic basis including nonurban and rural areas, and giving priority to localities with populations under 200,000;

"(B) determine the amount of subgrants based on the population to be served; and

"(C) give priority to areas with the greatest showing of need.

"(f) GRANTEE REPORTING.—Upon completion of the grant period under this subpart, the State grantee shall file a performance report with the Director explaining the activities carried out together with an assessment of the effectiveness of those activities in achieving the purposes of this subpart. The Director shall suspend funding for an approved application if an applicant fails to submit an annual performance report.

"SEC. 1422. GENERAL GRANTS TO TRIBES.

"(a) GENERAL GRANTS.—The Director is authorized to make grants to Indian tribes, for use by tribes, tribal organizations or nonprofit nongovernmental victim services programs on Indian reservations, for the purposes outlined in section 1401(b), and to reduce the rate of violent crimes against women in Indian country.

"(b) AMOUNTS.—From amounts appropriated, the amount of grants under subsection (a) shall be awarded on a competitive basis to tribes, with minimum grants of $35,000 and maximum grants of $300,000.

"(c) QUALIFICATION.—Upon satisfying the terms of subsection (d), any tribe shall be qualified for funds provided under this part upon certification that—

"(1) the funds shall be used to reduce the rate of violent crimes against women and for a least 3 of the purposes outlined in section 1401(b); and

"(2) at least 25 percent of the grant funds shall be allocated to each of the following three areas: prosecution, law enforcement, and victim services.

"(d) APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS.—(1) Applications shall be made directly to the Director and shall contain a description of the tribes' law enforcement responsibilities for the Indian country described in the application and a description of the tribes' system of courts, including whether the tribal government operates courts of Indian offenses as defined in 25 U.S.C. 1301 or CFR courts under 25 CFR 11 et seq.

"(2) Applications shall be in such form as the Director may prescribe and shall specify the nature of the program proposed by the applicant tribe, the data and information on which the program is based, and the extent to which the program plans to use or incorporate existing services available in the Indian country where the grant will be used.

"(3) The term of any grant shall be for a minimum of 3 years.

"(e) GRANTEE REPORTING.—At the end of the first 12 months of the grant period and at the end of each year thereafter, the Indian tribal granted shall file a performance report with the Director explaining the activities carried out together with an assessment of the effectiveness of those activities in acheiving the purposes of this subpart. The Director shall suspend funding for an approved application if an applicant fails to submit an annual performance report.

"(f) DEFINITIONS.—(1) The term 'Indian tribe' means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community, including any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation (as defined in, or established pursuant to, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1601, et seq.)), which is recognized as eligible for the special services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

"(2) The term 'Indian country' has the meaning given to such term by section 1151 of title 18, United States Code.

"Subpart 3—General Terms and Conditions

"SEC. 1431. GENERAL DEFINITIONS.

"As used in this part—

"(1) the term 'victim services program' means any public or private nonprofit program that assists victims, including (A) nongovernmental nonprofit organizations such as rape crisis centers or battered women's shelters, including nonprofit nongovernmental organizations assisting victims through the legal process and (B) victim/witness programs within governmental entities;

"(2) the term 'sexual assault' includes not only assaults committed by offenders who are strangers to the victim but also assaults committed by offenders who are known or related by blood or marriage to the victim; and

"(3) the term 'domestic violence' includes felony and misdemeanor offenses committed by a current or former spouse of the victim, a person with whom the victim shares a child in common, a person who is cohabitating with or has cohabitated with the victim as a spouse, or any other person similarly situated to a spouse who is protected under the domestic or family violence laws of the jurisdiction receiving grant monies.

"SEC. 1432. GENERAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.

"(a) NONMONETARY ASSISTANCE.—In addition to the assistance provided under subparts 1 or 2, the Director may direct any Federal agency, with or without reimbursement, to use its authorities and the resources granted to it under Federal law (including personnel, equipment, supplies, facilities, and managerial, technical, and advisory services) in support of State and local assistance efforts.

"(b) BUREAU REPORTING.—No later than 180 days after the end of each fiscal year for which grants are made under this part, the Director shall submit to the Judiciary Committees of the House and the Senate a report that includes, for each high intensity crime area (as provided in subpart 1) and for each State and for each grantee Indian tribe (as provided in subpart 2)—

"(1) the amount of grants made under this part;

"(2) a summary of the purposes for which those grants were provided and an evaluation of their progress; and

"(3) a copy of each grantee report filed pursuant to sections 1412(g) and 1421(f).

"(c) REGULATIONS.—No later than 45 days after the date of enactment of this part, the Director shall publish proposed regulations implementing this part. No later than 120 days after such date, the Director shall publish final regulations implementing this part.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year 1992, 1993, and 1994, $100,000,000 to carry out the purposes of subpart 1, and $190,000,000 to carry out the purposes of subpart 2, and $10,000,000 to carry out the purposes of section 1422 subpart 2.".

Subtitle C—Safety for Women in Public Transit and Public Parks

SEC. 131. GRANTS FOR CAPITAL IMPROVEMENTS TO PREVENT CRIME IN PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION.

Section 24 of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 is amended to read as follows:

"GRANTS TO PREVENT CRIME IN PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION

"SEC. 24. (a) GENERAL PURPOSE.—From funds authorized under section 21, and not to exceed $10,000,000, the Secretary shall make capital grants for the prevention of crime and to increase security in existing and future public transportation systems. None of the provisions of this Act may be construed to prohibit the financing of projects under this section where law enforcement responsibilities are vested in a local public body other than the grant applicant.

"(b) GRANTS FOR LIGHTING, CAMERA SURVEILLANCE, AND SECURITY PHONES.—

"(1) From the sums authorized for expenditure under this section for crime prevention, the Secretary is authorized to make grants and loans to States and local public bodies or agencies for the purpose of increasing the safety of public transportation by—

"(A) increasing lighting within or adjacent to public transportation systems, including bus stops, subway stations, parking lots, or garages;

"(B) increasing camera surveillance of areas within and adjacent to public transportation systems, including bus stops, subway stations, parking lots, or garages;

"(C) providing emergency phone lines to contact law enforcement or security personnel in areas within or adjacent to public transportation systems, including bus stops, subway stations, parking lots, or garages; or

"(D) any other project intended to increase the security and safety of existing or planned public transportation systems.

"(2) From the sums authorized under this section, at least 75 percent shall be expended on projects of the type described in subsection (b)(1) (A) and (B).

"(c) REPORTING.—All grants under this section are contingent upon the filing of a report with the Secretary and the Department of Justice, Office of Victims of Crime, showing crime rates in or adjacent to public transportation before, and for a 1-year period after, the capital improvement, statistics shall be broken down by type of crime, sex, race, and relationship of victim to the offencer.

"(d) INCREASED FEDERAL SHARE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Federal share under this section for each capital improvement project which enhances the safety and security of public transporation systems and which is not required by law (including any other provision of this chapter) shall be 90 percent of the net project cost of such project.

"(e) SPECIAL GRANTS FOR PROJECTS TO STUDY INCREASING SECURITY FOR WOMEN.—From the sums authorized under this section, the Secretary shall provide grants and loans for the purpose of studying ways to reduce violent crimes against women in public transit through better design or operation of public transit systems.

"(f) GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—All grants or loans provided under this section shall be subject to all the terms, conditions, requirements, and provisions applicable to grants and loans made under section 2(a).".

SEC. 132. GRANTS FOR CAPITAL IMPROVEMENTS TO PREVENT CRIME IN NATIONAL PARKS.

The Act of August 18, 1970, the National Park System Improvements in Administration Act (90 Stat. 1931; 16 U.S.C. 1a-1 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SEC. 13. NATIONAL PARK SYSTEM CRIME PREVENTION ASSISTANCE.

"(a) From the sums authorized pursuant to section 7 of the Land and Water Conservation Act of 1965, and not to exceed $10,000,000, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to provide Federal assistance to reduce the incidence of violent crime in the National Park System.

"(b) The Secretary shall direct the chief official responsible for law enforcement within the National Park Services to—

"(1) compile a list of areas within the National Park System with the highest rates of violent crime;

"(2) make recommendations concerning capital improvements, and other measures, needed within the National Park System to reduce the rates of violent crime, including the rate of sexual assault; and

"(3) publish the information required by paragraphs (1) and (2) in the Federal Register.

"(c) No later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this section, and based on the recommendations and list issued pursuant to subsection (b), the Secretary shall distribute funds throughout the National Park Service. Priority shall be given to those areas with the highest rates of sexual assault.

"(d) Funds provided under this section may be used for the following purposes—

"(1) to increase lighting within or adjacent to public parks and recreation areas;

"(2) to provide emergency phone lines to contact law enforcement or security personnel in areas within or adjacent to public parks and recreation areas;

"(3) to increase security or law enforcement personnel within or adjacent to public parks and recreation areas; and

"(4) any other project intended to increase the security and safety of public parks and recreation areas.".

SEC. 133. GRANTS FOR CAPITAL IMPROVEMENTS TO PREVENT CRIME IN PUBLIC PARKS.

Section 6 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (78 Stat. 897; 16 U.S.C. 4601-8) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) CAPITAL IMPROVEMENT AND OTHER PROJECTS TO REDUCE CRIME.—In addition to assistance for planning projects, and in addition to the projects identified in subsection (e), and from amounts appropriated, the Secretary shall provide financial assistance to the States, not to exceed $15,000,000 in total, for the following types of projects or combinations thereof:

"(1) For the purpose of making capital improvements and other measures to increase safety in urban parks and recreation areas, including funds to—

"(A) increase lighting within or adjacent to public parks and recreation areas;

"(B) provide emergency phone lines to contact law enforcement or security personnel in areas within or adjacent to public parks and recreation areas;

"(C) increase security personnel within or adjacent to public parks and recreation areas; and

"(D) any other project intended to increase the security and safety of public parks and recreation areas.

"(2) In addition to the requirements for project approval imposed by this section, eligibility for assistance under this subsection is dependent upon a showing of need. In providing funds under this subsection, the Secretary shall give priority to those projects proposed for urban parks and recreation areas with the highest rates of crime and, in particular, to urban parks and recreation areas with the highest rates of sexual assault.

"(3) Notwithstanding the terms of subsection (c), the Secretary is authorized to provide 70 percent improvement grants for projects undertaken by any State for the purposes outlined in this subsection. The remaining share of the cost shall be borne by the State.".

Subtitle D—National Commission on Violent Crime Against Women

SEC. 141. ESTABLISHMENT.

There is established a commission to be known as the National Commission on Violent Crime Against Women (hereinafter referred to as "the Commission").

SEC. 142. DUTIES OF COMMISSION.

(a) GENERAL PURPOSE OF THE COMMISSION.—The Commission shall carry out activities for the purposes of promoting a national policy on violent crime against women, and for making recommendations for how to reduce violent crime against women.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—The Commission shall perform the following functions—

(1) evaluate the adequacy of, and make recommendations regarding, current law enforcement efforts at the Federal and State levels to reduce the rate of violent crimes against women;

(2) evaluate the adequacy of, and make recommendations regarding, the responsiveness of State prosecutors and State courts to violent crimes against women;

(3) evaluate the adequacy of, and make recommendations regarding, the adequacy of current education, prevention, and protection services for women victims of violent crime;

(4) evaluate the adequacy of, and make recommendations regarding, the role of the Federal Government in reducing violent crimes against women;

(5) evaluate the adequacy of, and make recommendations regarding, national public awareness and the public dissemination of information essential to the prevention of violent crimes against women;

(6) evaluate the adequacy of, and make recommendations regarding, data collection and government statistics on the incidence and prevalence of violent crimes against women;

(7) evaluate the adequacy of, and make recommendations regarding, the adequacy of State and Federal laws on sexual assault and the need for a more uniform statutory response to sex offenses; and

(8) evaluate the adequacy of, and make recommendations regarding, the adequacy of State and Federal laws on domestic violence and the need for a more uniform statutory response to domestic violence.

SEC. 143. MEMBERSHIP.

(a) NUMBER AND APPOINTMENT.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—The Commission shall be composed of 15 members as follows:

(A) Five members shall be appointed by the President—

(i) three of whom shall be—

(I) the Attorney General;

(II) the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

(III) the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who shall be nonvoting members, except that in the case of a tie vote by the Commission, the Attorney General shall be a voting member;

(ii) two of whom shall be selected from the general public on the basis of such individuals being specially qualified to serve on the Commission by reason of their education, training, or experience; and

(iii) at least one of whom shall be selected for their experience in providing services to women victims of violent crime.

(B) Five members shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives on the joint recommendation of the Majority and Minority Leaders of the House of Representatives.

(C) Five members shall be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate on the joint recommendation of the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate.

(2) CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS.—In making appointments under subparagraphs (B) and (C) of paragraph (1), the Majority and Minority Leaders of the House of Representatives and the Senate shall duly consider the recommendations of the Chairmen and Ranking Minority Members of committees with jurisdiction over laws contained in title 18 of the United States Code.

(3) REQUIREMENTS OF APPOINTMENTS.—The Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate and the House of Representatives shall—

(A) select individuals who are specially qualified to serve on the Commission by reason of their education, training, and experience, including experience in advocacy or service organizations specializing in sexual assault and domestic violence; and

(B) engage in consultations for the purpose of ensuring that the expertise of the ten members appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate shall provide as much of a balance as possible and, to the greatest extent possible, cover the fields of law enforcement, prosecution, judicial administration, legal expertise, victim compensation boards, and victim advocacy.

(4) TERM OF MEMBERS.—Members of the Commission (other than members appointed under paragraph (1)(A)(i)) shall serve for the life of the Commission.

(5) VACANCY.—A vacancy on the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

(b) CHAIRMAN.—Not later than 15 days after the members of the Commission are appointed, such members shall select a Chairman from among the members of the Commission.

(c) QUORUM.—Seven members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may be authorized by the Commission to conduct hearings.

(d) MEETINGS.—The Commission shall hold its first meeting on a date specified by the Chairman, but such date shall not be later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act. After the initial meeting, the Commission shall meet at the call of the Chairman or a majority of its members, but shall meet at least six times.

(e) PAY.—Members of the Commission who are officers or employees or elected officials of a government entity shall receive no additional compensation by reason of their service on the Commission.

(f) PER DIEM.—While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of duties for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, at rates authorized for employees of agencies under sections 5702 and 5703 of title 5, United States Code.

(g) DEADLINE FOR APPOINTMENT.—Not later than 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the members of the Commission shall be appointed.

SEC. 144. REPORTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date on which the Commission is fully constituted under section 143, the Commission shall prepare and submit a final report to the President and to congressional committees that have jurisdiction over legislation addressing violent crimes against women, including the crimes of domestic and sexual assault.

(b) CONTENTS.—The final report submitted under paragraph (1) shall contain a detailed statement of the activities of the Commission and of the findings and conclusions of the Commission, including such recommendations for legislation and administrative action as the Commission considers appropriate.

SEC. 145. EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR AND STAFF.

(a) EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—The Commission shall have an Executive Director who shall be appointed by the Chairman, with the approval of the Commission, not later than 30 days after the Chairman is selected.

(2) COMPENSATION.—The Executive Director shall be compensated at a rate not to exceed the maximum rate of the basic pay payable under GS-18 of the General Schedule as contained in title 5, United States Code.

(b) STAFF.—With the approval of the Commission, the Executive Director may appoint and fix the compensation of such additional personnel as the Executive Director considers necessary to carry out the duties of the Commission.

(c) APPLICABILITY OF CIVIL SERVICE LAWS.—The Executive Director and the additional personnel of the Commission appointed under subsection (b) may be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

(d) CONSULTANTS.—Subject to such rules as may be prescribed by the Commission, the Executive Director may procure temporary or intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, at rates for individuals not to exceed $200 per day.

SEC. 146. POWERS OF COMMISSION.

(a) HEARINGS.—For the purpose of carrying out this subtitle, the Commission may conduct such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence, as the Commission considers appropriate. The Commission may administer oaths before the Commission.

(b) DELEGATION.—Any member or employee of the Commission may, if authorized by the Commission, take any action that the Commission is authorized to take under this subtitle.

(c) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—The Commission may secure directly from any executive department or agency such information as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out his subtitle, except to the extent that the department or agency is expressly prohibited by law from furnishing such information. On the request of the Chairman of the Commission, the head of such a department or agency shall furnish nonprohibited information to the Commission.

(d) MAILS.—The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the United States.

SEC. 147. AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1992, $500,000 to carry out the purposes of this subtitle.

SEC. 148. TERMINATION.

The Commission shall cease to exist 30 days after the date on which its final report is submitted under section 144. The President may extend the life of the Commission for a period of not to exceed one year.

Subtitle E—New Evidentiary Rules

SEC. 151. SEXUAL HISTORY IN ALL CRIMINAL CASES.

The Federal Rules of Evidence are amended by inserting after rule 412 the following:

"Rule 412A. Evidence of victim's past behavior in other criminal cases

"(a) REPUTATION AND OPINION EVIDENCE EXCLUDED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a criminal case, other than a sex offense case governed by rule 412, reputation or opinion evidence of the past sexual behavior of an alleged victim is not admissible.

"(b) ADMISSIBILITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a criminal case, other than a sex offense case governed by rule 412, evidence of a alleged victim's past sexual behavior (other than reputation and opinion evidence) may be admissible if—

"(1) the evidence is admitted in accordance with the procedures specified in subdivision (c); and

"(2) the probative value of the evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice.

"(c) PROCEDURES.—(1) If the defendant intends to offer evidence of specific instances of the alleged victim's past sexual behavior, the defendant shall make a written motion to offer such evidence not later than 15 days before the date on which the trial in which such evidence is to be offered is scheduled to begin, except that the court may allow the motion to be made at a later date, including during trial, if the court determines either that the evidence is newly discovered and could not have been obtained earlier through the exercise of due diligence or that the issue to which such evidence relates has newly arisen in the case. Any motion made under this paragraph shall be served on all other parties and on the alleged victim.

"(2) The motion described in paragraph (1) shall be accompanied by a written offer of proof. If necessary, the court shall order a hearing in chambers to determine if such evidence is admissible. At such hearing, the parties may call witnesses, including the alleged victim and offer relevant evidence. Notwithstanding subdivision (b) of rule 104, if the relevancy of the evidence which the defendant seeks to offer in the trial depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court, at the hearing in chambers or at a subsequent hearing in chambers scheduled for such purpose, shall accept evidence on the issue of whether such condition of fact is fulfilled and shall determine such issue.

"(3) If the court determines on the basis of the hearing described in paragraph (2) that the evidence that the defendant seeks to offer is relevant and that the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice such evidence shall be admissible in the trial to the extent an order made by the court specifies the evidence which may be offered and areas with respect to which the alleged victim may be examined or cross-examined. In its order, the court should consider (A) the chain of reasoning leading to its finding of relevance, and (B) why the probative value of the evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice given the potential of the evidence to humiliate and embarrass the alleged victim and to result in unfair or biased jury inferences.".

SEC. 152. SEXUAL HISTORY IN CIVIL CASES.

The Federal Rules of Evidence, as amended by section 151 of this Act, are amended by adding after rule 412A the following:

"Rule 412B. Evidence of past sexual behavior in civil cases

"(a) REPUTATION AND OPINION EVIDENCE EXCLUDED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a civil case in which a defendant is accused of actionable sexual misconduct, as defined in subdivision (d), reputation or opinion evidence of the plaintiff's past sexual behavior is not admissible.

"(b) ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a civil case in which a defendant is accused of actionable sexual misconduct, as defined in subdivision (d), evidence of a plaintiff's past sexual behavior other than reputation or opinion evidence may be admissible if—

"(1) admitted in accordance with the procedures specified in subdivision (c); and

"(2) the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice.

"(c) PROCEDURES.—(1) If the defendant intends to offer evidence of specific instances of the plaintiff's past sexual behavior, the defendant shall make a written motion to offer such evidence not later than 15 days before the date on which the trial in which such evidence is to be offered is scheduled to begin, except that the court may allow the motion to be made at a later date, including during trial, if the court determines either that the evidence is newly discovered and could not have been obtained earlier through the exercise of due diligence or that the issue to which such evidence relates has newly arisen in the case. Any motion made under this paragraph shall be served on all other parties and on the plaintiff.

"(2) The motion described in paragraph (1) shall be accompanied by a written offer of proof. If necessary, the court shall order a hearing in chambers to determine if such evidence is admissible. At such hearing, the parties may call witnesses, including the plaintiff and offer relevant evidence. Notwithstanding subdivision (b) of rule 104, if the relevancy of the evidence with the defendant seeks to offer in the trial depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court, at the hearing in chambers or at a subsequent hearing in chambers scheduled for such purpose, shall accept evidence on the issue of whether such condition of fact is fulfilled and shall determine such issue.

"(3) If the court determines on the basis of the hearing described in paragraph (2) that the evidence that the defendant seeks to offer is relevant and that the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice, such evidence shall be admissible in the trial to the extent an order made by the court specifies evidence which may be offered and areas with respect to which the plaintiff may be examined or cross-examined. In its order, the court should consider (A) the chain of reasoning leading to its finding of relevance, and (B) why the probative value of the evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice given the potential of the evidence to humiliate and embarrass the alleged victim and to result in unfair or biased jury inferences.

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this rule, a case involving a claim of actionable sexual misconduct, includes, but is not limited to, sex harassment or discrimination claims brought pursuant to title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000(e)) and gender bias claims brought pursuant to title III of the Violence Against Women Act of 1991.".

SEC. 153. AMENDMENTS TO RAPE SHIELD LAW.

Rule 412 of the Federal Rules of Evidence is amended—

(1) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(e) INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any evidentiary rulings made pursuant to this rule are subject to interlocutory appeal by the government or by the alleged victim.

"(f) RULE OF RELEVANCE AND PRIVILEGE.—If the prosecution seeks to offer evidence of prior sexual history, the provisions of this rule may be waived by the alleged victim."; and

(2) by adding at the end of subdivision (c)(3) the following: "In its order, the court should consider (A) the chain of reasoning leading to its finding of relevance; and (B) why the probative value of the evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice given the potential of the evidence to humiliate and embarrass the alleged victim and to result in unfair or biased jury inferences.".

SEC. 154. EVIDENCE OF CLOTHING.

The Federal Rules of Evidence are amended by adding after rule 412 the following:

"Rule 413. Evidence of victim's clothing as inciting violence

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a criminal case in which a person is accused of an offense under chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code, evidence of an alleged victim's clothing is not admissible to show that the alleged victim incited or invited the offense charged.".

Subtitle F—Assistance to Victims of Sexual Assault

SEC. 161. EDUCATION AND PREVENTION GRANTS TO REDUCE SEXUAL ASSAULTS AGAINST WOMEN.

Part A of title XIX of the Public Health and Health Services Act (42 U.S.C. 300w et seq.) is amended as follows:

(1) by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1910A. Use of allotments for rape prevention education

"(a) Notwithstanding the terms of section 1904(a)(1) of this title, amounts transferred by the State for use under this part may be used for rape prevention and education programs conducted by rape crisis centers or similar nongovernmental nonprofit entities, which programs may include—

"(1) educational seminars;

"(2) the operation of hotlines;

"(3) training programs for professionals:

"(4) the preparation of informational materials; and

"(5) other efforts to increase awareness of the facts about, or to help prevent, sexual assault.

"(b) States providing grant monies must assure that at least 15 percent of the monies are devoted to education programs targeted for junior high school and high school students.

"(c) There are authorized to be appropriated under this section for each fiscal year 1992, 1993, and 1994, $65,000,000 to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(d) Funds authorized under this section may only be used for providing rape prevention and education programs.

"(e) For purposes of this section, the term 'rape prevention and education' includes education and prevention efforts directed at offenses committed by offenders who are not known to the victim as well as offenders who are known to the victim.

"(f) States shall be allotted funds under this section pursuant to the terms of sections 1902 and 1903, and subject to the conditions provided in this section and sections 1904 through 1909.";

(2) striking section 1901(b); and

(3) striking section 1904(a)(1)(G).

SEC. 162. RAPE EXAM PAYMENTS.

No State or other grantee is entitled to funds under title I of the Violence Against Women Act of 1990 unless the State or other grantee incurs the full cost of forensic medical exams for victims of sexual assault. A State or other grantee does not incur the full medical cost of forensic medical exams if it chooses to reimburse the victim after the fact unless the reimbursement program waives any minimum loss or deductible requirement, provides victim reimbursement within a reasonable time (90 days), permits applications for reimbursement within one year from the date of the exam, and provides information to all subjects of forensic medical exams about how to obtain reimbursement.

TITLE II—SAFE HOMES FOR WOMEN

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Safe Homes for Women Act of 1990".

Subtitle A—Interstate Enforcement

SEC. 211. INTERSTATE ENFORCEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part 1 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 110 the following:

"Chapter 110A—Violence Against Spouses

"Sec. 2261. Traveling to commit spousal abuse.
"Sec. 2262. Interstate violation of protection orders.
"Sec. 2263. Restitution.
"Sec. 2264. Full faith and credit given to protection orders.
"Sec. 2265. Definitions for chapter.

"§ 2261. Traveling to commit spousal abuse

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Any person who travels or causes another (including the intended victim) to travel across State lines or in interstate commerce with the intent to injure a spouse or intimate partner, and who, during the course of any such travel or thereafter, does an act that injures his or her spouse or intimate partner in violation of a criminal law of the State where the injury occurs, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years but not less than 3 months, or both, in addition to any fine or term of imprisonment provided under State law.

"(b) NO STATE LAW.—If no fine or term of imprisonment is provided for under the law of the State where the injury occurs, a person violating this section shall be punished as follows:

"(1) If permanent disfigurement or life-threatening bodily injury results, by imprisonment for not more than 20 years; where serious bodily injury results, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both; where bodily injury results, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(2) If the offense is committed with intent to commit another felony, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(3) If the offense is committed with a dangerous weapon, with intent to do bodily harm, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(4) If the offense constitutes sexual abuse, as that conduct is described under chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code (without regard to whether the offense was committed in the maritime, territorial or prison jurisdiction of the United States) by fine or term of imprisonment as provided for the applicable conduct under chapter 109A.

"(c) CRIMINAL INTENT.—The criminal intent of the offender required to establish an offense under subsection (b) is the general intent to do the acts that result in injury to a spouse or intimate partner and not the specific intent to violate the law of a State.

"§ 2262. Interstate violation of protection orders

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Any person against whom a valid protection order has been entered or any agent of that person who travels or causes another (including the intended victim) to travel across State lines or in interstate commerce with the intent to injure a spouse or intimate partner and who, during the course of such travel or thereafter, commits an act that injures his or her spouse or initimate partner in violation of a valid protection order issued by a State, with the intent to injure his or her spouse or intimate partner, shall be punished as follows:

"(1) If permanent disfigurement or life-threatening bodily injury results, by imprisonment for not more than 20 years; where serious bodily injury results, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both; where bodily injury results, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(2) If the offense is committed with intent to commit another felony, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(3) If the offense is committed with a dangerous weapon, with intent to do bodily harm, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(4) If the offender has previously violated any prior protection order issued against that person for the protection of the same victim, by fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years and not less than six months, or both.

"(5) If the offense constitutes sexual abuse, as that conduct is described under chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code (without regard to whether the conduct was committed in the special maritime, territorial or prison jurisdiction of the United States) by fine or term of imprisonment as provided for the applicable offense under chapter 109A.

"(b) CRIMINAL INTENT.—The criminal intent required to establish the offense provided in subsection (a) is the general intent to do the acts which result in injury to a spouse or intimate partner and not the specific intent to violate a protection order or State law.

"§ 226.3. Interim Protections.

"In furtherance of the purposes of this chapter, and to protect against abuse of a spouse or intimate partner, any judge or magistrate before whom a criminal case under this chapter is brought, shall have the power to issue temporary order of protection for the protection of an abused spouse or intimate partner pending final adjudication of the case, upon a showing of a likelihood of danger to the abused spouse or intimate partner.

"§ 2264. Restitution

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In addition to any fine or term of imprisonment provided under this chapter, and notwithstanding the terms of section 3663 of this title, the court shall order restitution to the victim of an offense under this chapter.

"(b) SCOPE AND NATURE OF ORDER.—(1) The order of restitution under this section shall direct that—

"(A) the defendant pay to the victim the full amount of the victim's losses as determined by the court, pursuant to subsection (3); and

"(B) the United States Attorney enforce the restitution order by all available and reasonable means.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'full amount of the victim's losses' includes any costs incurred by the victim for—

"(A) medical services relating to physical, psychiatric, or psychological care;

"(B) physical and occupational therapy or rehabilitation; and

"(C) lost income;

"(D) attorneys' fees, plus any costs incurred in obtaining a civil protection order; and

"(E) any other losses suffered by the victim as a proximate result of the offense.

"(3) Restitution orders under this section are mandatory. A court may not decline to issue an order under this section because of—

"(A) the economic circumstances of the defendant; or

"(B) the fact that victim has, or is entitled to, receive compensation for his or her injuries from the proceeds of insurance.

"(4)(A) Notwithstanding the terms of paragraph (3), the court may take into account the economic circumstances of the defendant in determining the manner in which and the schedule according to which the restitution is to be paid, including—

"(i) the financial resources and other assets of the defendant;

"(ii) projected earnings, earning capacity, and other income of the defendant; and

"(iii) any financial obligations of the offender, including obligations to dependents.

"(B) An order under this section may direct the defendant to make a single lump-sum payment, or partial payments at specified intervals. The order shall provide that the defendant's restitutionary obligation takes priority over any criminal fine ordered.

"(C) In the event that the victim has recovered for any amount of loss through the proceeds of insurance or any other source, the order of restitution shall provide that restitution be paid to the person who provided the compensation, but that restitution shall be paid to the victim before any restitution is paid to any other provider of compensation.

"(5) Any amount paid to a victim under this section shall be set off against any amount later recovered as compensatory damages by the victim from the defendant in—

"(A) any Federal civil proceeding; and

"(B) any State civil proceeding, to the extent provided by the law of the State.

"(c) PROOF OF CLAIM.—(1) Within 60 days after conviction and, in any event, no later than 10 days prior to sentencing, the United States Attorney (or his delegee), after consulting with the victim, shall prepare and file an affidavit with the court listing the amounts subject to restitution under this section. The affidavit shall be signed by the United States Attorney (or his delegee) and the victim. Should the victim object to any of the information included in the affidavit, the United States Attorney (or his delegee) shall advise the victim that the victim may file a separate affidavit.

"(2) If no objection is raised by the defendant, the amounts attested to in the affidavit filed pursuant to subsection (1) shall be entered in the court's restitution order. If objection is raised, the court may require the victim or the United States Attorney (or his delegee) to submit further affidavits or other supporting documents, demonstrating the victim's losses.

"(3) If the court concludes, after reviewing the supporting documentation and considering the defendant's objections, that there is a substantial reason for doubting the authenticity or veracity of the records submitted, the court may require additional documentation or hear testimony on those questions. Any records filed, or testimony heard, pursuant to this section, shall be in camera in the judge's chambers. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, this section does not entitle the defendant to discovery of the contents of, or related to, any supporting documentation, including medical, psychological, or psychiatric records.

"(4) In the event that the victim's losses are not ascertainable 10 days prior to sentencing as provided in subsection (c)(1), the United States Attorney (or his delegee) shall so inform the court, and the court shall set a date for the final determination of the victim's losses, not to exceed 90 days after sentencing. If the victim subsequently discovers further losses, the victim shall have 60 days after discovery of those losses in which to petition the court for an amended restitution order. Such order may be granted only upon a showing of good cause for the failure to include such losses in the initial claim for restitutionary relief.

"(d) RESTITUTION AND CRIMINAL PENALTIES.—An award of restitution to the victim of an offense under this chapter shall not be a substitute for imposition of punishment under sections 2261 and 2262.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the terms 'victim' includes any person who has suffered direct physical, emotional, or pecuniary harm as a result of a commission of a crime under this chapter, including, in the case of a victim who is under 18 years of age, incompetent, incapacitated, or deceased, the legal guardian of the victim or representative of the victim's estate, another family member, or any other person appointed as suitable by the court: Provided, That in no event shall the defendant be named as such representative or guardian.

"§ 2265. Full faith and credit given to protection orders

"(a) FULL FAITH AND CREDIT.—Any protection order issued consistent with the terms of subsection (b) by the court of one State (the issuing State) shall be accorded full faith and credit by the court of another State (the enforcing State) and enforced as if it were the order of the enforcing State.

"(b) PROTECTION ORDER.—A protection order issued by a State court is consistent with the provisions of this section if—

"(1) such court has jurisdiction over the parties and matter under the law of such State; and

"(2) reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard is given to the person against whom the order is sought sufficient to protect that person's right to due process. In the case of ex parte orders, notice and opportunity to be heard must be provided within the time required by State law, and in any event within a reasonable time after the order is issued, sufficient to protect the respondent's due process rights.

"(c) CROSS OR COUNTER PETITION.—A protection order issued by a State court against one who has petitioned, filed a complaint, or otherwise filed a written pleading for protection against abuse by a spouse or intimate partner is not entitled to full faith and credit if—

"(1) no cross or counter petition, complaint, or other written pleading was filed seeking such a protection order; or

"(2) if a cross or counter petition has been filed, if the court did not make specific findings that each party was entitled to such an order.

"§ 2266. Definition for chapter

"As used in this chapter—

"(1) the term 'spouse or intimate partner' includes—

"(A) a present or former spouse, a person who shares a child in common with the abuser, and a person who cohabits or has cohabited with the abuser as a spouse; and

"(B) any other person similarly situated to a spouse, other than a child, who is protected by the domestic or family violence laws of the State in which the injury occurred or where the victim resides;

"(2) the term 'protection order' includes any injunction or other order issued for the purpose of preventing violent or threatening acts by one spouse against his or her spouse or intimate partner, including temporary and final orders issued by civil and criminal courts (other than support or child custody orders) whether obtained by filing an independent action or as a pendente lite order in another proceeding so long as any civil order was issued in response to a complaint, petition or motion of an abused spouse or intimate partner;

"(3) the term 'act that injures' includes any act, except those done in self-defense, that results in physical injury or sexual abuse; and

"(4) the term 'State' includes a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, and any Indian tribe, commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States.".

(b) TABLE OF CHAPTERS.—The table of chapters for part 1 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item for chapter 110 the following:

"110A. Violence against spouses .... 2261.".

Subtitle B—Arrest in Spousal Abuse Cases

SEC. 221. ENCOURAGING ARREST POLICIES.

The Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (42 U.S.C. 10400) is amended by adding after section 311 the following:

"SEC. 312. ENCOURAGING ARREST POLICIES.

"(a) PURPOSE.—To encourage States, Indian tribes and localities to treat spousal violence as a serious violation of criminal law, the Secretary is authorized to make grants to eligible States, Indian tribes, municipalities, or local government entities for the following purposes:

"(1) to implement pro-arrest programs and policies in police departments and to improve tracking of cases involving spousal abuse;

"(2) to centralize and coordinate police enforcement, prosecution, or judicial responsibility for, spousal abuse cases in one group or unit of police officers, prosecutors, or judges;

"(3) to educate judges in criminal and other courts about spousal abuse and to improve judicial handling of such cases.

"(b) ELIGIBILITY.—(1) Eligible grantees are those States, Indian tribes, municipalities or other local government entities that—

"(A) demonstrate, through arrest and conviction statistics, that their laws or policies have been effective in significantly increasing the number of arrests made of spouse abusers; and

"(B) certify that their laws or official policies—

"(i) mandate arrest of spouse abusers based on probable cause that violence has been committed or mandate arrest of spouses violating the terms of a valid and outstanding protection order; or

"(ii) permit warrantless misdemeanor arrests of spouse abusers and encourage the use of that authority; and

"(C) demonstrate that their laws and policies discourage 'dual' arrests of abused and abuser and the increase in arrest rates demonstrated pursuant to paragraph (1)(A) is not the result of increased dual arrests.

"(2) For purposes of this section, the term 'protection order' includes any injunction issued for the purpose of preventing violent or threatening acts of spouse abuse, including temporary and final orders issued by civil and criminal courts (other than support or child custody orders) whether obtained by filing an independent action or as a pendente lite order in another proceeding.

"(3) For purposes of this section, the term 'spousal or spouse abuse' includes abuse of a current or former spouse, a person who shares a child in common with the abuser, and person who cohabits with or has cohabited with the abuser as a spouse.

"(4) The eligibility requirements provided in this section shall take effect one year after the date of enactment of this section.

"(c) DELEGATION AND AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary shall delegate to the Attorney General of the United States the Secretary's responsibilities for carrying out this section to the Attorney General. There are authorized to be appropriated not in excess of $25,000,000 for each fiscal year to be used for the purpose of making grants under this section.

"(d) APPLICATION.—An eligible grantee shall submit an application to the Secretary. Such application shall—

"(1) contain a certification by the chief executive officer of the State, Indian tribes, municipality, or local government entity that the conditions of subsection (b) are met;

"(2) describe the entity's plans to further the purposes listed in subsection (a);

"(3) identify the agency or office or groups of agencies or offices responsible for carrying out the program; and

"(4) identify the nonprofit nongovernmental victim services programs will be consulted in developing, and implementing, the program.

"(e) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to a grantee that—

"(1) does not currently provide for centralized handling of cases involving spousal or family violence in any one of the areas listed in this subsection—police, prosecutors, and courts; and

"(2) demonstrates a commitment to strong enforcement of laws, and prosecution of cases, involving spousal or family violence.

"(f) REPORTING.—Each grantee receiving funds under this section shall submit a report to the Secretary evaluating the effectiveness of the plan described in subsection (d)(2) and containing such additional information as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(g) REGULATIONS.—No later than 45 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall publish proposed regulations implementing this section. No later than 120 days after such date, the Secretary shall publish final regulations implementing this section.".

Subtitle C—Funding for Shelters

SEC. 231. AUTHORIZATION.

Section 310 of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (42 U.S.C. 10409) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 310. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title, $85,000,000 for fiscal year 1992, $100,000,000, for fiscal year 1993, and $125,000,000 for fiscal year 1994.

"(b) Of the sums authorized to be appropriated under subsection (a) of this section for any fiscal year, not less than 85 percent shall be used by the Secretary for making grants under section 303.

"(c) Of the sums authorized to be appropriated under subsection (a) of this section for any fiscal year, not more than 5 percent shall be used by the Secretary for making grants under section 314.".

Subtitle D—Family Violence Prevention and Services Act Amendments

SEC. 243 GRANTS FOR PUBLIC INFORMATION CAMPAIGNS.

The Family Violence Prevention and Services Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"GRANTS FOR PUBLIC INFORMATION CAMPAIGNS

"SEC. 314. (a) The Secretary may make grants to public or private nonprofit entities to provide public information campaigns regarding domestic violence through the use of public service announcements and informative materials that are designed for print media, billboards, public transit advertising, electronic broadcast media, and other vehicles for information that shall inform the public concerning domestic violence.

"(b) No grant, contract, or cooperative agreement shall be made or entered into under this section unless an application that meets the requirements of subsection (c) has been approved by the Secretary.

"(c) An application submitted under subsection (b) shall—

"(1) provide such agreements, assurances, and information, be in such form and be submitted in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe through notice in the Federal Register, including a description of how the proposed public information campaign will target the population at risk, including pregnant women;

"(2) include a complete description of the plan of the application for the development of a public information campaign;

"(3) identify the specific audiences that will be educated, including communities and groups with the highest prevalence of domestic violence;

"(4) identify the media to be used in the campaign and the geographic distribution of the campaign;

"(5) describe plans to test market a development plan with a relevant population group and in a relevant geographic area and give assurance that effectiveness criteria will be implemented prior to the completion of the final plan that will include an evaluation component to measure the overall effectiveness of the campaign;

"(6) describe the kind, amount, distribution, and timing of informational messages and such other information as the Secretary may require, with assurances that media organizations and other groups with which such messages are placed will not lower the current frequency of public service announcements; and

"(7) contain such other information as the Secretary may require.

"(d) A grant, contract, or agreement made or entered into under this section shall be used for the development of a public information campaign that may include public service announcements, paid educational messages for print media, public transit advertising, electronic broadcast media, and any other mode of conveying information that the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

"(e) The criteria for awarding grants shall ensure that an applicant—

"(1) will conduct activities that educate communities and groups at greatest risk;

"(2) has a record of high quality campaigns of a comparable type; and

"(3) has a record of high quality campaigns that educate the population groups identified as most at risk.".

SEC. 244. STATE COMMISSIONS ON DOMESTIC VIOLENCE.

Section 303(a)(2) of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (42 U.S.C. 10402(a)(2)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (F);

(2) by redesignating subparagraph (G) as subparagraph (H); and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (F) the following new subparagraph:

"(G) provides assurances that, not later than 1 year after receipt of funds, the State shall have established a Commission on Domestic Violence to examine issues including—

"(i) the use of mandatory arrest of accused offenders;

"(ii) the adoption of 'no-drop' or vertical prosecution policies;

"(iii) the use of mandatory requirements for presentencing investigations;

"(iv) the length of time taken to prosecute cases or reach plea agreements;

"(v) the use of plea agreements;

"(vi) the testifying by victims at post-conviction sentencing and release hearings;

"(vii) the consistency of sentencing practices;

"(viii) restitution of victims;

"(ix) the reporting practices of and significance to be accorded to prior convictions (both felonies and misdemeanors); and

"(x) such other matters as the Commission believes merit investigation.

In implementing this requirement, State grantees must certify to the Secretary that—

"(aa) no less than one-third of Commission members be victim advocates associated with non-profit shelters; and

"(bb) no more than 2 percent of the grant monies awarded shall be used to support the required Commission.".

SEC. 245. INDIAN TRIBES.

Section 303(b)(1) of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (42 U.S.C. 10402(b)(1)) is amended by striking "is authorized" and inserting "from sums appropriated shall make no less than 10 percent available for".

SEC. 246. FUNDING LIMITATIONS.

Section 303(c) of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (42 U.S.C. 10402(c)) is amended by striking ", and" and all that follows through "fiscal years".

SEC. 247. GRANTS TO ENTITIES OTHER THAN STATES; LOCAL SHARE.

The first sentence of section 303(f) of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (42 U.S.C. 10402(f)) is amended to read as follows: "No demonstration grant may be made under this section to an entity other than a State or Indian tribe unless the entity provides 50 percent of the funding of the program or project funded by the grant.".

SEC. 248. SHELTER AND RELATED ASSISTANCE.

Section 303(g) of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (42 U.S.C. 10402(g)) is amended by—

(1) striking "not less than 60 percent" and inserting "not less than 75 percent"; and

(2) striking "immediate shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents" and inserting "shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents, including any, but not requiring all of the following—

"(1) food, shelter, medical services, and counseling with respect to family violence, including counseling by peers individually or in groups;

"(2) transportation, legal assistance, referrals, and technical assistance with respect to obtaining financial assistance under Federal and State programs;

"(3) comprehensive counseling about parenting, preventive health (including nutrition, exercise, and prevention of substance abuse), educational services employment training, social skills (including communication skills), home management assertiveness training; and

"(4) day care services for children who are victims of family violence or the dependents of such victims.".

SEC. 249. LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE GRANTS.

Section 311(b) of the Family Violence Protection and Services Act (42 U.S.C. 10410(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(d) Training grants may be made under this section only to private nonprofit organizations that have experience in providing training and technical assistance to law enforcement personnel on a national or regional basis.".

SEC. 260. REPORT ON RECORDKEEPING.

Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the General Accounting Office shall complete a study of, and shall submit to Congress a report and recommendations on, problems of recordkeeping of criminal complaints involving domestic violence. The study and report shall examine efforts to date of the FBI and Justice Department to collect statistics on domestic violence and the feasibility of, including a suggested timetable for, requiring that the relationship between an offender and victim be reported in Federal and State records of crimes of assault, aggravated assault, rape, and other violent crimes.

SEC. 251. MODEL STATE LEADERSHIP INCENTIVE GRANTS FOR DOMESTIC VIOLENCE INTERVENTION.

The Family Violence Prevention Services Act, as amended by section 103 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"MODEL STATE LEADERSHIP GRANTS FOR DOMESTIC VIOLENCE INTERVENTION

"Sec. 315. (a) The Secretary, in cooperation with the Attorney General, shall award grants to not less than 10 States to assist in becoming model demonstration States and in meeting the costs of improving State leadership concerning activities that will—

"(1) increase the number of prosecutions for domestic violence crimes;

"(2) encourage the reporting of incidences of domestic violence; and

"(3) facilitate 'arrests and aggressive' prosecution policies.

"(b) To be designated as a model State under subsection (a), a State shall have in effect—

"(1) a law that requires mandatory arrest of a person that police have probable cause to believe has committed an act of domestic violence or probable cause to believe has violated an outstanding civil protection order;

"(2) a law or policy that discourages 'dual' arrests;

"(3) statewide prosecution policies that—

"(A) authorize and encourage prosecutors to pursue cases where a criminal case can be proved, including proceeding without the active involvement of the victim if necessary; and

"(B) implement model projects that include either—

"(i) a 'no-drop' prosecution policy; or

"(ii) a vertical prosecution policy; and

"(C) limit diversion to extraordinary cases, and then only after an admission before a judical officer has been entered;

"(4) statewide guidelines for judges that—

"(A) reduce the automatic issuance of mutual restraining or protective orders in cases where only one spouse has sought a restraining or protection order;

"(B) discourage custody or joint custody orders by spouse abusers; and

"(C) encourage the understanding of domestic violence as a serious criminal offense and not a trivial dispute;

"(5) develop and disseminate methods to improve the criminal justice system's reponse to domestic violence to make existing remedies as easily available as possible to victims of domestic violence, including reducing delay, eliminating court fees, and providing easily understandable court forms.

"(c)(1) In addition to the funds authorized to be appropriated under section 310, there are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1992 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1993 and 1994.

"(2) Funds shall be distributed under this section so that no State shall receive more than $2,500,000 in each fiscal year under this section.

"(3) The Secretary shall delegate to the Attorney General the Secretary's responsibilities for carrying out this section and shall transfer to the Attorney General the funds appropriated under this section for the purpose of making grants under this section.".

SEC. 252. FUNDING FOR TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE CENTERS.

The Family Violence Prevention and Services Act is amended by inserting after section 308 the following:

"SEC. 308A. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE CENTERS.

"(a) Purpose.—The purpose of this section is to provide training and technical assistance to State, Indian tribal, and local domestic violence programs and to other professionals who provide services to victims of domestic violence. From the sums authorized under this title, the Secretary shall provide grants or contracts with public or private nonprofit organizations, for the establishment and maintenance of six national resource centers serving defined geographic areas. One national resource center shall offer resource, policy, and/or training assistance to Federal, State, Indian tribal, and local government agencies on issues pertaining to domestic violence and serve a coordinating and resource-sharing function among domestic violence service providers, and maintain a central resource library. The other national resource centers shall provide information, training and technical assistance to State, tribal and local domestic violence service providers. In addition, each national center shall specialize in one of the following areas of domestic violence service, prevention or law:

"(1) Public awareness and prevention education;

"(2) Criminal justice response to domestic violence, including court-mandated abuser treatment;

"(3) Child abuse and domestic violence, including domestic violence and child custody issues;

"(4) Domestic violence victim self-defense;

"(5) Medical personnel training; and

"(6) Enhancing victims' access to effective legal assistance.

"(b) Eligibility.—Eligible grantees are private nonprofit organizations that—

"(1) focus primarily on domestic violence;

"(2) provide documentation to the Secretary demonstrating experience with issues of domestic violence, particularly in the specific area for which it is applying;

"(3) include on its advisory boards representatives from domestic violence programs in the region who are geographically and culturally diverse; and

"(4) demonstrate strong support from domestic violence advocates in the region for their designation as the regional resource center.

"(c) REPORTING.—Each grantee receiving funds under this section shall submit a report to the Secretary evaluating the effectiveness of the plan described and containing such additional information as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(d) REGULATIONS.—No later than 45 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall publish proposed regulations implementing this section.

"(e) FUNDING.—From the sums appropriated under section 310 of this title, not in excess of $2,000,000 for each fiscal year shall be used for the purpose of making grants under this section.".

Subtitle E—Youth Education and Domestic Violence

SEC. 261. EDUCATING YOUTH ABOUT DOMESTIC VIOLENCE.

(a) GENERAL PURPOSE.—For purposes of this section, the Secretary shall delegate his powers to the Secretary of Education, hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary". The Secretary shall develop model programs for education of young people about domestic violence and violence among intimate partners.

(b) NATURE OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall develop three separate programs for three different audiences: primary and middle schools, secondary schools, and institutions of higher education. These model programs shall be developed with the input of educational experts, law enforcement personnel, legal and psychological experts on battering, and victim advocate organizations such as battered women's shelters. The participation of each of these groups or individual consultants from such groups is essential to the development of a program that meets both the needs of educational institutions and the needs of the domestic violence problem.

(c) REVIEW AND DISSEMINATION.—Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall transmit the model programs, along with a plan and cost estimate for nationwide distribution, to the relevant committees of Congress for review.

(d) AUTHORIZATION.—These are authorized to be appropriated under this section for fiscal year 1992, $200,000 to carry out the purposes of this section.

Subtitle F—Confidentiality for Abused Persons

SEC. 271. CONFIDENTIALITY OF ABUSED PERSON'S ADDRESS.

No later than 90 days after the enactment of this Act, the Postmaster General shall promulgate regulations to secure the confidentiality of abused persons address's or otherwise prohibit the disclosure of an abused person's address consistent with the following guidelines:

(1) confidentiality shall be provided upon the presentation to an appropriate postal official of an existing and valid court order for the protection of an abused spouse;

(2) disclosure of addresses to State or Federal agencies for legitimate law enforcement or other governmental purposes shall not be prohibited; and

(3) compilations of addresses existing at the time the order is presented to an appropriate postal official shall be excluded from the scope of the proposed regulations.

TITLE III—CIVIL RIGHTS

SEC. 301. CIVIL RIGHTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) crimes motivated by the victim's gender constitute bias crimes in violation of the victim's right to be free from discrimination on the basis of gender;

(2) current law provides a civil rights remedy for gender crimes committed in the workplace, but not for gender crimes committed on the street or in the home; and

(3) State and Federal criminal laws do not adequately protect against the bias element of gender crimes, which separates these crimes from acts of random violence, nor do they adequately provide victims the opportunity to vindicate their interests.

(b) RIGHTS, PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.—All persons within the United States shall have the same rights, privileges and immunities in every State as is enjoyed by all other persons to be free from crimes of violence motivated by the victim's gender, as defined in subsection (d).

(c) CAUSE OF ACTION.—Any person, including a person who acts under color of any State, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage of any State, who deprives another of the rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws as enumerated in subsection (b) shall be liable to the party injured, in an action for the recovery of compensatory and punitive damages, injunctive or declaratory relief, or such other relief as the court may deem appropriate.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "crime of violence motivated by gender" means any crime of violence, as defined in this section, including rape, sexual assault, sexual abuse, abusive sexual contact, or any other crime of violence committed because of gender or on the basis of gender; and

(2) the term "crime of violence" means an act or series of acts that would come within the meaning of State or Federal offenses described in section 16 of title 18, United States Code, whether or not those acts have actually resulted in criminal charges, prosecution, or conviction and whether or not those acts were committed in the special maritime, territorial, or prison jurisdiction of the United States.

(e) LIMITATION AND PROCEDURES.—

(1) LIMITATION.—Nothing in this section entitles a person to a cause of action under subsection (c) for random acts of violence unrelated to gender or for acts that cannot be demonstrated, by a preponderance of the evidence, to be "motivated by gender" as defined in subsection (d).

(2) NO PRIOR CRIMINAL ACTION.—Nothing in this section requires a prior criminal complaint, prosecution, or conviction to establish the necessary elements of a cause of action under subsection (c).

SEC. 302. CONFORMINING AMENDMENT.

The Civil Right Attorney's Fees Awards Act of 1976 (42 U.S.C. 1988) is amended—

(1) in the last sentence, by striking "or" after "Public Law 92-318,"; and

(2) by adding after "1964," the following:", or title III of the Violence Aganist Women Act of 1991,".

TITLE IV—SAFE CAMPUSES FOR WOMEN

SEC. 401. SHORT TITLE

This title may be cited as the "Safe Campuses for Women Act of 1990".

SEC. 402. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) rape prevention and education programs are essential to an educational environment free of fear for students' personal safety;

(2) sexual assault on campus, whether by fellow students or not, is widespread among the Nation's higher education institutions: experts estimate that 1 in 7 of the women now in college have been raped and over half of college rape victims know their attackers;

(3) sexual assault poses a grave threat to the physical and mental well-being of students and may significantly impair the learning process; and

(4) action by schools to educate students may make substantial inroads on the incidence of rape, including the incidence of acquaintance rape on campus.

SEC. 403. GRANTS FOR CAMPUS RAPE EDUCATION.

Title X of the Higher Education Act of 1965 is amended to add at the end thereof the following:

"PART D—GRANTS FOR CAMPUS RAPE EDUCATION."

SEC. 1071. GRANTS FOR CAMPUS RAPE EDUCATION.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) The Secretary of Education is authorized to make grants to or enter into contracts with institutions of higher education for rape education and prevention programs under this section.

"(2) The Secretary shall make financial assistance available on a competitive basis under this section. An institution of higher education or consortium of such institutions which desires to receive a grant or enter into a contract under this section shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require in accordance with regulations.

"(3) The Secretary shall make every effort to ensure the equitable participation of private and public institutions of higher education and to ensure the equitable geographic participation of such institutions. In the award of grants and contracts under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to institutions who show the greatest need for the sums requested.

"(4) Not less than 50 percent of sums available for the purposes of this section shall be used to make grants under subsection (c) of this section.

"(b) GENERAL RAPE PREVENTION AND EDUCATION GRANTS.—Grants under this section shall be used to educate and provide support services to student victims of rape or sexual assault. Grants may be used for the following purposes:

"(1) to provide training for campus security and college personnel, including campus disciplinary or judicial boards, that address the issues of rape, sexual assault, and other gender-motivated crimes;

"(2) to develop, disseminate, or implement campus security and student disciplinary policies to prevent and discipline rape, sexual assault and other gender-motivated crimes;

"(3) to develop, enlarge or strengthen support services programs including medical or psychological counseling to assist victims' recovery from rape, sexual assault, or other gender-motivated crimes;

"(4) to create, disseminate, or otherwise provide assistance and information about victims' options on and off campus to bring disciplinary or other legal action; and

"(5) to implement, operate, or improve rape education and prevention programs, including programs making use of peer-to-peer education.

"(c) Model Grants.—Not less than 25 percent of the funds authorized under this section shall be available for grants for model demonstration programs to be coordinated with local rape crisis centers for the development and implementation of quality rape prevention and education curricula and for local programs to provide services to student rape victims.

"(d) Eligibility.—No institution of higher education or consortium of such institutions shall be eligible for a grant under this section unless—

"(1) its student code of conduct, or other written policy governing student behavior, explicitly prohibits not only rape but all forms of sexual assault; and

"(2) it has in effect and implements a written policy requiring the disclosure to the victim of any sexual assault the outcome of any investigation by campus police or campus disciplinary proceedings brought pursuant to the victim's complaint against the alleged perpetrator of the sexual assault: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be interpreted to authorize disclosure to any person other than the victim.

"(e) Applications.—(1) In order to be eligible to receive a grant under this section for any fiscal year, an institution of higher education, or consortium of such institutions, shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time and in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe.

"(2) Each such application shall—

"(A) set forth the activities and programs to be carried out with funds granted under this part;

"(B) contain an estimate of the cost for the establishment and operation of such programs;

"(C) explain how the program intends to address the issue of acquaintance rape;

"(D) provide assurances that the Federal funds made available under this section shall be used to supplement and, to the extent practical, to increase the level of funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available by the applicant for the purpose described in this part, and in no case to supplant such funds; and

"(E) include such other information and assurances as the Secretary reasonably determines to be necessary.

"(e) Grantee Reporting.—Upon completion of the grant period under this section, the grantee institution or consortium of institutions shall file a performance report with the Secretary explaining the activities carried out together with an assessment of the effectiveness of those activities in achieving the purposes of this section. The Secretary shall suspend funding for an approved application if an appplicant fails to submit an annual performance report.

"(f) Definitions.—(1) Except as otherwise provided, the terms used in this part shall have the meaning provided under section 2981 of this title.

"(2) For purposes of this subchapter, the following terms have the following meanings:

"(A) The term 'rape education and prevention' includes programs that provide educational seminars, peer-to-peer counseling, operation of hotlines, self-defense courses, the preparation of informational materials, and any other effort to increase campus awareness of the facts about, or to help prevent, sexual assault.

"(B) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Education.

"(g) General Terms and Conditions.—(1) Regulations.—No later than 45 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall publish proposed regulation implementing this section. No later than 120 days after such date, the Secretary shall publish final regulations implementing this section.

"(2) No later than 180 days after the end of each fiscal year for which grants are made under this section, the Secretary shall submit to the committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate responsible for issues relating to higher education and to crime, a report that includes—

"(A) the amount of grants made under this section;

"(B) a summary of the purposes for which those grants were provided and an evaluation of their progress; and

"(C) a copy of each grantee report filed pursuant to subsection (e) of this section.

"(3) For the purpose of carrying out this subchapter, there are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 1992, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995.".

SEC. 404. REQUIRED CAMPUS REPORTING OF SEXUAL ASSAULT.

Section 204(f) of the Crime Awareness and Campus Security Act of 1990 is amended to read as follows:

"(F) Statistics concerning the occurrence on campus, during the most recent school year, and during the 2 preceding school years for which data are available, of the following criminal offenses reported to campus security authorities or local police agencies—

"(i) murder;

"(ii) rape or sexual assault;

"(iii) robbery;

"(iv) aggravated assault;

"(v) burglary; and

"(vi) motor vehicle theft.

TITLE V—EQUAL JUSTICE FOR WOMEN IN THE COURTS ACT OF 1990

SECTION 501. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Equal Justice for Women in the Courts Act of 1991".

Subtitle A—Education and Training for Judges and Court Personnel in State Courts

SEC. 511. GRANTS AUTHORIZED.

The State Justice Institute is authorized to award grants for the purpose of developing, testing, presenting, and disseminating model programs to be used by States in training judges and court personnel in the laws of the States on rape, sexual assault, domestic violence, and other crimes of violence motivated by the victim's gender.

SEC. 512. TRAINING PROVIDED BY GRANTS.

Training provided pursuant to grants made under this subtitle may include current information, existing studies, or current data on—

(1) the nature and incidence of rape and sexual assault by strangers and nonstrangers, marital rape, and incest;

(2) the underreporting of rape, sexual assault, and child sexual abuse;

(3) the physical, psychological, and economic impact of rape and sexual assault on the victim, the costs to society, and the implications for sentencing;

(4) the psychology of sex offenders, their high rate of recidivism, and the implications for sentencing;

(5) the historical evolution of laws and attitudes on rape and sexual assault;

(6) sex stereotyping of female and male victims of rape and sexual assault, racial stereotyping of rape victims and defendants, and the impact of such stereotypes on credibility of witnesses, sentencing, and other aspects of the administration of justice;

(7) application of rape shield laws and other limits on introduction of evidence that may subject victims to improper sex stereotyping and harassment in both rape and nonrape cases, including the need for sua sponte judicial intervention in inappropriate cross-examination;

(8) the use of expert witness testimony on rape trauma syndrome, child sexual abuse accommodation syndrome, post-traumatic stress syndrome, and similar issues;

(9) the legitimate reasons why victims of rape, sexual assault, and incest may refuse to testify against a defendant;

(10) the nature and incidence of domestic violence;

(11) the physical, psychological, and economic impact of domestic violence on the victim, the costs to society, and the implications for court procedures and sentencing;

(12) the psychology and self-presentation of batterers and victims and the implications for court proceedings and credibility of witnesses;

(13) sex stereotyping of female and male victims of domestic violence, myths about presence or absence of domestic violence in certain racial, ethnic, religious, or socioeconomic groups, and their impact on the administration of justice;

(14) historical evolution of laws and attitudes on domestic violence;

(15) proper and improper interpretations of the defenses of self-defense and provocation, and the use of expert witness testimony on battered woman syndrome;

(16) the likelihood of retaliation, recidivism, and escalation of violence by batterers, and the potential impact of incarceration and other meaningful sanctions for acts of domestic violence including violations of orders of protection;

(17) economic, psychological, social and institutional reasons for victims' inability to leave the batterer, to report domestic violence or to follow through on complaints, including the influence of lack of support from police, judges, and court personnel, and the legitimate reasons why victims of domestic violence may refuse to testify against a defendant;

(18) the need for orders of protection, and the implications of mutual orders of protection, dual arrest policies, and mediation in domestic violence cases;

(19) recognition of and response to gender-motivated crimes of violence other than rape, sexual assault and domestic violence, such as mass or serial murder motivated by the gender of the victims; and

(20) current information on the impact of pornography on crimes against women, or data on other activities that tend to degrade women.

SEC. 513. COOPERATION IN DEVELOPING PROGRAMS IN MAKING GRANTS UNDER THIS TITLE.

The State Justice Institute shall ensure that model programs carried out pursuant to grants made under this subtitle are developed with the participation of law enforcement officials, public and private nonprofit victim advocates, legal experts, prosecutors, defense attorneys, and recognized experts on gender bias in the courts.

SEC. 514. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1992, $600,000 to carry out the purposes of this subtitle. Of amounts appropriated under this section, the State Justice Institute shall expend no less than 40 percent of model programs regarding domestic violence and no less than 40 percent on model programs regarding rape and sexual assault.

Subtitle B—Education and Training for Judges and Court Personnel in Federal Courts

SEC. 521. EDUCATION AND TRAINING GRANTS.

(a) STUDY.—The Federal Judicial Center shall conduct a study of the nature and extent of gender bias in the Federal courts, including in proceedings involving rape, sexual assault, domestic violence, and other crimes of violence motivated by gender. The study shall be conducted by the use of data collection techniques such as reviews of trial and appellate opinions and transcripts, public hearings, and inquiries to attorneys practicing in the Federal courts. The Federal Judicial Center shall publicly issue a final report containing a detailed description of the findings and conclusions of the study, including such recommendations for legislative, administrative, and judicial action as it considers appropriate.

(b) MODEL PROGRAMS.—(1) The Federal Judicial Center shall develop, test, present, and disseminate model programs to be used in training Federal judges and court personnel in the laws on rape, sexual assault, domestic violence, and other crimes of violence motivated by the victim's gender.

(2) The training programs developed under this subsection shall include—

(A) all of the topics listed in section 512 of subtitle A; and

(B) all procedural and substantive aspects of the legal rights and remedies for violent crime motivated by gender including such areas as the Federal penalties for sex crimes, interstate enforcement of laws against domestic violence and civil rights remedies for violent crimes motivated by gender.

SEC. 522. COOPERATION IN DEVELOPING PROGRAMS.

In implementing this subtitle, the Federal Judicial Center shall ensure that the study and model programs are developed with the participation of law enforcement officials, public and private nonprofit victim advocates, legal experts, prosecutors, defense attorneys, and recognized experts on gender bias in the courts.

SEC. 523. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1992, $400,000 to carry out the purposes of this subtitle. Of amounts appropriated under this section, no less than 25 percent and no more than 40 percent shall be expended by the Federal Judicial Center on the study required by section 521(a) of this subtitle.•

BIDEN "VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT"

TITLE I—SAFE STREETS FOR WOMEN

Creates New Penalties for Sex Crimes:

Doubles penalties for rape and aggravated rape.

Creates new penalties for repeat sex offenders.

Increases restitution for the victims of sex crimes.

Encourages Women to Prosecute Their Attackers:

Requires states to pay for women's medical examinations to determine if they have been raped.

Extends "rape shield law" protection to criminal and civil cases—other than sexual assault cases where it already applies—to bar embarrassing and irrelevant inquiries into a victim's sexual history at trial.

Authorizes $65 million in funds for rape prevention and education.

Bars the use of a women's clothing to show, at trial, that the victim incited or invited a sexual assault.

Targets Places Most Dangerous for Women:

Authorizes $300 million for law enforcement efforts to combat sex crimes, with $100 million targeted for the 40 metropolitan areas most dangerous for women.

Creates special units of police, prosecutors and victim advocates to fight crime against women.

Creates Safer Public Transit and Public Parks:

Funds increased lighting and camera surveillance at bus stops, bus stations, subways, and parking lots adjacent to public transit facilities.

Targets $25 million in existing park funds for increased lighting, emergency telephones, and police.

Establishes the "National Commission on Violent Crime Against Women":

Creates a commission to develop a national strategy for combating violence against women.

TITLE II—SAFE HOMES FOR WOMEN

Protects Women from Abusive Spouses:

Deters abusers from learning the whereabouts of a fleeing victim.

Creates federal penalties for spouse abusers who cross state lines to continue their abuse.

Requires all states to enforce any "stay away" order, regardless of which state issues it.

Promotes Arrests of Abusive Spouses:

Authorizes $25 million for prosecutors and courts to develop special spouse abuse units.

Provides additional grants to "model states" that promote the arrest and prosecution of abusive spouses.

Provides More Money for Shelters:

Triples funding for battered women's shelters.

Teaches Children about Domestic Violence:

Creates school-based programs designed to stop the cycle of family violence.

Educates Women about Their Rights:

Requires States to establish commissions to study domestic violence and authorizes a national media campaign against such violence. (Senator Coats)

TITLE III—CIVIL RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

Labels Sex Crimes as "Bias" or "Hate" Crimes:

Defines gender-motivated crimes as "bias" crimes that deprive victims of their civil rights.

Extends "Civil Rights" Protections to All Gender-Motivated Crimes:

Makes gender-based assaults a violation of federal civil rights laws.

Allows victims of all felonies "motivated by gender" to bring civil rights suits against their assailants.

TITLE IV—SAFE CAMPUSES FOR WOMEN

Funds Rape Prevention Programs:

Creates a $20 million grant program for the neediest colleges to fund campus rape education and prevention programs and services.

Guarantees Victims' Right to Know:

Requires grantee colleges to disclose to rape victims the outcome of college disciplinary proceedings against their attackers.

Strengthens Campus Security:

Closes loophole in existing campus crime reporting law by requiring that campuses report not only "rape" but also any form of sexual assault.

Requires grantee colleges to expressly bar sexual assault as a violation of student disciplinary codes.

TITLE V—JUDICIAL EDUCATION ON VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Educates state and federal judges about domestic violence, sexual assault and gender bias.

• Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I am very pleased to join my colleague, Senator BIDEN of Delaware, in introducing the Violence Against Women Act. This bill is the first piece of comprehensive legislation that directly addresses and alleviates the serious problem of violent crime against women in this country.

Violent crimes against women are rising at an alarming and unacceptable rate. During the last decade, the rate of rape rose four times as fast as the total crime rate. Today, with every minute that passes, over 4 women are beaten; and with every hour that passes, 10 women are raped.

While the statistics are alarming, they pale in comparison to the true numbers of female victims. It is estimated that less than half of all rapes, and even fewer domestic assaults, are ever reported. Violent crimes against women are not limited to the streets of the inner cities, but also occur in homes in the urban and rural areas across the country.

Violence against women affects not only those who are actually beaten and brutalized, but indirectly affects all women. Today, our wives, mothers, daughters, sisters, and colleagues are held captive by the fear generated from these violent crimes—held captive not for what they do or who they are, but solely because of their gender.

Mr. President, the Violence Against Women Act is not a panacea for this pervasive problem, but is a necessary first step in freeing all females from unnecessary risk and fear. The bill designates sex crimes as a violation of civil rights, allowing women to seek remedies under the Federal civil rights laws.

Additionally, the bill increases penalties for sex related crimes being tried in Federal court, and makes court restraining orders for women enforceable across State lines. The bill also provides $300 million in grants to State and local law-enforcement agencies to tailor programs to combat this problem at the local level.

Mr. President we can and must put an end to the spiraling escalation of violent crimes against women in this country. We must protect the rights of women in this country to feel safe on the street and in their homes. I strongly urge my colleagues to recognize the urgent need for this legislation and to join me in supporting the Violence Against Women Act.•

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, today I am pleased to join Senator BIDEN in reintroducing the Violence Against Women Act. The first comprehensive legislation designed specifically to combat violent crime against women, this legislation was first introduced by Senator BIDEN last year and, subsequently, was favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee. Regrettably, the full Senate did not have the opportunity to consider the measure before adjournment.

Violence against women in this country has been rising at an alarming rate. Increases in the rate of rape, assaults, and murder of women are significantly higher than increases in the national crime rate or the rate of assaults and murder of men. Nationally, a woman is raped every 6 minutes and, every 18 seconds, a women is beaten. In my own State of Maine, a woman is raped every 38 hours and a domestic assault occurs every 3 hours.

While the statistics are shocking, the reality is even worse. It is estimated that less than half of all rapes and even fewer domestic assaults are ever reported. These crimes are not limited to the streets of our inner cities or to those few highly publicized cases that we read about in the newspapers or see on the evening news.

Women throughout the country, in our Nation's urban areas and rural communities, are being beaten and brutalized in the streets and in their homes. It is our mothers, wives, daughters, sisters, friends, neighbors, and coworkers who are being victimized; and, in many cases, they are being victimized by family members, friends, and acquaintances.

The physical and emotional toll on women who are the victims of violent crime is devastating. Compounding this tragedy is the fact that the law enforcement and judicial systems in this country, and society in general, often contribute to the victimization of women by their insensitivity, reliance on outmoded stereotypes, and failure to adequately protect victims.

Even those women who have not been touched directly by violent crime are not unaffected. How many women can walk home at night from the bus or subway without some thought of what is the safest route to take, or without pausing when they hear footsteps behind them. How many women have thought better of taking an evening stroll in their neighborhood or perhaps a local park because of a concern about crime. Regrettably, all women are victims of fear—the fear generated by the pervasiveness of violence directed against women not because of who they are or what they are doing or where they live but simply because they are women.

The Federal Government has an important role to play in reversing the trend of increasing violence against women. In addition to setting an example for the States to emulate by strengthening its own laws and enforcement efforts, the Federal Government can promote programs at the State and local level to prevent violence against women, and to more effectively prosecute and appropriately punish those individuals who commit violent crimes against women.

The Violence Against Women Act is not a cure to the growing incidence of violence but it is an important step in the right direction. The bill has five major titles: Safe Streets for Women; Safe Homes for Women; Civil Rights for Women; Safe Campuses for Women; and Equal Justice for Women in the Courts. A summary of the bill has been placed in the RECORD.

I want to take this opportunity to commend Senator BIDEN for his leadership in this area and his commitment to addressing the very difficult problem of violence against women, and I look forward to working with him to move this measure forward. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this important legislation.

By Mr. BIDEN (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. SIMON, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. GORTON, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. CRANSTON, and Mr. AKAKA):

S. 16. A bill to provide emergency Federal assistance to drug emergency areas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DRUG EMERGENCY AREAS ACT

• Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Drug Emergency Areas Act of 1991 to fight the spiraling problems of drug trafficking and violent crime in our Nation's cities and communities.

The drug and violent crime epidemics are taking their toll on U.S. cities unlike any natural disaster in modern history. Each year, thousands die in drug-related violence and overdoses. Tens of billions of dollars are lost in health costs and lowered productivity. The drug crisis has—literally—destroyed neighborhoods in every major city in this country.

Congress and the President recognized the need to provide emergency Federal aid to the hardest hit cities as far back as 1988, when the Anti-Drug Abuse Act was enacted. This law directed the President to designate certain areas of the country as "high intensity drug trafficking areas" and to provide immediate Federal aid to these areas. And to ensure that emergency aid was provided immediately, Congress appropriated $25 million in October 1989 for the areas to be designated by the President.

Unfortunately, the White House response has been plagued by bureaucratic delays and inefficiency.

More than 2 years after the high-intensity drug trafficking area legislation was signed into law, not a single Federal dollar—not a single extra police officer or treatment bed—had been delivered to these hard-hit areas.

That's why 16 of my colleagues and I are introducing the Drug Emergency Areas Act of 1991 as an alternative to the President's plan. Our legislation is simple and direct. It would:

Provide $300 million—six times the amount in the President's antidrug plan—in emergency Federal assistance to those areas of the Nation hardest hit by drug trafficking, abuse and related violence;

Direct that emergency Federal aid be available not only for big cities, but also to rural and suburban areas, where the drug crisis has overwhelmed the ability of State and local law enforcement agencies to respond; and Allow funding for both law enforcement and prevention and treatment initiatives—to attack the problem at every possible level.

Mr. President, there is one additional—and perhaps the most critical—difference between this new initiative and the President's plan.

My bill offers direct Federal assistance to the cities and counties where the drug problem hits the hardest, and where emergency assistance is needed the most. Federal assistance to drug emergency areas should be delivered the same way we help areas affected by natural emergencies—directly to the local officials who know what needs doing, and how best to do it.

This bill is identical to legislation I introduced last year, S. 2313, which was endorsed by the former President of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, Richard Berkley, and the mayor of New York City, David Dinkins. The bill is also strongly supported by the National League of Cities and the Delaware League of Local Governments.

Mr. President, drug trafficking and abuse in our cities is a national emergency. We need an emergency response. I believe the Drug Emergency Areas Act is a major step in the right direction.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill, an explanatory factsheet, and a chart comparing this legislation with the President's plan be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 16

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Drug Emergency Areas Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. DRUG EMERGENCY AREAS.

Subsection (c) of section 1005 of the National Narcotics Leadership Act of 1988 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) DECLARATION OF DRUG EMERGENCY AREAS.—

"(1) PRESIDENTIAL DECLARATION.—(A) In the event that a major drug-related emergency exists throughout a State or a part of a State, the President may, in consultation with the Director and other appropriate officials, declare such State or part of a State to be a drug emergency area and may take any and all necessary actions authorized by this subsection or otherwise authorized by law.

"(B) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'major drug-related emergency' means any occasion or instance in which drug trafficking, drug abuse, or drug-related violence reaches such levels, as determined by the President, that Federal assistance is needed to supplement State and local efforts and capabilities to save lives, and to protect property and public health and safety.

"(2) PROCEDURE FOR DECLARATION.—(A) All requests for a declaration by the President designating an area to be a drug emergency area shall be made, in writing, by the Governor or chief executive officer of any affected State or local government, respectively, and shall be forwarded to the President through the Director in such form as the Director may by regulation require. One or more cities, counties, or States may submit a joint request for designation as a drug emergency area under this subsection.

"(B) Any request made under clause (A) of this paragraph shall be based on a written finding that the major drug-related emergency is of such severity and magnitude that effective response to save lives, and to protect property and public health and safety, that Federal assistance is necessary.

"(C) The President shall not limit declarations made under this subsection to highly-populated centers of drug trafficking, drug use or drug-related violence, but shall also consider applications from governments of less populated areas where the magnitude and severity of such activities is beyond the capability of the State or local government to respond.

"(D) As part of a request for a declaration by the President under this subsection, and as a prerequisite to Federal drug emergency assistance under this subsection, the Governor(s) or chief executive officer(s) shall—

"(i) take appropriate response action under State or local law and furnish such information on the nature and amount of State and local resources which have been or will be committed to alleviating the major drug-related emergency;

"(ii) certify that State and local government obligations and expenditures will comply with all applicable cost-sharing requirements of this subsection; and

"(iii) submit a detailed plan outlining the State and/or local government's short- and long-term plans to respond to the major drug-related emergency, specifying the types and levels of Federal assistance requested, and including explicit goals (where possible quantitative goals) and timetables and shall specify how Federal assistance provided under this subsection is intended to achieve such goals.

"(E) The Director shall review any request submitted pursuant to this subsection and forward the application, along with a recommendation to the President on whether to approve or disapprove the application, within 30 days after receiving such application. Based on the application and the recommendation of the Director, the President may declare an area to be a drug emergency area under this subsection.

"(3) FEDERAL MONETARY ASSISTANCE.—(A) The President is authorized to make grants to State or local governments of up to, in the aggregate for any single major drug-related emergency, $50,000,000.

"(B) The Federal share of assistance under this section shall not be greater than 75 percent of the costs necessary to implement the short- and long-term plan outlined in paragraph (2)(D)(iii).

"(C) Federal assistance under this subsection shall not be provided to a drug disaster area for more than 1 year. In any case where Federal assistance is provided under this Act, the Governor(s) or chief executive officer(s) may apply to the President, through the Director, for an extension of assistance beyond 1 year. The President, based on the recommendation of the Director, may extend the provision of Federal assistance for not more than an additional 180 days.

"(D) Any State and/or local government receiving Federal assistance under this subsection shall balance the allocation of such assistance evenly between drug supply reduction and drug demand reduction efforts, unless State or local conditions dictate otherwise.

"(4) NONMONETARY ASSISTANCE.—In addition to the assistance provided under paragraph (3), the President may—

"(A) direct any Federal agency, with or without reimbursement, to utilize its authorities and the resources granted to it under Federal law (including personnel, equipment, supplies, facilities, and managerial, technical, and advisory services) in support of State and local assistance efforts; and

"(B) provide technical and advisory assistance, including communications support and law enforcement-related intelligence information.

"(5) ISSUANCE OF IMPLEMENTING REGULATIONS.—Within 90 days after the enactment of this subsection, the Director shall issue regulations to implement this subsection, including such regulations as may be necessary relating to applications for Federal assistance and the provision of Federal monetary and nonmonetary assistance.

"(6) AUDIT BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—The Comptroller General shall conduct an audit of any Federal assistance (both monetary and nonmonetary) of an amount greater than $100,000 provided to a State or local government under this subsection, including an evaluation of the effectiveness of such assistance based on the goals contained in the application for assistance.

"(7) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995, $300,000,000 to carry out the purposes of this subsection.".

DRUG EMERGENCY AREAS ACT OF 1991

BACKGROUND

Modeled closely on the Federal Disaster Assistance Act, the Drug Emergency Areas Act (DEAA) provides direct, emergency Federal aid to areas that are particularly hard hit by drug trafficking and violence—and where state and local agencies are overwhelmed and unable to respond effectively.

WHO WOULD GET HELP

The Drug Emergency Areas Act would allow any local official to apply directly for aid:

Any city (irrespective of its population) could receive aid if the President declares that the area is in need of Federal assistance due to a high level of drug trafficking, drug abuse or drug-related violence.

EXACTLY WHAT ASSISTANCE DOES THE DEAA PROVIDE

Funding: Up to $50 million in emergency relief aid would be available to a specific drug emergency area.

These funds would be provided directly to state or local governments.

Other: The Act also authorizes increases in the number of Federal agents in such areas and provides communications, intelligence and equipment.

WHAT ARE THE MAJOR DIFFERENCES WITH PRESIDENT'S PLAN

1. More aid. The DEAA would provide $300 million in new aid to the hardest-hit areas—up to a maximum of $50 million per city.

The Administration's plan provides a total of $10 million to each of five pre-determined areas.

2. More cities eligible. As mentioned above, any city could apply for and receive aid under the DEAA if designated an emergency area by the President.

The Administration's plan limits aid to five specific areas: New York, Los Angeles, Miami, Houston, and the Southwest Border.

3. Direct funding. The DEAA provides immediate and direct aid to local governments, designated drug emergency areas.

The Administration's plan provides no Federal aid to state or local governments; rather, all of the aid is earmarked solely for Federal agencies.

4. Use of funds for demand reduction. The DEAA directs that local governments spend emergency relief funds on both supply and demand reduction efforts, unless local conditions dictate otherwise.

The Administration's plan provides no funding for prevention or treatment.•

• Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the 1988 Anti-Drug Abuse Act gave the Drug Director specific authority that Senator BIDEN and I authored to designate certain areas as high intensity drug areas. We left considerable discretion with the Drug Director in exercising that authority. Our concept was intended to provide a mechanism for the Federal Government to bring greater pressure to bear on areas of the country hardest hit by the drug problem.

The legislation we reintroduced today expands on this concept by authorizing the President to declare drug emergency areas. Currently, the Drug Director's authority is limited to reassigning existing resources. That authority is important, but it must be augmented. This new proposal will authorize the President, on the advice of the Drug Director to inject new resources directly to high intensity areas, instead of taking away important resources from other assignments. This legislation will provide an important and indispensable weapon in our fight against drug abuse. I have pursued similar authority to enable the President to direct emergency relief for areas with acute educational treatment needs.

A winning strategy against drug abuse involves three approaches: Law enforcement, prevention, and treatment. Each is vital, and none can be downgraded or ignored. On the enforcement side of the drug war, wiser policies and more resources are needed, especially at the State and local level—where the real war is fought every day on our streets and in our communities. We must learn to support our State and local police—and do it without abandoning fundamental constitutional guarantees or turning any local jurisdiction into a police state.

More important, Federal law enforcement officials must do a better job of coordinating Federal efforts, so that we direct drug enforcement resources in a way that focuses maximum pressure on drug trafficking organizations here and abroad.

We have enacted enhancements in State and local law enforcement authority, tougher asset forfeiture, quicker prosecutions of drug offenders, broader use of civil sanctions, high intensity drug trafficking area improvements, and additional Federal trial judges for areas of the country hardest hit by the drug crisis. Taken together, these provisions and the Drug Emergency Areas Act will provide substantial new assistance to all levels of our law enforcement and civil justice system.●

S. 17. A bill to provide for a study of the Corinth Battlefield in the State of Mississippi; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

S. 80. A bill to establish a national military park to commemorate the Battle of Corinth in the State of Mississippi; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CORINTH BATTLEFIELD LEGISLATION

● Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I rise today to offer legislation which will ensure the preservation of a site in my home State or Mississippi which was the scene of one of the greatest campaigns during the War Between the States. Corinth, MS was the location of the Battle of Corinth which was the largest battle to take place in my State and the Siege of Corinth was, in terms of aggregate numbers of troops involved, one of largest in the history of the Western Hemisphere.

Possession of Corinth was the key to victory during the war because of the railroads. Corinth was the Confederacy's only east-west link; the Memphis and Charleston Railroad crossed the critical Mobile and Ohio Railway. These were the two longest railroads in the South. This junction was referred to as the vertebrae of the Confederacy and eventually acquired the nickname "crossroads of the Confederacy." It is interesting to note that the famous Battle of Shiloh was fought solely for the possession of Corinth. A National Military Park is located at Shiloh in commemoration of this battle.

The strategical value of Corinth was tremendous. With Corinth in Union hands, the roads to Vicksburg and Atlanta were open for Federal armies. The Confederacy certainly realized the importance of Corinth. Possession of Corinth was critical enough for the Confederacy to sacrifice New Orleans, the South's largest city and the coastal region from Mobile to Charleston. The Confederacy abandoned these cities in order to send the needed troops to protect the small village in northeast Mississippi, known as Corinth.

Of all the major civil war crusades, the Battle of Corinth and the Corinth Siege is indisputably the least known and definitely the least recognized. The Battle of Corinth is deserving of long-overdue national recognition. I am aware that these sites at Corinth are being considered for National Historic Landmark designation which, if seclected, would be officially named this summer. However, I am convinced that we must go one step further to ensure this notable site's place in American history; therefore my reason for introducing legislation.

Corinth is an ideal location for a National Military Park. If we act expeditiously we may easily preserve many battle and siege sites which are still vacant tracts of land. The urban setting is advantageous for the purposes of cost minimization in development and maintenance. Furthermore, the proximity of the Shiloh National Military Park offers the possibility of a combined administration.

Corinth and the Corinth Siege are the only sites in my State of Mississippi included on the Secretary of the Interior's list of Priority Civil War Battlefields and 2 of only 25 nationwide. My proposal is also consistent with the Secretary of the Interior's American Battlefield Protection Program established in July 1990.

We must safeguard our national heritage and protect this significant battlefield upon which our ancestors lost life and limb in pursuit of their most fundamental ideals. I believe Corinth is a natural location for a military park. The closeness of the Shiloh National Military Park, which is just 20 miles from Corinth, would be especially beneficial. The connection between the two battles, not to mention the convenience of location, convinces me that construction of a military park at Corinth is needed for proper interpretation of this important chapter in American history.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to support this important legislation and ask unanimous consent the full text of these bills be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 17

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Battle of Corinth Study Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. STUDY OF THE BATTLE OF CORINTH.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior shall conduct a study of the events surrounding and lands involved in the Battle of Corinth, in the State of Mississippi, which was fought on October 3 and 4, 1862.

(2) The study described in paragraph (1) shall—

(A) determine the significance of the battle in illustrating and commemorating the "War in the West" of the War Between the States and

(B) include alternatives for the administration, protection, and interpretation of the battlefield and associated lands.

(b) COMPLETION OF STUDY.—The study described in subsection (a) shall be completed and transmitted to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate not later than 2 years after the date on which funds are made available for the study.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as necessary to carry out this Act.

S. 80

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to commemorate and interpret the events of the Battle of Corinth, which was fought on October 3, and 4, 1862, the Corinth battleground, in the State of Mississippi, including such adjacent and contiguous lands, waters, and interests therein as may be useful and proper in effectively carrying out the purposes of this Act, is established as a national military park, to be known as Corinth National Military Park (referred to as the "national military park").

(b) DESIGNATION.—(1) The national military park shall consist of such lands, waters and interests therein, not to exceed 500 acres, as the Secretary of the Interior (referred to as the "Secretary") shall designate in furtherance of this Act.

(2) A map of the lands and interests in land designated paragraph (1) shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior, and at the national military park.

(3) The Secretary may from time to time make minor revisions in the boundary of the national military park by publication of a revised map or other boundary description in the Federal Register, so long as the area of the national military park does not exceed 500 acres.

SEC. 2. ACQUISITION OF PROPERTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Within the national military park the Secretary may, subject to subsection (b), acquire—

(1) lands, waters, and interests therein by donation, purchase and donated or appropriated funds, or exchange;

(2) or personal property for use in connection with the administration of the national military park.

(b) PUBLICLY OWNED LANDS.—Lands, waters, or interests therein owned by the State of Mississippi or a political subdivision thereof may be acquired by the Secretary only by donation.

SEC. 3. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall administer the national military park in accordance with this Act and the law generally applicable to units of the national park system, including the Act entitled "An Act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", approved August 21, 1916 (39 Stat. 535; 16 U.S.C. 1, 2-4) and the Act of August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 666; 16 U.S.C. 461-467).

(b) MANAGEMENT PLAN.—Not later than 3 years after funds are made available for the purpose, the Secretary shall prepare and submit a general management plan for the national military park to the appropriate committees of the Congress.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out this Act.●

By Mr. SPECTER:

S. 18. A bill to establish constitutional procedures for the imposition of the death penalty for certain Federal offenses; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEATH PENALTY ACT OF 1991

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I am introducing an omnibus bill providing for the death penalty for a series of crimes: Murder by terrorists against U.S. citizens anywhere in the world; major narcotics traffickers; hijacking; murder by kidnappers, hostage takers and bank robbers; train-wrecking and explosives causing death; acts of espionage; murder by a Federal prisoner; Presidential assassination attempts; genocide; murder of court officers and jurors; and retaliatory killings of witnesses, victims and informants. Last Congress, I introduced both a bill to impose the death penalty on drug traffickers as well as a bill to subject terrorist-murderers to the death penalty.

As we all well know, the drug kingpin and terrorist-murder provisions, the two I specifically championed last Congress, as well as all the other provisions in this bill were passed either by the House or the Senate or both in the 101st Congress. None of them, however, ever made it through the House-Senate conference on the omnibus crime bill. I was not a member of the Senate panel involved in that conference and thus was not privy to what took place. I understand that the crime bill conferees met only in the last few days of the session and thus placed themselves under enormous time pressures. One might well wonder how every single death penalty provision was excised from the bill given that both Houses had overwhelmingly approved them. Whatever happened, the time is long overdue for Congress to bring back the death penalty.

I continue to believe that the death penalty is a very important weapon in the war against violent crime, most particularly including the war against drugs and the war against terrorists. Most people would be surprised to know that there had not been an effective Federal law imposing the death penalty from 1972 until 1988 when Congress finally enacted legislation providing for the death penalty for major drug dealers when death results. Yet, to this day, many Federal offenses which traditionally had called for the death penalty—treason and espionage; murder; Presidential assassination; explosives causing death; train wrecks causing death—have never had their death penalty provisions reintroduced. This bill would do just that.

Mr. President, this is not an easy matter. There are many who have conscientious scruples against the death penalty, and I respect their views. Nevertheless, this is a democracy and the Representatives of the people have spoken time and time again through a series of votes in both Houses in support of reimposition of the death penalty.

The bill that I am introducing today is the product of the give and take of last Congress' debates and is designed to provide all the safeguards necessary to ensure that the death penalty is properly invoked only in the most egregious circumstances. Crimes committed by children under 18 cannot result in the death penalty. The bill also prohibits the mentally retarded or mentally disabled from being executed. The bill provides for appointment of competent counsel and a special hearing for determining whether the death penalty is appropriate. At that hearing, all relevant information may be considered and all mitigating and aggravating factors will be looked at. The bill also provides for de novo review of any death sentence by the court of appeals.

When I served as district attorney of Philadelphia, from 1966 through 1974, I reviewed personally every case where the death penalty was to be requested. Out of some 500 homicides a year in the city of Philadelphia, the death penalty was requested in a very limited number of cases. A strict standard was applied because I felt it was necessary to be very restrained in the use of the death penalty, as a matter of fairness.

The death penalty was upheld as constitutional in Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153 (1976), and the views of Justice Stewart are illuminating in pointing out the very proper purposes of the death penalty. Justice Stewart wrote,

> Indeed, the decision that capital punishment may be the appropriate sanction in extreme cases is an expression of the community's belief that certain crimes are themselves so grievous an affront to humanity that the only adequate response may be the penalty of death. * * *
> In part, capital punishment is an expression of society's moral outrage at particularly offensive conduct. This function may be unappealing to many, but it is essential in an ordered society that asks its citizens to rely on legal processes rather than self-help to vindicate their wrongs.

Of course, the death penalty is not only an expression of society's moral outrage. I believe it also has a significant deterrent effect, although there are studies which go both ways. A very interesting study by Prof. Steven Gabison, an econometric analyst, comes to the conclusion, after studying some 7,092 executions between 1900 and 1985, that approximately 125,000 innocent lives have been saved by the death penalty. And, although there are studies going the other way, there are certain points at which the death penalty simply must serve as a deterrent. For example, I think it is hard to deny the necessity for an additional penalty for someone serving life imprisonment. Justice Stewart touched on this issue of deterrence in his opinion in Gregg versus Georgia:

> Although some of the studies suggest that the death penalty must not function as a significantly greater deterrent than lesser penalties, there is no convincing empirical evidence either supporting or refuting this view. We may, nevertheless, assume safely that there are murderers, such as those who act in passion, for whom the threat of death has little or no deterrent effect. But for many others, the death penalty undoubtedly is a significant deterrent. There are carefully contemplated murders, such as murder for hire, where the possible penalty of death may well enter into the cold calculus that precedes the decision to act. And there are some categories of murder, such as murder by those serving life sentences where other sanctions may not be adequate.

I am personally convinced that the death penalty is a deterrent based upon substantial experience I have had as a prosecuting attorney in cases where criminals undertaking a robbery did not take along a weapon because they were worried about the possibility of the death penalty. In a case involving the death penalty, a dissenting opinion by California Supreme Court Justice McComb set forth some 14 cases where criminals stated that they did not take along a weapon or they were concerned about killing because they feared the death penalty. People v. Love, 16 Cal. Rptr. 777, 784-793 (1961). For example, one bank robber, Louis Joseph Turck, used a toy gun in the robbery precisely because he feared that he would get the death penalty if he used a real one:

> I knew that if I used a real gun and that if I shot someone in a robbery, I might get the death penalty and go to the gas chamber.

Another criminal, Ramon Velarde, was apprehended while robbing a supermarket. Later on, he told investigators:

> I think I might have escaped at the market if I had shot one or more of them. I probably would have done it if it wasn't for the gas chamber. * * * I don't want to die no matter what happens, you want to live another day.

DRUG KINGPINS

Although this bill provides for the death penalty for a number of different crimes, I want to focus on two in particular: drug kingpins and terrorist-murderers. The bill provides for the death penalty or life in prison for major drug dealers who distribute large quantities of drugs or who take in $10 million from drug trafficking in any 12-month period as well as dealers who attempt to obstruct justice by threatening to kill witnesses and informants. Drugs are, by definition, addictive. The more people a drug dealer is able to "hook", then the better business will be. A major drug dealer increases the harm to society exponentially with each new regular customer. The harm comes about through overdose, the spreading of disease, families destroyed, and the increase in violence from addicts and the traffickers protecting their markets. The consequences are direct and foreseeable. The law recognizes that a person who fires a gun into a room that he knows is occupied by several people, who plays Russian roulette with another person, or who drives a car at high speed along a major street is engaging in conduct that involves a very high degree of unjustifiable homicidal dangers. It is time that major drug dealers, who have targeted every person in this country, will now have to face the ultimate for their conduct.

A good example of the type of major drug dealer we are talking about is Ricardo Melendez, recently found guilty of drug conspiracy, racketeering and money laundering in Federal court in Brooklyn, NY. According to the New York Daily News, dated December 24, 1990, Federal prosecutors report that Mr. Melendez dominated Brooklyn's heroin market. When Federal agents raided his Queens home and arrested Mr. Melendez 2 years ago, they found 300 pounds of cash—$2.38 million in 6-inch-high stacks of $10, $20, and $100 bills that blanketed the kitchen floor. They also found a jar of human teeth. Witnesses at the trial testified that those who double-crossed Mr. Melendez and his top lieutenants paid for it with maimings and mutilations—ice-pick stabbings, teeth pulled out, fingers chopped off. The teeth in the jar are believed to belong to a low-level worker of Mr. Melendez's accused of stealing money from his gang. Although I do not know the specifics of the charges against Mr. Melendez to know for certain whether he would face the electric chair if this bill were passed, Mr. Melendez, from the press reports, would appear to be the type of drug kingpin this bill is aimed at—a druglord who cannot be pinned with any particular murder but who, the evidence clearly shows, dealt in huge volumes of drugs. This bill is aimed at ensuring that druglords like Mr. Melendez get the ultimate punishment.

On September 19, 1989, during committee hearings on the death penalty, I engaged Assistant Attorney General Edward Dennis in a discussion of the constitutionality of the death penalty for major drug traffickers. As I stated to Mr. Dennis at the hearing, I believe that death is a natural and foreseeable consequence of massive sales of narcotics. I asked Mr. Dennis to study the issue and deliver an opinion. In a subsequent hearing on October 2, 1989, Mr. Dennis delivered the view of the Justice Department that:

> [I]mposition of the death penalty on the leaders of large-scale drug production and distribution operations would be consistent with the proportionality requirement of the Eighth Amendment.

A recent trilogy of cases provides additional support for the rationale behind my bill. In Tison v. Arizona, 107 S. Ct. 1676 (1987), Cabana v. Bullock, 474 U.S. 376 (1986), and Enmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782 (1982), the Supreme Court held that applying the death penalty to accomplices convicted of felony murder was not violative of the eighth amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.

TERRORIST-MURDERERS

The other provision I have vigorously advanced would impose the death penalty on terrorists who murder U.S. citizens anywhere. This provision is limited to terrorists who are convicted of first degree murder only in order to ensure that only the most heinous of terrorist criminal acts will result in the death sentence. When we recall just a few of the atrocities committed against Americans by those seeking to kill innocent American citizens in order to sway our Government's foreign policy, I think it becomes very apparent why the death penalty is an appropriate here.

On December 21, 1988, Pan Am flight 103 was blown up by a terrorist bomb over Lockerbie, Scotland, and 259 passengers were brutally murdered—79 of those 259 passengers were women and children, with 189 United States citizens.

On September 5, 1986, another Pan Am plane, this time at the airport in Karachi, Pakistan, was held by terrorists for 17 hours and gunmen indiscriminately exploded grenades and sprayed hostages with machinegun fire. Twenty-one civilians died and 100 were wounded.

On April 2, 1986, a bomb exploded on TWA flight 840 en route to Athens, Greece. Four Americans, including a mother and her infant child and the child's grandmother, were sucked out of the aircraft and fell to their death.

On December 17, 1985, at the Rome airport, 15 people were killed, including 5 Americans, and 73 wounded in a grenade and machine gun attack by the Abu Nidal group.

On October 7, 1985, Leon Klinghoffer, who was confined to a wheelchair, was savagely beaten and dumped overboard by terrorists holding the cruise ship, the Achille Lauro.

On June 14, 1985, passengers on TWA flight 847 endured a 17-day ordeal, where three U.S. citizens were repeatedly beaten by terrorists. Robert Stethem, a Navy diver, was not only savagely beaten, but was shot in the head, his body dumped out of the plane onto the airfield.

I could go on with a list of the many other terrorist actions which emanate from the Middle East, including the Americans taken hostage years ago in Lebanon, many of whom are still held today and who fear for their lives every day. Although most terrorist attacks seem to occur in the Middle East these days, that region does not have a monopoly on attacks committed against U.S. citizens. On May 25, 1989, Jeffrey Ball and Todd Wilson, two young Mormons doing missionary work in Bolivia, were executed gangland style on their doorsteps by terrorists for "violations of our national sovereignty." On June 13, 1988, two USAID subcontractors, one of whom was an American, were executed by Sendero Luminoso terrorists in Peru. Both men were ordered to lie on the ground and then were shot in the back of the head.

Some individuals—including a few of my colleagues—have questioned whether invoking the death penalty against terrorists will serve any deterrent effect. Truly, many terrorists are motivated primarily by fanaticism and will not think twice if they knew they faced the death sentence. However, as long as there is at least one terrorist who thinks twice about killing an American citizen for fear that he will be brought to justice in an American court—and the remarkable interdiction of convicted terrorist Fawaz Yunis off the coast of Cyprus by the FBI shows terrorists that this is a distinct possibility, then this death penalty provision will have been successful. Moreover, let us not forget that enacting this provision will also express our society's moral outrage at terrorism committed against our people abroad.

In sum, I believe that this omnibus death penalty bill is a worthy one, long overdue for passage. The American people have voiced their continued support for the death sentence in appropriate and limited circumstances; it is time for Congress to enact this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask for unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 18

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Death Penalty Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. DEATH PENALTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 227 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 228—DEATH PENALTY PROCEDURES

"Sec.
"3591. Sentence of death.
"3592. Factors to be considered in determining whether a sentence of death is justified.
"3593. Special hearing to determine whether a sentence of death is justified.
"3594. Imposition of a sentence of death.
"3595. Review of a sentence of death.

"3596. Implementation of a sentence of death.
"3597. Use of State facilities.
"3598. Appointment of counsel.
"3599. Collateral attack on judgment imposing sentence of death.

"§ 3591. Sentence of death

"A defendant who has been found guilty of—

"(1) an offense described in section 794 or section 2381 of this title;

"(2) an offense described in section 1751(c) of this title if the offense, as determined beyond a reasonable doubt at a hearing under section 3593, constitutes an attempt to murder the President of the United States or comes dangerously close to causing the death of the President; or

"(3) any other offense for which a sentence of death is provided, if the defendant, as determined beyond a reasonable doubt at a hearing under section 3593 either—

"(A) intentionally killed the victim;

"(B) intentionally participated in an act, contemplating that the life of a person would be taken or intending that lethal force would be used in connection with a person, other than one of the participants in the offense, and the victim died as a direct result of the act; or

"(C) acting with reckless disregard for human life, engaged or substantially participated in conduct which the defendant knew would create a grave risk of death to another person or persons and death resulted from such conduct, shall be sentenced to death if, after consideration of the factors set forth in section 3592 in the course of a hearing held under section 3593, it is determined that imposition of a sentence of death is justified, except that no person may be sentenced to death who was less than 18 years of age at the time of the offense.

"§ 3592. Factors to be considered in determining whether a sentence of death is justified

"(a) MITIGATING FACTORS.—In determining whether a sentence of death is justified for any offense, the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider each of the following mitigating factors and determine which, if any, exist:

"(1) MENTAL CAPACITY.—The defendant's mental capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of the defendant's conduct or to conform the defendant's conduct to the requirements of law was significantly impaired, regardless of whether the capacity was so impaired as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(2) DURESS.—The defendant was under unusual and substantial duress, regardless of whether the duress was of such a degree as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(3) PARTICIPATION IN OFFENSE MINOR.—The defendant is punishable as a principal (as defined in section 2 of title 18 of the United States Code) in the offense, which was committed by another, but the defendant's participation was relatively minor, regardless of whether the participation was so minor as to constitute a defense to the charge.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider whether any other aspect of the defendant's character or record or any other circumstances of the offense that the defendant may proffer as a mitigating factor exists.

"(b) AGGRAVATING FACTORS FOR ESPIONAGE AND TREASON.—In determining whether a sentence of death is justified for an offense described in section 3591(1), the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider each of the following aggravating factors and determine which, if any, exist:

"(1) PREVIOUS ESPIONAGE OR TREASON CONVICTION.—The defendant has previously been convicted of another offense involving espionage or treason for which a sentence of life imprisonment or death was authorized by statute.

"(2) RISK OF SUBSTANTIAL DANGER TO NATIONAL SECURITY.—In the commission of the offense the defendant knowingly created a grave risk to the national security.

"(3) RISK OF DEATH TO ANOTHER.—In the commission of the offense the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to another person.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, may consider whether any other aggravating factor exists.

"(c) AGGRAVATING FACTORS FOR HOMICIDE AND FOR ATTEMPTED MURDER OF THE PRESIDENT.—In determining whether a sentence of death is justified for an offense described in section 3591 (2) or (6), the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider each of the following aggravating factors and determine which, if any, exist:

"(1) DEATH OCCURRED DURING COMMISSION OF ANOTHER CRIME.—The death occurred during the commission or attempted commission of, or during the immediate flight from the commission of, an offense under section 751 (prisoners in custody of institution or officer), section 794 (gathering or delivering defense information to aid foreign government), section 844(d) (transportation of explosives in interstate commerce for certain purposes), section 844(f) (destruction of Government property by explosives), section 1118 (prisoners serving life term), section 1201 (kidnapping), or section 2381 (treason) of this title, section 1826 of title 28 (persons in custody as recalcitrant witnesses or hospitalized following a finding of not guilty only by reason of insanity), or section 902 (i) or (n) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended (49 U.S.C. 1472 (i) or (n) (aircraft piracy)).

"(2) INVOLVEMENT OF FIREARM OR PREVIOUS CONVICTION OF VIOLENT FELONY INVOLVING FIREARM.—The defendant—

"(A) during and in relation to the commission of the offense or in escaping apprehension used or possessed a firearm as defined in section 921 of this title; or

"(B) has previously been convicted of a Federal or State offense punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, involving the use or attempted or threatened use of a firearm, as defined in section 921 of this title, against another person.

"(3) PREVIOUS CONVICTION OF OFFENSE FOR WHICH A SENTENCE OF DEATH OR LIFE IMPRISONMENT WAS AUTHORIZED.—The defendant has previously been convicted of another Federal or State offense resulting in the death of a person, for which a sentence of life imprisonment or death was authorized by statute.

"(4) PREVIOUS CONVICTION OF OTHER SERIOUS OFFENSES.—The defendant has previously been convicted of 2 or more Federal or State offenses, each punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the importation, manufacture, or distribution of a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802)) or the infliction of, or attempted infliction of, serious bodily injury or death upon another person.

"(5) GRAVE RISK OF DEATH TO ADDITIONAL PERSONS.—The defendant, in the commission of the offense or in escaping apprehension, knowingly created a grave risk of death to one or more persons in addition to the victim of the offense.

"(6) HEINOUS, CRUEL, OR DEPRAVED MANNER OF COMMISSION.—The defendant committed the offense in an especially heinous, cruel, or depraved manner in that it involved torture or serious physical abuse to the victim.

"(7) PROCUREMENT OF OFFENSE BY PAYMENT.—The defendant procured the commission of the offense by payment, or promise of payment, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(8) COMMISSION OF THE OFFENSE FOR PECUNIARY GAIN.—The defendant committed the offense as consideration for the receipt, or in the expectation of the receipt, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(9) SUBSTANTIAL PLANNING AND PREMEDITATION.—The defendant committed the offense after substantial planning and premeditation.

"(10) VULNERABILITY OF VICTIM.—The victim was particularly vulnerable due to old age, youth, or infirmity.

"(11) TYPE OF VICTIM.—The defendant committed the offense against—

"(A) the President of the United States, the President-elect, the Vice President, the Vice President-elect, the Vice President-designate, or, if there is no Vice President, the officer next in order of succession to the office of the President of the United States, or any person who is acting as President under the Constitution and laws of the United States;

"(B) a chief of state, head of government, or the political equivalent, of a foreign nation;

"(C) a foreign official listed in section 1116(b)(3)(A) of this title, if that official is in the United States on official business; or

"(D) a public servant who is a Federal judge, a Federal law enforcement officer, an employee (including a volunteer or contract employee) of a Federal prison, or an official of the Federal Bureau of Prisons—

"(i) while such public servant is engaged in the performance of the public servant's official duties;

"(ii) because of the performance of such public servant's official duties; or

"(iii) because of such public servant's status as a public servant.

For purposes of this paragraph, the terms 'President-elect' and 'Vice President-elect' mean such persons as are the apparent successful candidates for the offices of President and Vice President, respectively, as ascertained from the results of the general elections held to determine the electors of President and Vice President in accordance with title 3, United States Code, sections 1 and 2; a 'Federal law enforcement officer' is a public servant authorized by law or by a government agency or Congress to conduct or engage in the prevention, investigation, or prosecution of an offense; 'Federal prison' means a Federal correctional, detention, or penal facility, Federal community treatment center, or Federal halfway house, or any such prison operated under contract with the Federal Government; and 'Federal judge' means any judicial officer of the United States, and includes a justice of the Supreme Court and a magistrate.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, may consider whether any other aggravating factor exists.

"§ 3593. Special hearing to determine whether a sentence of death is justified

"(a) NOTICE BY THE GOVERNMENT.—Whenever the Government intends to seek the death penalty for an offense described in section 3591, the attorney for the Government, a reasonable time before the trial, or before acceptance by the court of a plea of guilty, or at such time thereafter as the court may permit upon a showing of good cause, shall sign and file with the court, and serve on the defendant, a notice—

"(1) that the Government in the event of conviction will seek the sentence of death; and

"(2) setting forth the aggravating factor or factors enumerated in section 3592 and any other aggravating factor not specifically enumerated in section 3592, that the Government, if the defendant is convicted, will seek to prove as the basis for the death penalty.

The court may permit the attorney for the Government to amend the notice upon a showing of good cause.

"(b) HEARING BEFORE A COURT OR JURY.—When the attorney for the Government has filed a notice as required under subsection (a) of this section and the defendant is found guilty of an offense described in section 3591 of this title, the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered, or another judge if that judge is unavailable, shall conduct a separate sentencing hearing to determine the punishment to be imposed. Before such a hearing, no presentence report shall be prepared by the United States Probation Service, notwithstanding the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The hearing shall be conducted—

"(1) before the jury that determined the defendant's guilt;

"(2) before a jury impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if—

"(A) the defendant was convicted upon a plea of guilty;

"(B) the defendant was convicted after a trial before the court sitting without a jury;

"(C) the jury that determined the defendant's guilt was discharged for good cause; or

"(D) after initial imposition of a sentence under this section, reconsideration of the sentence under the section is necessary; or

"(3) before the court alone, upon motion of the defendant and with the approval of the attorney for the Government.

A jury impaneled pursuant to paragraph (2) shall consist of 12 members, unless, at any time before the conclusion of the hearing, the parties stipulate, with the approval of the court, that it shall consist of a lesser number.

"(c) PROOF OF MITIGATING AND AGGRAVATING FACTORS.—At the hearing, information may be presented as to—

"(1) any matter relating to any mitigating factor listed in section 3592 and any other mitigating factor; and

"(2) any matter relating to any aggravating factor listed in section 3592 for which notice has been provided under subsection (a)(2) and (if information is presented relating to such a listed factor) any other aggravating factor for which notice has been so provided.

Information presented may include the trial transcript and exhibits. Any other information relevant to such mitigating or aggravating factors may be presented by either the government or the defendant, regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing admission of evidence at criminal trials, except that information may be excluded if its probative value is outweighed by the danger of creating unfair prejudice, confusing the issues, or misleading the jury. The attorney for the Government and for the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing, and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any aggravating or mitigating factor, and as to the appropriateness in that case of imposing a sentence of death. The attorney for the Government shall open the argument. The defendant shall be permitted to reply. The Government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal. The burden of establishing the existence of an aggravating factor is on the Government, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden of establishing the existence of any mitigating factor is on the defendant, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established by a preponderance of the evidence.

"(d) RETURN OF SPECIAL FINDINGS.—The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider all of the information received during the hearing. It shall return special findings identifying any aggravating factor or factors set forth in section 3592 of this title found to exist and any other aggravating factor for which notice has been provided under subsection (a) found to exist. A finding with respect to a mitigating factor may be made by one or more members of the jury, and any member of the jury who finds the existence of a mitigating factor may consider such factor established for purposes of this section regardless of the number of jurors who concur that the factor has been established. A finding with respect to any aggravating factor must be unanimous. If no aggravating factor set forth in section 3592 of this title is found to exist, the court shall impose a sentence other than death authorized by law.

"(e) RETURN OF A FINDING CONCERNING A SENTENCE OF DEATH.—If, in the case of—

"(1) an offense described in section 3591(1) of this title, an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(b) of this title is found to exist; or

"(2) an offense described in section 3591 (2) or (6) of this title, an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(c) of this title is found to exist;

the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall then consider whether the aggravating factor or factors found to exist outweigh any mitigating factor or factors. The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall recommend a sentence of death if it unanimously finds at least one aggravating factor and no mitigating factor or if it finds one or more aggravating factors which outweigh any mitigating factors. In any other case, it shall not recommend a sentence of death. The jury shall be instructed that it must avoid any influence of sympathy, sentiment, passion, prejudice, or other arbitrary factors in its decision, and should make such a recommendation as the information warrants.

"(f) SPECIAL PRECAUTION TO ASSURE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION.—In a hearing held before a jury, the court, before the return of a finding under subsection (e) of this section, shall instruct the jury that, in considering whether a sentence of death is justified, it shall not consider the race, color, religious beliefs, national origin, or sex of the defendant or of any victim and that the jury is not to recommend a sentence of death unless it has concluded that it would recommend a sentence of death for the crime in question no matter what the race, color, religious beliefs, national origin, or sex of the defendant or of any victim may be. The jury, upon return of a finding under subsection (e) of this section, shall also return to the court a certificate, signed by each juror, that consideration of the race, color, religious beliefs, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim was not involved in reaching the juror's individual decision and that the individual juror would have made the same recommendation regarding a sentence for the crime in question no matter what the race, color, religious beliefs, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim may be.

"§ 3594. Imposition of a sentence of death

"Upon the recommendation under section 3593(e) of this title that a sentence of death be imposed, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Otherwise the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the maximum term of imprisonment for the offense is life imprisonment, the court may impose a sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of release or furlough.

"§ 3595. Review of a sentence of death

"(a) APPEAL.—In a case in which a sentence of death is imposed, the sentence shall be subject to review by the court of appeals upon appeal by the defendant. Notice of appeal of the sentence must be filed within the time specified for the filing of a notice of appeal of the judgment of conviction. An appeal of the sentence under this section may be consolidated with an appeal of the judgment of conviction and shall have priority over all other cases.

"(b) REVIEW.—The court of appeals shall review the entire record in the case, including—

"(1) the evidence submitted during the trial;

"(2) the information submitted during the sentencing hearing;

"(3) the procedures employed in the sentencing hearing; and

"(4) the special findings returned under section 3593(d) of this title.

"(c) DECISION AND DISPOSITION.—

"(1) If the court of appeals determines that—

"(A) the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor; and

"(B) the evidence and information support the special findings of the existence of an aggravating factor or factors; it shall affirm the sentence.

"(2) In any other case, the court of appeals shall remand the case for reconsideration under section 3593 of this title or for imposition of another authorized sentence as appropriate.

"(3) The court of appeals shall state in writing the reasons for its disposition of an appeal of sentence of death under this section.

"§ 3596. Implementation of a sentence of death

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A person who has been sentenced to death pursuant to this chapter shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General until exhaustion of the procedures for appeal of the judgment of conviction and for review of the sentence. When the sentence is to be implemented, the Attorney General shall release the person sentenced to death to the custody of a United States marshal, who shall supervise implementation of the sentence in the manner prescribed by the law of the State in which the sentence is imposed. If the law of such State does not provide for implementation of a sentence of death, the court shall designate another State, the law of which does so provide, and the sentence shall be implemented in the manner prescribed by such law.

"(b) IMPAIRED MENTAL CAPACITY, AGE, OR PREGNANCY.—A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who is under 18 years of age at the time the crime was committed. A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who is mentally retarded. A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who, as a result of mental disability—

"(1) cannot understand the nature of the pending proceedings, what such person was tried for, the reason for the punishment, or the nature of the punishment; or

"(2) lacks the capacity to recognize or understand facts which would make the punishment unjust or unlawful or lacks the ability to convey such information to counsel or to the court.

A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a woman while she is pregnant.

"(c) EMPLOYEES MAY DECLINE TO PARTICIPATE.—No employee of any State department of corrections or the Federal Bureau of Prisons and no employee providing services to that department or bureau under contract shall be required, as a condition of that employment or contractual obligation, to be in attendance at or to participate in any execution carried out under this section, if such participation is contrary to the moral or religious convictions of the employee. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'participate in any execution' includes personal preparation of the condemned individual and the apparatus used for the execution, and supervision of the activities of other personnel in carrying out such activities.

"§ 3597. Use of State facilities

"A United States marshal charged with supervising the implementation of a sentence of death may use appropriate State or local facilities for the purpose, may use the services of an appropriate State or local official or of a person such as an official employed for the purpose, and shall pay the costs thereof in an amount approved by the Attorney General.

"§ 3598. Appointment of counsel

"(a) FEDERAL CAPITAL CASES.—

"(1) REPRESENTATION OF INDIGENT DEFENDANTS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, this subsection shall govern the appointment of counsel for any defendant against whom a sentence of death is sought, or on whom a sentence of death has been imposed, for an offense against the United States, where the defendant is or becomes financially unable to obtain adequate representation. Such a defendant shall be entitled to appointment of counsel from the commencement of trial proceedings until one of the conditions specified in section 3599(b) of this title has occurred.

"(2) REPRESENTATION BEFORE FINALITY OF JUDGMENT.—A defendant within the scope of this subsection shall have counsel appointed for trial representation as provided in section 3005 of this title. At least one counsel so appointed shall continue to represent the defendant until the conclusion of direct review of the judgment, unless replaced by the court with other qualified counsel.

"(3) REPRESENTATION AFTER FINALITY OF JUDGMENT.—When a judgment imposing a sentence of death has become final through affirmance by the Supreme Court on direct review, denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court on direct review, or expiration of the time for seeking direct review in the court of appeals or the Supreme Court, the Government shall promptly notify the district court that imposed the sentence. Within 10 days of receipt of such notice, the district court shall proceed to make a determination whether the defendant is eligible under this subsection for appointment of counsel for subsequent proceedings. On the basis of the determination, the court shall issue an order (A) appointing one or more counsel to represent the defendant upon a finding that the defendant is financially unable to obtain adequate representation and wishes to have counsel appointed or is unable competently to decide whether to accept or reject appointment of counsel; (B) finding, after a hearing if necessary, that the defendant rejected appointment of counsel and made the decision with an understanding of its legal consequences; or (C) denying the appointment of counsel upon a finding that the defendant is financially able to obtain adequate representation. Counsel appointed pursuant to this paragraph shall be different from the counsel who represented the defendant at trial and on direct review unless the defendant and counsel request a continuation or renewal of the earlier representation.

"(4) STANDARDS FOR COMPETENCE OF COUNSEL.—In relation to a defendant who is entitled to appointment of counsel under this subsection, at least one counsel appointed for trial representation must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least 3 years of experience in the trial of felony cases in the Federal district courts. If new counsel is appointed after judgment, at least one counsel so appointed must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least 3 years of experience in the litigation of felony cases in the Federal courts of appeals or the Supreme Court. The court, for good cause, may appoint counsel who does not meet these standards, but whose background, knowledge, or experience would otherwise enable him or her to properly represent the defendant, with due consideration of the seriousness of the penalty and the nature of the litigation.

"(5) APPLICABILITY OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the provisions of section 3006A of this title shall apply to appointments under this subsection.

"(6) CLAIMS OF INEFFECTIVENESS OF COUNSEL.—The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during proceedings on a motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, in a capital case shall not be a ground for relief from the judgment or sentence in any proceeding. This limitation shall not preclude the appointment of different counsel at any stage of the proceedings.

"(b) STATE CAPITAL CASES.—The laws of the United States shall not be construed to impose any requirement with respect to the appointment of counsel in any proceeding in a State court or other State proceeding in a capital case, other than any requirement imposed by the Constitution of the United States. In a proceeding under section 2254 of title 28, United States Code, relating to a State capital case, or any subsequent proceeding on review, appointment of counsel for a petitioner who is or becomes financially unable to afford counsel shall be in the discretion of the court, except as provided by a rule promulgated by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority. Such appointment of counsel shall be governed by the provisions of section 3006A of this title.

"§ 3599. Collateral attack on judgment imposing sentence of death

"(a) TIME FOR MAKING SECTION 2255 MOTION.—In a case in which a sentence of death has been imposed, and the judgment has become final as described in section 3598(a)(3) of this title, a motion in the case under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, must be filed within 90 days of the issuance of the order relating to appointment of counsel under section 3598(a)(3) of this title. The court in which the motion is filed, for good cause shown, may extend the time for filing for a period not exceeding 60 days. A motion described in this section shall have priority over all noncapital matters in the district court, and in the court of appeals on review of the district court's decision.

"(b) STAY OF EXECUTION.—The execution of a sentence of death shall be stayed in the course of direct review of the judgment and during the litigation of an initial motion in the case under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code. The stay shall run continuously following imposition of the sentence and shall expire if—

"(1) the defendant fails to file a motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, within the time specified in subsection (a), or fails to make a timely application for court of appeals review following the denial of such a motion by a district court;

"(2) upon completion of district court and court of appeals review under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, the motion under that section is denied and (A) the time for filing a petition for certiorari has expired and no petition has been filed; (B) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and the Supreme Court denied the petition; or (C) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and upon consideration of the case, the Supreme Court disposed of it in a manner that left the capital sentence undisturbed; or

"(3) before a district court, in the presence of counsel and after having been advised of the consequences of his decision, the defendant waives the right to file a motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code.

"(c) FINALITY OF THE DECISION ON REVIEW.—If one of the conditions specified in subsection (b) has occurred, no court thereafter shall have the authority to enter a stay of execution or grant relief in the case unless—

"(1) the basis for the stay and request for relief is a claim not presented in earlier proceedings;

"(2) the failure to raise the claim is (A) the result of governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States; (B) the result of the Supreme Court recognition of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable; or (C) based on a factual predicate that could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim in earlier proceedings; and

"(3) the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient, if proven, to undermine the court's confidence in the determination of guilt on the offense or offenses for which the death penalty was imposed.".

"(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters at the beginning of part II of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 227 the following new item:

"228. Death penalty procedures .... 3591".

SEC. 3. CONFORMING AMENDMENT RELATING TO DESTRUCTION OF AIRCRAFT OR AIRCRAFT FACILITIES.

"(a)(1) Whoever kills or attempts to kill another person with intent to retaliate against any person for—

"(A) the attendance of a witness or party at an official proceeding, or any testimony given or any record, document, or other object produced by a witness in an official proceeding; or

"(B) any information relating to the commission or possible commission of a Federal offense or a violation of conditions of probation, parole, or release pending judicial proceedings given by a person to a law enforcement officer; shall be punished as provided in paragraph (2).

"(2) The punishment for an offense under this subsection is—

"(A) in the case of a killing, the punishment provided in sections 1111 and 1112 of this title; and

"(B) in the case of an attempt, imprisonment for not more than 20 years.".

SEC. 25. APPLICATION TO DRUG KINGPINS.

Title II of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 408 the following:

"DEATH PENALTY FOR DRUG KINGPINS

"SEC. 408A (a) IN GENERAL.—A defendant who has been found guilty of—

"(1) an offense referred to in section 408(c)(1) (21 U.S.C. 848(c)(1)), committed as part of a continuing criminal enterprise offense under the conditions described in subsection (b) of that section;

"(2) an offense referred to in section 408(c)(1) (21 U.S.C. 848(c)(1)), committed as part of a continuing criminal enterprise offense under that section, where the defendant is a principal administrator, organizer or leader of such an enterprise, and the defendant, in order to obstruct the investigation or prosecution of an enterprise or an offense involved in the enterprise, attempts to kill or knowingly directs, advises, authorizes, or assists another to attempt to kill any public officer, juror, witness, or member of the family or household of such a person; or

"(3) an offense constituting a felony violation of this Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substance Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), or the Maritime-Drug Law Enforcement Act (46 U.S.C. App. 1901 et seq.), where the defendant, intending to cause death or acting with reckless disregard for human life, engaged in such a violation, and the death of another person results in the course of the violation or from the use of the controlled substance involved in the violation, shall be sentenced to death if, after consideration of the procedures set forth in chapter 228 of title 18, United States Code, and subject to the consideration of the additional aggravating factors set forth in subsection (b), it is determined that imposition of a sentence of death is justified.

"(b) ADDITIONAL AGGRAVATING FACTORS.—In addition to the aggravating factors set forth in section 3592(c) of title 18, United States Code, the following aggravating factors shall be considered in determining whether a sentence of death is justified for an offense under this section:

"(1) DISTRIBUTION TO PERSONS UNDER TWENTY-ONE.—The offense, or a continuing criminal enterprise of which the offense was a part, involved a violation of section 405 of this Act which was committed directly by the defendant or for which the defendant would be liable under section 2 of title 18, United States Code.

"(2) DISTRIBUTION NEAR SCHOOLS.—The offense, or a continuing criminal enterprise of which the offense was a part, involved a violation of section 405A of this Act which was committed directly by the defendant or for which the defendant would be liable under section 2 of title 18, United States Code.

"(3) USING MINORS IN TRAFFICKING.—The offense, or a continuing criminal enterprise of which the offense was a part, involved a violation of section 405B of this Act which was committed directly by the defendant or for which the defendant would be liable under section 2 of title 18, United States Code.

"(4) LETHAL ADULTERANT.—The offense involved the importation, manufacture, or distribution of a controlled substance mixed with a potentially lethal adulterant, and the defendant was aware of the presence of the adulterant.".

By Mr. SPECTER:

S. 19. A bill to provide expedited procedures for the consideration of habeas corpus petitions in capital cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXPEDITED HABEAS CORPUS PROCEDURES IN CAPITAL CASES

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, in the 101st Congress, the Senate passed, as part of S. 1970, an amendment I had offered to reform habeas corpus procedures in death penalty cases. After extensive debate, the Senate initially rejected my amendment, but adopted my motion to reconsider, 52 to 46. Thereupon, my amendment was adopted by voice vote. Unfortunately, upon the insistence of House conferees, this important provision of last year's Senate crime bill was dropped from the legislation approved by the Conference Committee. Therefore, I have today introduced the Federal Habeas Corpus Reform Act of 1991, S. 19, which is identical to the amendment adopted by the Senate on May 24, 1990.

This proposed legislation, "The Federal Habeas Corpus Reform Act of 1991", establishes a timeframe for imposition of the death penalty in State criminal cases that will again make that penalty meaningful. The scope of the problem is demonstrated by the fact that as of December 1, 1990, there were approximately 2,400 people on death row with 143 executions since the reinstatement of capital punishment in 1976.

When Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist said last year that the current system for handling death penalty in the Federal courts "verges on the chaotic", he was being charitable. The existing process makes a farce of the death penalty. Chief Justice Rehnquist was correct in calling for remedial legislation; but his proposal and the other pending measures do not go far enough in dealing with the core of the problem.

Today the death penalty is the laughing stock of the criminal justice system because endless delays in Federal court habeas corpus proceedings have rendered it meaningless. Cases involving capital punishment are dragged through the courts for as long as 17 years.

Before a case finds its way through the court system, intervening decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States frequently establish new constitutional rights which, in turn, causes the litigation process to begin anew. The great writ of habeas corpus is always available, so stays of proceedings repeatedly delay the imposition of the death penalty resulting in public scorn and criminals' contempt for a penalty which all know will probably never be imposed.

This legislative proposal is based on my experience in personally handling numerous State and Federal court habeas corpus proceedings as an assistant district attorney and chief of the appeals division in the district attorney's office and later supervising hundreds of such cases as district attorney of Philadelphia.

A PRACTICAL, JUST TIMETABLE

This proposed legislation establishes a timetable for imposition of the death penalty in almost all cases within 1 year from the time the State courts impose the death penalty. The essential provisions are:

First, elimination of State habeas corpus proceedings which involve enormous delays by providing for collateral attack on the judgment of sentence of death.

Second, a single Federal court review, through habeas corpus proceedings, where almost all cases will be decided within 1 year on this schedule:

(a) Federal habeas corpus petitions must be filed within 60 days from the final action in the State court proceeding resulting in the death penalty.

(b) A final decision must be made by the U.S. district court within 110 days from the filing of the habeas corpus petition.

(c) A final decision must be made by the U.S. court of appeals within 110 days after the final judgment of the U.S. district court.

(d) Final action on a grant or denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court of the United States must be made within 110 days from final judgment of the court of appeals.

Third, the statute would prohibit continuances on filing a petition except on the showing of good cause with a detailed specification of reasons by any court granting such continuance.

Fourth, no subsequent Federal court habeas corpus petition shall be entertained unless specific leave for such filing is granted by the court of appeals for the circuit with jurisdiction and then only for limited reasons.

Fifth, the proposed expedited treatment of Federal habeas corpus proceedings would apply only in States which agree to provide free, competent legal counsel for defendants throughout the legal process in capital cases.

This compressed timeframe is both just and practical because it eliminates the long delays occasioned by State habeas corpus proceedings and establishes Federal habeas corpus death penalty proceedings as the highest priority in the Federal judicial system.

For reasons discussed in this floor statement, the death penalty is sufficiently important to be accorded this priority on the Federal court calendar with the addition of such Federal judges as may be necessary to accomplish the stipulated timetable.

The essence of effectiveness of any criminal sentence is swiftness and certainty. Today the death penalty is exactly the opposite: lengthy delays and great uncertainty. Its deterrent effect is virtually totally vitiated. Society is unprotected. The inmates on death row are unfairly held in limbo in a system which exacts a high price from them even though obviously preferable to the ultimate imposition of the death penalty.

RETROACTIVE EFFECT TO NEWLY CREATED RIGHTS

My bill accommodates two vexing issues posed by other pending legislative proposals. Sharp disagreement has arisen as to whether rights created by intervening court rulings should be given retroactive effect to prisoners whose convictions were already final and who were in the process of seeking habeas corpus relief. Under existing law where the habeas corpus proceedings have taken years to complete, it has been a frequent occurrence for the courts to interpret new constitutional rights in the interim. On this proposed timetable for completion of Federal court habeas corpus actions within 1 year, that problem will be greatly reduced.

In my judgment it is neither conscionable nor realistic to carry out the death penalty where that result might be altered by a constitutional right created by an intervening judicial opinion. My proposed legislation would allow the defendant to benefit from any newly created rights, but would greatly minimize this problem by compressing the timetable.

STANDARD FOR NEW PETITION

My proposal would eliminate much of the controversy between the recommendation of the committee chaired by former Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr. which had proposed permitting successive petitions only if there was reason to doubt the defendant's guilt contrasted with the approach of the judicial conference which would allow a subsequent petition if the Federal judge doubted the appropriateness of the sentence of death. By establishing the court of appeals as the gatekeeper before leave is granted to file a subsequent petition, there would be a much tighter rein on such repetitious provisions.

Here again, it is unwise, if not unconscionable, to impose a more restrictive provision where the death penalty will be carried out. Since the death sentence carries with it conclusions of both guilt and sufficient aggravated circumstances to warrant that penalty, it is my judgment that the standards for allowing a subsequent petition should be broad enough to consider the appropriateness of the death sentence. Requiring leave by the circuit court before the subsequent petition may be filed provides a strong check against unmeritorious repetitive petitions.

STATE HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS SHOULD BE ELIMINATED

State habeas corpus proceedings, which provide for collateral attack on State court death penalty cases, involve lengthy delays and accomplish virtually nothing in the administration of justice. Such State habeas corpus proceedings involve a petition for a writ of habeas corpus which means in Latin to produce the body of the defendant on a showing that some error has been committed in the preceding State trial.

For example, in Pennsylvania a defendant is indicated on the charge of murder in the first degree, which is then tried before a jury in the court of common pleas. If convicted of murder in the first degree, the jury then considers aggravating and mitigating circumstances to determine whether the appropriate penalty is life imprisonment or death in the electric chair. Where the jury imposes the death penalty, there is an appeal to the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. If the conviction and death penalty are upheld by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, the defendant may then petition the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari which means that the U.S. Supreme Court then may, at its discretion, issue a writ to review the case. As a matter of practice, review by the U.S. Supreme Court occurs very, very infrequently.

After a denial by the Supreme Court of the United States of a petition for a writ of certiorari, Federal law requires the defendant to file a State habeas corpus proceeding in order to exhaust all State administrative remedies before the Federal court would have jurisdiction to review the case in a Federal habeas corpus action.

In the State court habeas corpus proceeding, the defendant then asks the court of common pleas in the same county where the defendant was convicted to review the trial record on a claim that the defendant's constitutional rights were violated in that trial. While the State habeas corpus proceeding is in the court of common pleas of the same county, it is customary before a different judge to handle the second proceeding. Although in some lesser populated counties where there is only one common pleas judge, the habeas corpus action comes before the same jurist.

Where questions of fact are raised in the petition, the Court will then hold an evidentiary hearing. Such hearings are virtually always perfunctory since the courts, realistically viewed, go through the motions on cases which have previously been argued and adjudicated. In virtually all cases, the petitions for a writ of habeas corpus are denied because most, if not all, of the issues have already been decided against the defendant by the State supreme court.

After the court of common pleas denies the petition for writ of habeas corpus, an appeal is then taken to the State supreme court which customarily affirms the lower court's denial of the petition because, here again, the State supreme court is reviewing a case and a defendant on which the court has already ruled. After the Supreme Court of the United States denies a petition for a writ of certiorari, the defendant then has standing to file a habeas corpus proceeding in the Federal courts.

This State habeas corpus proceeding frequently takes years because no one is in a hurry, the courts are clogged with other cases and it has become the common practice for such matters to languish since the defendant is in jail and other matters take precedence. At this juncture, the defendant may file a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the U.S. district court and the habeas corpus process is repeated. Where issues of fact arise, a hearing is held. After an adjudication by the district court, an appeal is then taken to the U.S. Court of Appeals. After the decision by the court of appeals, a petition is filed for writ of certiorari with the Supreme Court of the United States. This Federal court process may again take years.

By the time the State and Federal court habeas corpus proceedings have been concluded, it frequently occurs that an intervening decision by the Supreme Court of the United States or other court has created—or at least the defendant may colorably argue—new defendants' rights which provides some basis for a new attack on the conviction and death sentence. Then the whole habeas corpus starts anew in the State courts to be followed by the Federal courts. At the end of that process, it again frequently occurs that some intervening decision has or appears to have established some new defendants' rights and the process can then be repeated virtually interminably.

This proposed legislation would eliminate the State habeas corpus proceeding as a precondition to the Federal habeas corpus proceeding because the State process is usually a formality; and, in any event, is unnecessary to determine any denial of constitutional right at trial. Any such legal issues can be adequately litigated in the Federal habeas corpus proceeding.

IMPORTANCE OF THE DEATH PENALTY-DETERRENCE

This proposed legislation would give the highest priority in the Federal courts to State capital cases because of their importance in our criminal justice system. It should really be unnecessary to prove that capital punishment is a deterrent in order to justify priority treatment in the Federal courts since 37 States impose the death penalty on their legislative judgments of its importance.

Beyond that strong statement of importance, it is my firm conclusion that the death penalty is a deterrent. My experience in this field started in 1959 when I was an assistant district attorney in the city of Philadelphia. From experience in the magistrates' courts, where I saw the full range of criminal conduct—robberies and burglaries and rapes and assaults and murders—I became convinced that the death penalty was an effective deterrent.

My later experience as district attorney further supported my judgment that the death penalty was a deterrent. Robbers, burglars and other professional criminals customarily do not carry weapons because of their concern that they may use those weapons and face possible imposition of the death penalty. They reconsider the use of weapons in the course of a robbery or burglary because they do not want to face the possibility of the death penalty.

One illustrative case from the Philadelphia Criminal Courts some 30 years ago involved three young hoodlums named Williams, Caters, and Rivers. Williams was 19, Caters was 18, and Rivers was 17. Williams chose Rivers, the 17-year-old, because he did not have a criminal record and, therefore, could open the door of the grocery store they planned to rob without leaving fingerprints.

As the statements of Williams and Rivers and Caters disclosed—and they were all in agreement on the underlying planning of the robbery which resulted in murder—Williams importuned the two younger men to join him. Williams had a gun. When Williams brandished his gun, Caters and Rivers said "they would not go along on the robbery if he took the gun, because they were afraid that there might be a killing and they would face the possibility of the death penalty."

So Williams put the revolver in a drawer and slammed it shut. Caters and Rivers got up and walked out of the room. Then, unbeknownst to Caters and Rivers, Williams pulled the gun out of the drawer, put it in his pocket, and, as you have suspected, Williams used the revolver on a storekeeper in north Philadelphia, and a murder resulted.

I argued the case on appeal in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, as an assistant district attorney in the early 1960's. Williams received the death penalty because of his calculated, malicious decision to carry the weapon in the course of a robbery which resulted in death and first-degree murder.

Caters and Rivers ultimately received life imprisonment because the facts showed that they did not have the degree of malice that Williams possessed, although technically, as a matter of law, any co-conspirator can be held to the same level of complicity.

The significant fact of this case is that a 17-year-old like Rivers and an 18-year-old like Caters, with marginal IQ's knew that the death penalty was a potential result of their robbery if a gun was carried. The prospect of the death penalty directly affected the conduct of Caters and Rivers.

An experienced ex-New York City police officer who serves on my staff, Tom Madine, commented about the increases in murder in New York State as a result of the death penalty having been eliminated there.

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES ON DETERRENCE

A dissenting opinion in a 1961 California case captioned People versus Love contains a summary of many cases which show the deterrent effect of capital punishment. These cases are worth citing here because the specific facts and the defendants' statements demonstrate human nature on deterrence much more vividly than dry statistics. Mr. Justice McComb wrote:

> Any prosecuting attorney or criminal defense attorney or any trial judge who has sat for a substantial period in a department of the superior court devoted to the trial of felony cases knows that many felons are careful to refrain from arming themselves with a deadly weapon because they do not want to take the chance of killing anyone and suffering death as a penalty.
> A few recent examples of the accuracy of this view are to be found in the following cases involving persons arrested by officers of the Los Angeles Police Department:[1]
> (i) Margaret Elizabeth Daly, of San Pedro, was arrested August 28, 1961, for assaulting Pete Gibbons with a knife. She stated to investigating officers: "Yeh, I cut him and I should have done a better job. I would have killed him but I didn't want to go to the gas chamber."
> (ii) Robert D. Thomas, alias Robert Hall, an ex-convict from Kentucky; Melvin Eugene Young, alias Gene Wilson, a petty criminal from Iowa and Illinois; and Shirley R. Coffee, alias Elizabeth Salquist, of California, were arrested April 25, 1961, for robbery. They had used toy pistols to force their victims into rear rooms, where the victims were bound. When questioned by the investigating officers as to the reason for using toy guns instead of genuine guns, all three agreed that real guns were too dangerous, as if someone were killed in the commission of the robberies, they could all receive the death penalty.
> (iii) Louis Joseph Turek; alias Luigi Furchiano, alias Joseph Farino, alias Glenn Hooper, alias Joe Moreno, an ex-convict with a felony record dating from 1941, was arrested May 20, 1961, for robbery. He had used guns in prior robberies in other states but simulated a gun in the robbery here. He told investigating officers that he was aware of the California death penalty although he had been in this state for only one month, and said, when asked why he had only simulated a gun, "I knew that if I used a real gun and that if I shot someone in a robbery I might get the death penalty and go the gas chamber".
> (iv) Ramon Jesse Velarde was arrested September 26, 1960, while attempting to rob a supermarket. At that time, armed with a loaded .38 caliber revolver, he was holding several employees of the market as hostages. He subsequently escaped from jail and was apprehended at the Mexican border. While being returned to Los Angeles for prosecution, he made the following statement to the transporting officers: "I think I might have escaped at the market if I had shot one or more of them. I probably would have done it if it wasn't for the gas chamber. I'll only do 7 or 10 years for this. I don't want to die no matter what happens, you want to live another day."
> (v) Orelius Mathew Stewart, an ex-convict with a long felony record, was arrested March 3, 1960, for attempted bank robbery. He was subsequently convicted and sentenced to the state prison. While discussing the matter with his probation officer, he stated: "The officer who arrested me was by himself, and if I had wanted, I could have blasted him. I thought about it at the time, but I changed my mind when I thought of the gas chamber".
> (vi) Paul Anthony Brusseau, with a criminal record in six other states, was arrested February 6, 1960, for robbery. He readily admitted five holdups of candy stores in Los Angeles. In this series of robberies he had only simulated a gun. When questioned by investigators as to the reason for his simulating a gun rather than using a real one, he replied that he did not want to get the gas chamber.
> (vii) Salvador A. Estrada, a 19-year-old youth with a four-year criminal record, was arrested February 2, 1960, just after he had stolen an automobile from a parking lot by wiring around the ignition switch. As he was being booked at the station, he stated to the arresting officers: "I want to ask you one question, do you think they will repeal the capital punishment law. If they do, we can kill all you cops and judges without worrying about it".
> (viii) Jack Colevris, a habitual criminal with a record dating back to 1945, committed an armed robbery at a supermarket on April 25, 1960, about a week after escaping from San Quentin Prison. Shortly thereafter he was stopped by a motorcycle officer. Colevris, who had twice been sentenced to the state prison for armed robbery, knew that if brought to trial, he would again be sent to prison for a long term. The loaded revolver was on the seat of the automobile beside him and he could easily have shot and killed the arresting officer. By his own statements to interrogating officers, however, he was deterred from this action because he preferred a possible life sentence to death in the gas chamber.
> (ix) Edward Joseph Lapienski, who had a criminal record dating back to 1948, was arrested in December 1959 for a holdup committed with a toy automatic type pistol. When questioned by investigators as to why he had threatened his victim with death and had not provided himself with the means of carrying out the threat, he stated, "I know that if I had a real gun and killed someone, I would get the gas chamber".
> (x) George Hewlitt Dixon, an ex-convict with a long felony record in the East, was arrested for robbery and kidnapping committed on November 27, 1959. Using a screwdriver in his jacket pocket to simulate a gun, he had held up and kidnaped the attendant of a service station, later releasing him unharmed. When questioned about his using a screwdriver to simulate a gun, this man, a hardened criminal with many felony arrests and at least two known escapes from custody, indicated his fear and respect for the California death penalty and stated, "I did not want to get the gas".
> (xi) Eugene Freeland Fitzgerald, alias Edward Finley, an ex-convict with a felony record dating back to 1951, was arrested February 2, 1960, for the robbery of a chain of candy stores. He used a toy gun in committing the robberies, and when questioned by the investigating officers as to his reasons for doing so, he stated: "I know I'm going to the joint and probably for life. If I had a real gun and killed someone, I would get the gas. I would rather have it this way".
> (xii) Quentin Lawson, an ex-convict on parole, was arrested January 24, 1959, for committing two robberies, in which he had simulated a gun in his coat pocket. When questioned on his reason for simulating a gun and not using a real one, he replied that he did not want to kill someone and get the death penalty.
> (xiii) Theodore Roosevelt Cornell, with many aliases, an ex-convict from Michigan

[1] The cases cited are taken from the records on file in the Los Angeles Police Department.

with a criminal record of 26 years, was arrested December 31, 1958, while attempting to hold up the box office of a theater. He had simulated a gun in his coat pocket, and when asked by investigating officers why an ex-convict with everything to lose would not use a real gun, he replied, "If I used a real gun and shot someone, I could lose my life".

(xiv) Robert Ellis Blood, Daniel B. Gridley, and Richard R. Hurst were arrested December 3, 1958, for attempted robbery. They were equipped with a roll of cord and a toy pistol. When questioned, all of them stated that they used the toy pistol because they did not want to kill anyone, as they were aware that the penalty for killing a person in a robbery was death in the gas chamber".

REALISTIC TIMETABLE

It is realistic to establish a timetable for the full range of Federal habeas corpus proceedings within 1 year. A key factor is the requirement that the States must provide competent free counsel to defendants in capital cases through all legal proceedings. It may be that the trial counsel would handle all stages of the case unless there is a allegation of incompetency of counsel in which event new counsel would obviously have to be provided to press that claim.

It is practical to require the Federal habeas corpus petition to be filed within 60 days from the appointment of post-conviction counsel. It would not be "business as usual"; but I know from my own experience in the criminal justice system that a lawyer can prepare the petition in that timeframe although it may require long hours, overtime effort or putting aside other legal matters.

If there are unusual circumstances, and it must be conceded that it is not possible in a statutory setting to anticipate every conceivable situation, the court may allow extra time on a showing of good cause with the specifications of the reasons.

Similarly, it is practical for the U.S. District Court to render a final decision within 110 days from the filing of the habeas corpus petition. That timeframe would allow 20 days for a responsive pleading by the public prosecutor and 90 days for hearings, briefings, argument, and a decision by the district court. Again, from my own experience in the field, I know that this timetable can be observed although it would require a Federal judge to give priority to such matters and the lawyers to be diligent in processing the case. It is customary when cases go to trial that lawyers are heavily engaged not only during the hours of trial in court, but in advance of the trial day in preparing witnesses, and after court hours on legal research and the preparation of legal memoranda.

It is further practical to require a decision by the court of appeals within 110 days after the final judgment of the district court. This is only slightly faster than existing rules on docketing and briefing. This timetable will give the appellate court an adequate opportunity for review, reflection, and decision. In the British courts, judges render immediate decisions and opinions after hearing appellate argument. As a practical matter, most decisions are made by an appellate judge within a relatively brief period of time after oral arguments or submission of briefs.

It is again realistic to require final action by the Supreme Court of the United States within 110 days. This would allow 20 days for the preparation of the petition for certiorari and 90 days for decision by the court. It is currently a common practice for the Supreme Court to deny certiorari in a much shorter period of time. Here again, our Nation's highest court would have to accord priority treatment to capital cases, but that is fair requirement in the face of the urgency of the issue as articulated by Chief Justice Rehnquist.

It is inevitable that some cases will not be completed within a 1-year timeframe. Some trials may be so long and so complex that this timetable will be too short. It should be noted, however, that this abbreviated timetable does not take effect until after the case has been tried in the State courts where no limitation is applied to the length of trial, time for post-trial motions or appellate review. During that process, most, if not customarily all, of the complex factual and legal issues will be organized, analyzed, and resolved.

Where this proposed timetable cannot be observed, extensions may be granted on a showing of good cause where the court will be obligated to specify the reasons for any delays. If delays are granted, the court will be under an obligation to monitor the proceeding and see to it that delays are held to a minimum.

CONCLUSION

No one can deny the seriousness of the problem of crime in America. Similarly, no one can deny the inadequacy of our criminal justice system.

At a minimum, powerful arguments support the conclusion that the death penalty is a deterrent. Even those who doubt the deterrent effect of capital punishment cannot deny the legitimacy of appropriate execution of the laws of 37 States which provide for the death penalty.

Currently, the Federal courts are "chaotic" in dealing with such cases and the death penalty in America has become a "farce".

This legislation, establishing a timetable of 1 year for the disposition of almost all Federal habeas corpus cases, would effectively reinstate the death penalty in America.

By Mr. ROTH:

S. 20. A bill to provide for the establishment and evaluation of performance standards and goals for expenditures in the Federal budget, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL PROGRAM PERFORMANCE STANDARDS AND GOALS ACT

• Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, today I am introducing what I believe to be a much-needed and long overdue reform of the way the Federal Government operates—the "Federal Program Performance Standards and Goals Act of 1991."

I know that my colleagues share with me a growing sense of frustration at our seeming inability to prevent waste, fraud, and mismanagement in Federal programs. It has not been for lack of our trying. In recent years we have taken such steps as enacting the Federal Managers Financial Integrity Act, creating Inspectors General and virtually every agency, and, late last year, passing the Chief Financial Officers Act.

All of these efforts have been very important. However, as the scandals within our agencies mount, I have become concerned that our focus on improving financial management has caused us to over-look a big missing piece in the puzzle of how to prevent governmental waste and mismanagement. That missing piece is the need for measurable performance goals for all Federal programs.

I am convinced that we will not make significant progress in our fight against fraud, waste, and mismanagement in Federal agencies and programs, if all we do is focus on the dollars spent. We must begin to pay much more attention to the performance side of the equation: What are we actually getting for the dollars spent, compared to what we should be getting?

This is not to diminish the vital role of strong financial management. Making sure that Federal funds are properly accounted for is indeed of fundamental importance. But knowing that budgeted money was lawfully spent is not the same as knowing that it was well-spent. Good management is more than just the absence of fraud.

Fraud is an illegal act, defined in the law. But what is the definition of "waste" and of "mismanagement"? How do we know when a program is "inefficient" or "inefective"? And if these abuses are undefined, how can they be prevented? What should we tell the taxpayers when we spend their money—that they should be satisfied simply knowing that no serious fraud exists in a program?

No, I think we owe them more than that. I think we ought to be able to tell the American taxpayers what results they can expect when we spend their money, and then we ought to be able to tell them what results they actually got. And when we can do that, we will truly begin to define, identify, and eliminate waste and mismanagement in the Federal Government.

That is what lies behind my legislation. The Federal Program Performance Standards and Goals Act would require that the President's budget include—for each major expenditure category of every department and agency—measurable program performance goals. And each year's budget would include the previous year's actual program results compared with the original performance goals, integrated with program cost information. This performance-based budgeting is what changes a budget from being largely a political document, into a real policymaking and management tool.

In addition, this legislation would require every Federal department and agency to publish an annual performance report. These reports would show more detailed performance goals and actual results—also integrated with program cost information, so as to reveal costs per unit-of-output or unit-of-result.

This information would be reported for the past year and the three prior years, so that performance trends could be tracked. If, for example, the unit cost of delivering a particular level of service, or of achieving a particular result, is shown to be rising faster than the rate of inflation, we can ask why.

These annual agencywide performance reports would be a real boost to program oversight. The Office of Management and Budget, the General Accounting Office, the Inspectors General, and congressional committees would all find these reports invaluable.

I also believe that Congress should be held responsible for stating what results it expects when it creates programs and spends money. We have for too long ducked that responsibility. We fund programs without specifying what the measure of success should be. No wonder accountability is lacking. Therefore, my legislation would require all authorization and appropriation bills to include measurable program performance goals.

I would be the first to acknowledge that this legislation would result in a revolutionary change in the way we do business around here. Think of it—the sponsor of a new program actually having to say what the program is supposed to accomplish, in measurable terms, so that we can later see if we are getting our money's worth. I can hear the howls of protest already. And certainly within the agencies there will be, as there has been in the past, strong resistance to being held accountable for measurable results.

I first proposed this reform last May in an article in "Roll Call." Several days later a number of witnesses testifying before a Senate committee addressing the HUD scandal were asked whether this would help. Their responses are very interesting.

Mr. Richard Wegman, testifying on behalf of the National Academy of Public Administration, stated that—

> It's essential that there be clear and explicit performance goals for executive branch programs * * * Clarity is extremely important; otherwise it's very difficult for Congress to make a judgment about whether or not the agency is doing its job effectively.

In his written statement he emphasized that—

> Preventing more HUDs ultimately is a continuous process of improving program goals in law and testing agency performance against them * * *

And attached to Mr. Wegman's testimony was a list of recommendations from the Academy's Panel on Congressional Oversight. I'd like to read two of them. First, that—> Congress should set performance goals * * * that provide a better match between those goals and the resources likely to be available for implementation. Similarly, the executive branch should suggest to Congress ways of better matching goals and resources."

And second, that—

> Congress should ensure that agencies engage in more thorough, systematic, and comprehensive evaulations of the programs they administer by: * * * providing in authorizing statutes criteria by which to measure program effectiveness; * * *

At that same hearing, GAO's Assistant Comptroller General for General Government, Mr. Richard Fogel, testified that—

> It would help if congressional committees could press some of the agencies to develop performance measures and output measures of what the agencies think are good measures of whether they are accomplishing program objectives. * * * That gives the Congress a basis for then going in and tracking and saying how well things are happening, what type of problems there may be, and if there are problems it gives you a basis for focusing the oversight. Unfortunately, most agencies do not want to develop those types of performance measures because it is easier not to be held accountable if you do not have them.

Mr. Bert Rockman of the Brookings Institute stated that—

> Within the agencies, people will want to know what it is that Congress defines as the indicators for how well a program is working.

To which Mr. Fogel added—

> Quite frankly, sometimes the Congress does not want to really clarify what the indicators are, either. It is easier to keep it somewhat confused. That creates additional problems for the agency.

In a followup letter, GAO wrote to the committee—

> In short, we believe that congressional and executive agency agreement on measures of program performance is a fundamental element for improved delivery of government service to the public.

It should be noted that in February 1985, GAO issued a two-part report entitled "Managing the Cost of Government," in which it repeatedly emphasized the need to establish program performance goals and to measure results. For example, it states—

> It is important, and possible, to measure how well government employees and programs are performing. Whether the goal is defending the nation or immunizing children against disease, government officials and the public need to know how well government is accomplishing its intended objectives. Assessing government accomplishments requires measuring employee and program performance. Though the size and complexity of the government make it difficult, developing effective performance measurement systems is clearly possible.

On another page the report urges that we—

> Measure output as well as input. A management system that can measure only the financial resources put into a process is incomplete. A truly effective system must also measure what is produced by using those resources. For all significant administrative functions and program activities, appropriate output measures should be identified, and acceptable performance levels must be established.

And perhaps most significant, is what the U.S. Comptroller General, Charles Bowsher, had to say in support of my proposal, during testimony before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee last October 3—

> It would be very helpful, I think, to the Congress to have this information, and that is why I think you need an annual report from all these departments, just like you have in the private sector—where you actually tell what were your performance goals, what were you trying to achieve with these program objectives, and how well you did it. And it would help us immensely. We waste half our time in doing our program evaluation work and our financial audit work in trying to figure out what is the goal that was trying to be achieved and where is the information. We are always over there trying to gather the data. It should be brought together in an organized fashion by the agencies themselves.

This point was then underscored by GAO's Assistant Comptroller General for Accounting and Financial Management, Donald H. Chapin, who testified that if financial information is related to performance goals—

> * * * it is amazing when you do that what you can see about an agency's operations. You can see what the trends are. You can understand what the numbers mean. And if we can get the agencies to supply us with measurable goals, we can relate those to financial results and then you can see what you are spending your money on and whether that money is well spent. And that is my fond hope, that we can get that into our system of government and have it reported to the committees of Congress as a regular matter, so that they can see the effectiveness of the money that they appropriate. And you don't see this now, you really don't see that.

Mr. President, I am strongly convinced that we must put in place a process for establishing, monitoring, and reporting program performance. I know that establishing such a system will not be easy, but it can be done. It must be done. We owe it to the American taxpayers to begin this effort, and

I urge my Senate colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

I ask that a copy of the "Federal Program Performance Standards and Goals Act of 1991" be printed in the RECORD, along with a recent nationally syndicated column on the bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 20

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Federal Program Performance Standards and Goals Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) despite major efforts by the Congress and the Executive Branch to improve the financial management of the Federal Government, unacceptable waste and mismanagement persists in Federal programs;

(2) waste and mismanagement place an intolerable burden on the limited resources of important Federal programs, reducing the ability of such programs to adequately address vital needs;

(3) much of the public's opposition to increased taxes is based on a belief that taxpayers are not getting full value for their tax dollar;

(4) because financial management systems focus on how money is spent, but not on how well it is spent and the value received for it, the Federal Government is handicapped in its ability to identify wasteful or ineffective programs; and

(5) the Congress is further handicapped in its ability to conduct adequate and thorough oversight of Federal programs, because few programs have measurable goals against which to track and compare performance.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to strengthen Government accountability by showing the American taxpayers what results to expect for their tax dollars when a program is funded, and what results the taxpayers actually receive;

(2) to improve congressional oversight and the uncovering of waste and mismanagement, by requiring that measurable performance standards and goals be established for all Federal programs and that each Federal department and agency issue an annual program performance report showing program accomplishment;

(3) to free additional resources for vital Federal programs, by reducing waste, reforming or eliminating ineffective programs, and allowing the targeting of funds to those programs achieving the best results;

(4) to change the Federal budget from a political document into a policy-making and management tool, by requiring that the budget incorporate a performance standards and goals plan for Federal spending.

SEC. 3. PERFORMANCE STANDARDS AND GOALS PLANS.

(a) BUDGET CONTENTS AND SUBMISSION TO CONGRESS.—Section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(29) a Federal performance standards and goals plan for the overall budget as provided for under section 1115.".

"(b) PERFORMANCE STANDARDS AND GOALS PLANS.—Chapter 11 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding after section 1114 the following new sections;

"§1115. Performance standards and goals plans

"(a) In carrying out the provisions of section 1105(a)(29), the Office of Management and Budget shall promulgate regulations requiring each department and agency to establish a performance standards and goals plan for each majority expenditure category of the budget of such department or agency. Such plan shall—

"(1) establish performance indicators to be used to define and measure the outputs, products, services, and results of each expenditure allocated;

"(2) establish performance standards and goals to define and measure the specific service or product to be achieved or produced for the expenditure allocated;

"(3) express such standards and goals in an objective, quantifiable, and measurable form unless permitted in an alternative form under subsection (b);

"(4) establish major expenditure categories of related functions of such agency or department for the analysis of performance standards and goals;

"(5) include actual program results compared with original performance standards and goals, integrated with program cost information, to show trends in costs per unit-of-result, unit-of-service, or other unit-of-output;

"(6) review the success of achieving the performance standards and goals of the preceding fiscal year; and

"(7) evaluate the performance standards and goals for the fiscal year relative to the results achieved for the performance standards and goals in the preceding fiscal year.

"(b) If the Office of Management and Budget determines that it is not feasible to express the performance standards and goals of a particular program in an expenditure category in an objective and quantifiable form, the Office of Management and Budget may authorize an alternative form. Such alternative form shall include separate descriptive statements of both—

"(1) minimally effective program, and

"(2) a successful program, with sufficient precision and in such terms that would allow for an accurate, independent determination of whether the program's performance meets the criteria of either description.

"(c) The Office of Management and Budget shall review and adjust the department and agency plans established under subsection (a) and establish an overall performance standards and goals plan for the Federal Government.

"§1116. Program performance reports

"(a) By December 31 of each year, the head of each department and agency shall prepare and submit to the President and the Congress, a report on the program performance for the previous fiscal year.

"(b) Each program performance report shall enumerate all performance indicators established in the departmental or agency performance standards and goals plan, along with the performance goals and the actual results achieved for the previous fiscal year and the three preceding fiscal years and the goals for the current fiscal year. Program costs and, where applicable, trends in costs per unit-of-result, unit-of-service, or other unit-of-output shall be shown. Where the performance standards and goals are specified by descriptive statements of a minimally effective program and a successful program, the results of such program shall be described in relationship to those categories, including whether the results failed to meet the criteria of either category.

"(c) Where a performance standard or goal has not been met, including when a program's results are not determined to have met the criteria of a successful program, the report shall explain—

"(1) why the goal was not met, including an indication of any managerial deficiencies or of any legal obstacles;

"(2) plans and schedule for achieving the established performance goal;

"(3) recommended legislative or regulatory changes necessary to achieve the goal; and

"(4) if the performance standard or goal is impractical or infeasible, why that is the case and what action is recommended, including whether the goal should be changed or the program altered or eliminated.".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 11 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof:

"1115. Performance standards and goals plans.

"1116. Program performance reports.".

SEC. 3. CONGRESSIONAL ESTABLISHMENT OF PERFORMANCE STANDARDS AND GOALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—It shall not be in order for either the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any bill or resolution (or amendment thereto) which provides for the authorization of appropriations or for the appropriation of funds, unless such bill or resolution (or amendment thereto) specifies performance standards and goals for such authorization or appropriation.

(b) PERFORMANCE STANDARDS AND GOALS.—(1) The program performance standards and goals required under subsection (a) shall—

(A) specify either—

"(i) objective, quantifiable, and measurable standards and goals expected to be achieved, or

"(ii) separate descriptive statements of a minimally effective program and of a successful program, with sufficient precision and in such terms that would allow for an accurate, independent determination of whether the program's performance meets the criteria of either description;

(B) include indicators of cost per unit-of-result, unit-of-service, or other unit-of-output, of the type specified in the legislation authorizing the appropriation or relevant program; and

(C) be established after review of the plan established under section 1115 of title 31, United States Code.

(2) An appropriation Act may specify a lesser amount of a performance standard or goal to be achieved than is provided by the authorizing legislation, but may not change the specific type of standard or goal.

(c) WAIVER.—This section may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by the affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn, and in the House of Representatives only as approved by the Committee on Rules.

YARDSTICK FOR THE BUDGET

(By Stephen Green)

The tax revolt has forced lawmakers to think twice before raising taxes. What's needed now is more assurance that the money collected from the taxpayers is spent wisely and not wasted. It's time for a new revolution—a performance revolt—to force the federal government to function effectively.

As matters now stand, there is no way to determine for certain whether the government is spending the public's money prudently. The president proposes spending for a government program, and if Congress agrees, the expenditures begin. In too many cases, the actual effect of the spending is difficult to determine. Lacking are specific criteria by which to measure a program's successes or failures.

This governmental deficiency is so glaring that it is mystifying why it has been tolerated for so long. Sheer expediency may be the explanation. Politicians find it desirable to promote pet programs, and program managers find it advantageous to expand their domains without real accountability for what has or hasn't been accomplished.

Whatever the reason, this deplorable state of affairs has continued for too long. Now, however, there is hope for change. A remedy has been offered by Sen. William V. Roth, Delaware Republican, in the form of so-called "performance-based budgeting."

Under a bill that Mr. Roth intends to introduce when Congress convenes, budget laws for the first time would contain clear and precise goals—stated in measurable terms—for various programs.

Instead of just setting aside millions of dollars for certain welfare programs, legislation would contain stated goals as to what the money is supposed to achieve.

One welfare program might promise, for instance, to place 100,000 welfare mothers in full-time employment. A Justice Department program might pledge to increase federal drug convictions by 15 percent. Such a method of budgeting would permit productivity to be traced and performance measured.

Launching the federal government into performance-based budgeting would not be a venture into unchartered territory. Performance-based budgeting does work. Its feasibility already has been demonstrated by a few local governments, most notably that of Sunnyvale, Calif.

Perusing the latest Sunnyvale municipal budget is edifying. It reveals that the city parks department has promised to repair all reported vandalism within three working days 90 percent of the time in return for an appropriation of $33,838. In law enforcement, the city police department has pledged to respond to all emergency calls in 5.6 minutes or less 90 percent of the time in return for an appropriation of $677,398.

In many ways, the complexity of the federal budget cannot be compared to Sunnyvale's. But, as Sunnyvale City Manager Tom Lewcock has been quoted as saying, the principle of performance-based budgeting "works regardless of the size of the government."

Performance-based budgeting permits taxpayers to determine what they receive for the money they spend and how the actual results compare to what should be occurring. Programs that fail to live up to promises can be altered—or terminated. Programs that do work can be expanded.

Despite the overwhelming logic in favor of performance-based budgeting, persuading the federal government to adopt it will not be easy. As Mr. Roth has explained, "There will be, as there has been in the past, strong resistance within the agencies to being held accountable for measurable results. Even some in the Congress may not relish the idea of having to tell the taxpayers upfront what result to expect for their tax dollars and then what actually was accomplished."

It will help that Mr. Roth appears to have support in the Bush administration for at least a pilot project. The White House Office of Management and Budget agrees that the concept is worth exploring. Clearly, it is. Performance-based budgeting could prove to be the long-sought-after key to making the vast federal bureaucracy accountable at last.•

S. 21. A bill to provide for the protection of the public lands in the California desert; to the Committee on Environment and Natural Resources.

PROTECTION AND THE CALIFORNIA DESERT

• Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, today I submit for reintroduction the California Desert Protection Act, S. 21. I previously sponsored this measure in the 101st Congress as S. 11 and in the 100th Congress, as S. 7. Over time this bill has been refined to address various concerns. I ask unanimous consent that my statement of January 25, 1989, which describes the purpose of the bill as well as the changes made to it from the 100th to the 101st Congress be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. I also ask unanimous consent that a summary of additional changes incorporated into the version of the bill being introduced today also be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, the California Desert Protection Act is intended to protect the beauty, wilderness, and fragile resources of the California Desert. There in the desert of California is a diverse landscape, incredibly rich in its scenery, archeology, and wildlife. One can find looming sand dunes, extinct volcanoes, some 90 mountain ranges, over 100,000 archeological sites, the world's largest joshua tree forest, more than 760 wildlife species, and the oldest living organism—an 11,700-year-old creosote bush.

My bill would designated 4.5 million acres of BLM lands as wilderness. It would create the Mojave National Park, comprising 1.5 million acres now managed by the BLM. It would redesignate Death Valley National Monument and Joshua Tree National Monument as National Parks, and enlarge both areas by including contiguous BLM lands of national park quality. The time has come to give meaningful, lasting protection to the California Desert.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 21 also be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 25, 1989]

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 11. A bill to provide for the protection of the public lands in the California desert; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CALIFORNIA DESERT PROTECTION ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing the California Desert Protection Act to provide lasting protection for the beauty and wildness of the California Desert.

In 1987 and 1988 I made three trips to the California desert accompanied by naturalists, environmentalists, and scientists. We camped out on the desert floor. We hiked mountains. We trekked up and through narrow desert wilderness canyons. We found snakes, lizards and other animals on huge, wild sand dunes. We looked at recreational sites for ORVs—dune buggies, ATVs, and motorcycles. We saw countless varieties of flowers and plants, including an 11,000 year-old creosote bush which may be the oldest living organism on the planet earth. We drove hundreds of miles over dirt and paved roads through Death Valley and Joshua Tree National Monuments and the East Mojave National Scenic Area. We flew over huge mining operations, water projects, military installations and miles of farming and ranching lands. We held lizards in our hands and saw nighttime skies of incredible beauty and the myriad stars of endless galaxies.

One sunset we climbed the Eureka Dunes, looming, awesome sand structures that are a miniature ecosystem of incredible complexity. The dunes are surrounded by towering mountain ranges of rugged, stark and massive igneous rocks whose antiquity and structure bespeak of geological aeons of long ago.

Climbing the 8,500 foot Last Chance mountain peak, we saw a sweeping, 360-degree view, the snow-capped Sierra Nevada in the west and, far to the south, Death Valley Sink, 280 feet below sea level.

The overwhelming presence of time and force surround you in the desert. There is an immense, almost incomprehensible beauty there that attracts people from all over the world, totalling some 16 million visitor days a year.

The desert is a land of many uses and many resources. And it is vast enough to support the varied demands being made upon it—by campers, hikers, tourists, the military, residents, energy developers, miners, rockhounds, hunters, ranchers, naturalists, scientists, and educators. The desert can support all these diverse interests, but only if the demands made upon it are in concert with the ecological and economic realities of the region.

In 1976, Congress enacted the Federal Land Policy and Management Act [FLPMA] which established the California Desert Conservation Area and started a process for protecting the resources of the California Desert. FLPMA also called the wilderness review of the public lands administered by the BLM, including those in the California Desert.

The California Desert Protection Act continues this process of providing for appropriate protection of significant resources of the public lands in the California Desert.

Like S. 7 which I sponsored in the 100th Congress, this bill designated 81 separate areas, comprising approximately 4.5 million acres of land in the California Desert, as wilderness to be administered by the Bureau of Land Management.

The BLM itself has identified 5.7 million acres in the California Desert as potential wilderness, and has designated these lands wilderness study areas to be managed to protect their wilderness values until Congress acts on the BLM wilderness recommendations.

Also like S. 7, the bill I am introducing today creates three new national parks in the California Desert—Death Valley, Joshua Tree, and Mojave.

For each of these parks, I have drawn from the recommendations of the Bureau of Land

Management's own desert plan staff and the 1977 and 1987 recommendations of the western regional office of the National Park Service.

However, in response to testimony presented on S. 7 at hearings of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks and Forests in July 1987 and information provided subsequently, I am making a number of significant changes in the California Desert Protection Act.

First, I have included new bill language regarding military activities in the California Desert.

As my colleagues may be aware, the areas proposed for addition to the national park and wilderness systems in this legislation are located in a region which is used extensively by the Department of Defense for training, research and development. These military activities have not impaired the natural and cultural values of the proposed parks and wilderness areas. However, the Department of Defense has expressed concern about the continued availability of these lands and airspace as there is a lack of alternative sites available for these military training, testing, and research activities.

I have, therefore, amended the California Desert Protection Act to clarify that the legislation has no impact on the military's existing use of airspace in the California Desert region.

I also have amended the legislation to provide for continued military use of public lands in the California Desert. The bill withdraws 1,100,000 acres for China Lake Naval Weapons Center and 227,369 acres for the Chocolate Mountain Aerial Gunnery Range. The lands are currently being used by the Department of the Navy, for research, development, testing and training purposes. However, the Engle Act provides that peacetime withdrawals of 5,000 acres or more of public land can only be accomplished by an Act of Congress. This legislation will meet the requirements of the Engle Act.

Additionally I have amended the boundaries of the parks and a number of the proposed wilderness areas to accommodate important non-wilderness uses and to correct map errors.

These changes in the following areas include:

Argus wilderness: Deletion of a road and limestone quarry;

Chuckwalla Mountains: Deletion of microwave site, road, and mine;

Clipper Mountains: Deletion of a road and pipeline;

Dead Mountains: Deletion of a road and rock quarry;

Inyo Mountains: Exclusion of mining claims;

Fish Creek: Exclusion of mine;

Hollow Hills: Deletion for utility corridor;

Jacumba: Deletion of transmission line and quarry;

Kelso Dunes: Deletion of gas pipeline;

Kingston Range: Deletion for utility corridor;

Malpais Mesa: Exclusion of mining claims;

Mecca Hills: Deletion of pipeline and map correction to complete boundary;

Mesquite: Deletion for utility corridor;

North Mesquite: Deletion of private property;

Orocopia: Exclusion for utility corridor;

Picacho Peak: Addition of lands;

Piper Mountains: Deletion for utility corridor;

Piute Mountains; Deletion of gas pipeline;

Resting Spring: Deletion of mining road;

Rodman: Deletion of gas pipeline;

Slate Range: Deletion of patented lands;

Soda Mountains: Exclusion for utility corridor;

South Algodones Dunes: Deletion of microwave tower;

Trilobite; Deletion of gas pipeline;

White Mountains WSA: Exclusion for utility corridor;

Mojave National park; Map correction;

Mojave Park wilderness: Deletion of gas pipeline in Granite Mountains portion, map correction and road deletion in Mid Hills portion, deletion of gas pipeline in Providence Mountains portion, map correction and utility corridor deletion in Clark Mountains portion;

Joshus Tree Park additions and wilderness: Deletion of mining claims in Eagle Mountains portion; and

Red Rock Canyon State park additions: Map clarification;

I have also amended the California Desert Protection Act to facilitate and expedite exchanges of lands with State and private property owners in the park and wilderness areas. The revised bill language should be particularly helpful in instances where mineral interests are involved. I intend to continue to work with the two major nonfederal owners of California Desert lands, the State of California and Santa Fe-Southern Pacific, in an effort to reduce conflicts and identify specific parcels for exchange.

Additionally, I have included new language to ensure that Native Americans will continue to have access to the park and wilderness areas for continued traditional cultural and religious use.

I have also included new language to clarify that the important research and educational activities of the University of California at its Granite Mountain Natural Reserve in the East Mojave will continue under a cooperative management agreement with the National Park Service.

Grazing in wilderness areas is a permitted activity and is not affected by this legislation. However, S. 7 provided that grazing in the new Mojave National Park be phased out as the current grazing permits expire. The 10 cattle ranching operations in the East Mojave are not a major contribution to the economy of the State or even the local area. However, the ranching families affected have made a strong case for continuation of their grazing activities beyond the expiration of the current permits. At the same time, I have received new information that the decline in bighorn sheep populations in the desert stems from diseases transmitted by domestic sheep and cattle. I want to study this issue further and review additional hearing testimony before crafting the final grazing provision in the legislation.

S. 7 also called for the establishment of the Indian Canyons National Historic Site, comprising 490 acres rich in archeological sites. This property is now under active threat of development. Last June 1988 the voters of California approved Proposition 70, the California Wildlife, Coastal and Park Land Bond Act which includes $19 million for acquisition of lands in the Indian Canyons region. It's my understanding the California Department of Parks and Recreation is particularly interested in purchasing the 490 acres, but it's unclear whether $19 million will be sufficient to acquire the entire property. No appraisal has yet been made. Thus, I am again including in the California Desert Protection Act a provision to establish the Indian Canyons National Historic Site. I will be following the California Department of Parks and Recreation's efforts to acquire the Indian Canyons and will modify my legislation at a future date as necessary based upon the State's actions.

Mr. President, I am aware that many people are interested in maintaining vehicular access to their favorite areas of the desert. In drawing the boundaries of the wilderness areas designated by this bill, I have been careful to exclude roads and areas receiving the heaviest ORV use. Unaffected by the legislation and available for vehicular use are 15,000 miles of unmaintained dirt routes—enough to go half way around the world. Another 15,000 miles of paved and maintained dirt roads also would remain open. Also the legislation does not affect 7,000 miles of vehicle accessible washes. In addition, over 430,000 acres of BLM open areas are outside the proposed parks and wilderness areas and remain available exclusively for ORV use. Additionally more than 30,000 acres on State and private lands in the desert are available to ORVers. Nonetheless, I will be reviewing the need for additional vehicular access. Mr. President, the time has come to protect the California Desert.

A September 1988 survey conducted by the Field Institute found that the vast majority of Californians support more parks and wilderness in the California Desert. Seventy-five percent of those polled said they want to see more protection for desert wildlife and ecology. Fifty-eight percent expressed a desire for more primitive areas and wilderness. And 67 percent said they want to see the creation of more national parklands in the desert. Only 17 percent said they favor more roads for four-wheel drive vehicles, while a third of the public said they want fewer roads for this purpose. Less than 17 percent said they want to see more open areas for the use of off-road vehicles like dune buggies and motorcycles. Also only a quarter of the respondents said they wanted to see more energy development such as gas and oil exploration and mining in the desert.

The major newspapers throughout the State of California have called for increased protection for the California Desert. Most have endorsed the California Desert Protection Act.

The Los Angeles Times says,

The Cranston bill would provide enhanced enjoyment of the desert by present visitors, and give it true lasting protection. (June 14, 1987).

The Sacramento Bee explains,

Cranston's bill wouldn't foreclose on any private property or terminate any current valid mining claims or even add very much to what the government is already spending to administer these lands. It would simply . . . ensure that the most important natural, scenic and scientific values of this complex, fragile resource would be preserved . . . Congress should support its basic purpose. (June 3, 1987)

The San Francisco Chronicle urges,

The passage of the California Desert Protection Act, one of the most important pieces of legislation affecting the state to be introduced in many years, should be one of Congress' top priorities. (April 9, 1987)

The Fresno Bee writes,

Much of the desert already has been put to use—and forever changed—by such things as mining operations, military bases, recreational uses and often abortive agricultural projects. A portion of it, close to its original state, must be preserved for future generations. This bill, introduced by Sen. Alan Cranston would do just that. (March 16, 1986)

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation.

CHANGES FROM S. 11 (101ST CONGRESS) INCORPORATED INTO S. 21 (102D CONGRESS) OFFERED BY SENATOR ALAN CRANSTON

1. On page 4, line 10 add a new section as follows:

"DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this Act—

(a) The term "Secretary", unless specifically designated otherwise, means the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) The term "public lands" means any land and interest in land owned by the United States and administered by the Secretary of the Interior through the Bureau of Land Management."

Explanation: This amendment adds a new section providing definitions.

2. On page 5, strike line 21 and all that follows through line 2 on page 6.

Explanation: This amendment deletes the Avawatz wilderness, comprising 61,320 acres, in response to DOD concerns about possible expansion of Fort Irwin.

3. On page 7, strike line 24 and all that follows through line 5 on page 8 and insert a new subsection as follows:

"(10) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately eighty-five thousand nine hundred and fifty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Cady Mountains Wilderness—Proposed", dated September 1990, and which shall be known as the Cady Mountains Wilderness: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may pursuant to an application filed by the Department of Defense, grant a right-of-way for, and authorize construction, use, and maintenance of, an unpaved corridor not to exceed 100 meters in width within the area depicted as "nonwilderness road corridor" on the map entitled "Cady Mountains Wilderness—Proposed", if this route is determined to be otherwise the most feasible route as part of a corridor linking Marine Corps Air Ground Combat Center, Twentynine Palms and the National Training Center, Fort Irwin;"

Explanation: This amendment modifies the Cady Mountains wilderness, deleting 20 acres, in response to DOD interest in a possible road to connect Twentynine Palms Marine Corps Air Station and Fort Irwin.

4. On page 8, strike line 6 and all that follows through line 11 and insert a new subsection as follows:

"(11) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area and Eastern San Diego County, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately fifteen thousand seven hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Carrizo Gorge Wilderness—Proposed", dated September 1990, and which shall be known as the Carrizo Gorge Wilderness;"

Explanation: This amendment corrects the map for the Carrizo Gorge wilderness to exclude Anza Borrego State Park land erroneously included.

5. On page 8, strike line 20 and all that follows through line 25 and insert a new section as follows:

(13) certain lands in the Bakersfield District, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately ten thousand seven hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Chimney Peak Wilderness—Proposed", dated September 1990, and which shall be known as the Chimney Peak Wilderness.

Explanation: This amendment corrects the map for the Chimney Peak wilderness to exclude non-wilderness quality lands erroneously included.

6. On page 22, strike line 12 and all that follows through line 18 and insert a new subsection as follows:

"(61) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately forty thousand six hundred and seventy acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Rice Valley Wilderness—Proposed", dated September 1990, and which shall be known as the Rice Valley Wilderness;"

Explanation: This amendment modifies the Rice Valley wilderness, deleting 150 acres, to exclude Metropolitan Water District's wasteway area.

7. On page 25, strike line 1 and all that follows through line 7 and insert a new subsection as follows:

"(70) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately sixty-nine thousand seven hundred and forty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Slate Range Wilderness—Proposed", dated September 1990, and which shall be known as the Slate Range Wilderness;"

Explanation: This amendment modifies the Slate Range wilderness, deleting 100 acres, to exclude Keystone Mine claims.

8. On page 25, strike line 8 and all that follows through line 14.

Explanation: This amendment deletes the Soda Mountains wilderness, comprising 80,430 acres, in response to DOD concern about possible expansion of Fort Irwin.

9. On page 25, strike line 22 and all that follows through page 26, line 3.

Explanation: This amendment deletes the South Avawatz wilderness, comprising 26,650 acres, in response to DOD concern about possible expansion of Fort Irwin.

10. On page 26, strike line 11 and all that follows through line 16 and insert a new subsection as follows:

"(75) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately seven thousand fifty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Stateline Wilderness—Proposed", dated September 1990, and which shall be known as the Stateline Wilderness;"

Explanation: This amendment modifies the Stateline wilderness, deleting 1,950 acres, to exclude utility corridor.

11. On page 29, line 13, after the word "Act" insert "except for CDCA 242, CDCA 221A, and CDCA 221"

Explanation: This amendment provides that Avawatz, South Avawatz, and Soda Mountains wilderness study areas retain their administrative WSA status.

12. On page 29, line 21, add a new subsection as follows:

"(b) Subject to valid existing rights, the federal lands identified as CDCA 242, CDCA 221 A, and CDCA 221 are hereby withdrawn from disposition under the public land laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970."

Explanation: This amendment withdraws the Avawatz, South Avawatz, and Soda Mountains wilderness study areas from mineral entry.

13. On page 30, line 6, insert a new section as follows:

"GRAZING

"SEC. 107. Within the wilderness areas designated by this Act, the grazing of livestock, where established prior to the enactment of this Act, shall be permitted to continue subject to such reasonable regulations, policies and practices as the Secretary deems necessary, as long as such regulations, policies and practices fully conform with and implement the intent of Congress regarding grazing in such areas as such intent is expressed in the Wilderness Act and section 108 of Public Law 96-560 (16 U.S.C. 1133 note)."

Explanation: This amendment adds a new section regarding grazing in wilderness areas.

14. On page 30, insert a new section as follows:

"BUFFER ZONES

"SEC. 108. The Congress does not intend for the designation of wilderness areas in section 102 of this Act to lead to the creation of protective perimeters or buffer zones around any such wilderness area. The fact that nonwilderness activities or uses can be seen or heard from areas within a wilderness shall not, of itself, preclude such activities or uses up to the boundary of the wilderness area."

Explanation: This amendment adds a new section regarding buffer zones around wilderness.

15. On page 30, insert a new section as follows:

"WATER RIGHTS

"SEC. 109. (a) With respect to each wilderness area designated by this Act, Congress hereby reserves a quantity of water sufficient to fulfill the purposes of this Act. The priority date of such reserved water rights shall be the date of enactment of this Act.

"(b) The Secretary of the Interior and all other officers of the United States shall take all steps necessary to protect the rights reserved by this section, including the filing by the Secretary of a claim for the quantification of such rights in any present or future appropriate stream adjudication in the courts of the State of California in which the United States is or may be joined and which is conducted in accordance with the McCarraan Amendment, 43 U.S.C. 666.

"(c) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as a relinquishment or reduction of any water rights reserved or appropriated by the United States in the State of California on or before the date of enactment of this Act.

"(d) The federal water rights reserved by this Act are specific to the wilderness areas located in the State of California designated by this Act. Nothing in this Act related to the reserved federal water rights shall be construed as establishing a precedent with regard to any future designations, nor shall it constitute an interpretation of any other Act or any designation made thereto."

Explanation: This amendment adds a new section regarding water rights in wilderness.

16. On page 37, line 11, delete "February 1986" and insert in lieu thereof "September 1990"

Explanation: This amendment modifies the Mojave National Park to exclude Interstate 15 and adjacent utility corridor.

17. On page 47, line 24, after the word "parks" insert "designated by this Act"

Explanation: Technical amendment.

18. On page 50, line 17, insert a new section as follows:

"FEE LANDS AND RIGHTS OF THE METROPOLITAN WATER DISTRICT OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

"SEC. 608. Nothing in this Act shall affect the lands and rights granted to the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California pursuant to the Act of June 18, 1932 (47 Stat. 324) or any rights to use public and reserved lands of the United States obtained by Metropolitan pursuant to the Boulder Canyon Project Act (43 U.S.C. 617-619b): Provided, That none of the lands designated as wilderness or included in the national park system by this Act shall be granted to Metropolitan pursuant to the Act of June 18, 1932, nor shall the use of such lands be granted to Metropolitan pursuant to the Boulder Canyon Project Act after the date of enactment of this Act."

Explanation: This amendment clarifies that the lands and rights already obtained by the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California pursuant to the Act of June 18, 1932 and the Boulder Canyon Act are not affected by this Act and removes the 1928 and 1932 acts as a basis for Metropolitan to claim additional rights to lands designated as parks and wilderness by this Act.

19. On page 51, strike line 8 and all that follows through line 14 and insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 702. Nothing in this Act shall preclude low level overflights of military aircraft, the designation of new units of special airspace, or the use or establishment of military flight training routes over the new units of the National Park or Wilderness Preservation Systems (or any additions to existing units) designated by this Act."

Explanation: This amendment modifies the military overflight language in response to DOD concerns.

S. 21

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

FINDINGS AND POLICY

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the federally owned desert lands of Southern California constitute a public wildland resource of extraordinary and inestimable value for this and future generations;

(2) these desert wildlands display unique scenic, historical, archeological, environmental, ecological, wildlife, cultural, scientific, educational, and recreational values used and enjoyed by millions of Americans for hiking and camping, scientific study and scenic appreciation;

(3) the public land resources of the California desert now face and are increasingly threatened by adverse pressures which would impair, dilute, and destroy their public and natural values;

(4) the California desert, embracing wilderness lands, units of the National Park System, other federal lands, state parks and other state lands, and private lands, constitutes a cohesive unit posing unique and difficult resource protection and management challenges;

(5) through designation of national monuments by Presidential proclamation, through enactment of general public land statutes (including section 601 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 90 Stat. 2743, 43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.) and through interim administrative actions, the federal government has begun the process of appropriately providing for protection of the significant resources of the public lands in the California desert; and

(6) statutory land unit designations are needed to afford the full protection which the resources and public land values of the California desert merit.

(b) In order to secure for the American people of this and future generations an enduring heritage of wilderness, national parks, and public land values in the California desert, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congres that—

(1) appropriate public lands in the California desert shall be included within the National Park System and the National Wilderness Preservation System, in order to—

(A) preserve unrivaled scenic, geologic, and wildlife values associated with these unique natural landscapes;

(B) perpetuate in their natural state significant and diverse ecosystems of the California desert;

(C) protect and preserve historical and cultural values of the California desert associated with ancient Indian cultures, patterns of western exploration and settlement, and sites exemplifying the mining, ranching and railroading history of the Old West;

(D) provide opportunities for compatible outdoor public recreation, protect and interpret ecological and geological features, and historic, paleontological, and archeological sites, maintain wilderness resource values, and promote public understanding and appreciation of the California desert; and

(E) retain and enhance opportunities for scientific research in undisturbed ecosystems.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this Act—

(a) The term "Secretary", unless specifically designated otherwise, means the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) The term "public lands" means any land and interest in land owned by the United States and administered by the Secretary of the Interior through the Bureau of Land Management.

TITLE I—WILDERNESS ADDITIONS

FINDINGS

SEC. 101. The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) wilderness is a distinguishing characteristic of the public lands in the California desert, one which affords an unrivaled opportunity for experiencing vast areas of the Old West essentially unaltered by man's activities, and which merits preservation for the benefit of present and future generations;

(2) the wilderness values of desert lands are increasingly threatened by and especially vulnerable to impairment, alteration, and destruction by activities and intrusions associated with incompatible use and development; and

(3) preservation of desert wilderness necessarily requires the highest forms of protective designation and management.

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS

SEC. 102. In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 890, 16 U.S.C. 1131 et seq.), and sections 601 and 603 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 2743, 43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), the following lands in the State of California, as generally depicted on maps, appropriately referenced, dated February 1986, (except as otherwise dated) are hereby designated as wilderness, and therefore, as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System—

(1) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately seventy-four thousand eight hundred ninty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Argus Range Wilderness—Proposed", dated January 1989, and which shall be known as the Argus Range Wilderness;

(2) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately ten thousand eight hundred seventy acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Bigelow Cholla Garden Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Bigelow Cholla Garden Wilderness;

(3) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management and within the San Bernadino National Forest, which comprise approximately thirty-three thousand eight hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Bighorn Mountain Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Bighorn Mountain Wilderness;

(4) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area and the Yuma District, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately forty-seven thousand five hundred seventy acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Big Maria Mountains Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Big Maria Mountains Wilderness;

(5) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise thirteen thousand nine hundred forty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Black Mountain Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Black Mountain Wilderness;

(6) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately seven thousand two hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Blackwater Well Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Blackwater Well Wilderness;

(7) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately nine thousand five hundred twenty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Bright Star Wilderness—Proposed", dated January 1989, and which shall be known as the Bright Star Wilderness;

(8) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately forty-two thousand six hundred forty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Cadiz Dunes Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Cadiz Dunes Wilderness;

(9) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Mangaement, which comprise approximately eighty-five thousand nine hundred fifty acres, as generally depcited on a map entitled "Cady Mountains Wildernesss—Proposed", dated September 1990, and which shall be known as the Cady Mountains Wilderness; Provided, That the Secretary may pursuant to an application filed by the Department of Defense, grant a right-of-way, and authorize construction, use, and maintenance of, an unpaved corridor not to exceed 100 meters in width within the area depicted as "nonwilderness road corridor" on the map entitled "Cady Mountain Wilderness—Proposed", if this route is determined to be otherwise the most feasible route as part of a corridor linking Marine Corps Air Ground Combat Center, Twentynine Palms and the National Training Center, Fort Irwin;

(10) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area and Eastern San Diego County, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately fifteen thousand seven hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Carrizo Gorge Wilderness—Proposed", dated September 1990, and which shall be known as the Carrizo Gorge Wilderness;

(11) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area and Yuma District, of the Bureau of Land Management and within the Havasu National Wildlife Refuge, which comprise approximately sixty-eight thousand three hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Chemehuevi Mountains Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Chemehuevi Mountains Wilderness;

(12) certain lands in the Bakersfield District, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately ten thousand seven hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Chimney Peak Wilderness—Proposed", dated September 1990, and which shall be known as the Chimney Peak Wilderness;

(13) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately one hundred sixty-three thousand nine hundred fifty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Chuckwalla Mountains Wilderness—Proposed", dated January 1989, and which shall be known as the Chuckwalla Mountains Wilderness;

(14) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise fifty thousand six hundred sixty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Cleghorn Lakes Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Cleghorn Lakes Wilderness: Provided, That the Secretary may pursuant to an application filed by the Department of Defense, grant a right-of-way for, and authorize construction of, a road within the area depicted as "non-wilderness road corridor" on the map entitled "Cleghorn Lakes Wilderness—Proposed";

(15) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately forty thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Clipper Mountains Wilderness—Proposed", dated January 1989, and which shall be known as Clipper Mountains Wilderness;

(16) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately fifty thousand eight hundred twenty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Coso Range Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as Coso Range Wilderness;

(17) certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, which comprise approximately eighteen thousand six hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Coyote Mountains Wilderness—Proposed", and which shall be known as the Coyote Mountains Wilderness;

ADMINISTRATION OF WILDERNESS AREAS

SEC. 103. Subject to valid existing rights, each wilderness area designated under this title shall be administered by the appropriate Secretary in accordance with the provisions of the Wilderness Act: Provided, That any reference in such provisions to the effective date of the Wilderness Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the effective date of this title and any reference to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be deemed to be a reference to the Secretary who has administrative jurisdiction over the area.

FILING OF MAPS AND DESCRIPTIONS

SEC. 104. As soon as practicable after enactment of this title, a map and a legal description on each wilderness area designated under this title shall be filed by the Secretary concerned with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, and each such map and description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title: Provided, That correction of clerical and typographical errors in each such legal description and map may be made. Each such map and legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, or the Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, as is appropriate.

WILDERNESS REVIEW

SEC. 105. (a) The Congress hereby finds and directs that lands in the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management not designated as wilderness or wilderness study areas by this Act except for CDCA 242, CDCA 221A, and CDCA 221 have been adequately studied for wilderness designation pursuant to section 603 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (90 Stat. 2743, 43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), and are no longer subject to the requirement of section 603(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act pertaining to the management of wilderness study areas in a manner that does not impair the suitablility of such areas for preservation as wilderness.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, the federal lands identified as CDCA 242, CDCA 221 A, and CDCA 221 are hereby withdrawn from disposition under the public land laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970.

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS STUDY AREA

SEC. 106. In furtherance of the provisions of the Wilderness Act of 1964, certain lands in the California Desert Conservation Area of the Bureau of Land Management which comprise eleven thousand two hundred acres as generally depicted on a map entitled "White Mountains Wilderness Study Area—Proposed", dated January 1989, are hereby designated the White Mountains Wilderness Study Area and shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the provisions of section 603(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act.

GRAZING

SEC. 107. Within the wilderness areas designated by this Act, the grazing of livestock, where established prior to the enactment of this Act, shall be permitted to continue subject to such reasonable regulations, policies and practices as the Secretary deems necessary, as long as such regulations, policies and practices fully conform with and implement the intent of Congress regarding grazing in such areas as such intent is expressed in the Wilderness Act and section 108 of Public Law 96-560 (16 U.S.C. 1133 note).

BUFFER ZONES

SEC. 108. The Congress does not intend for the designation of wilderness areas in section 102 of this Act to lead to the creation of protective perimeters or buffer zones around any such wilderness area. The fact that nonwilderness activities or uses can be seen or heard from areas within a wilderness shall not, of itself, preclude such activities or uses up to the boundary of the wilderness area.

WATER RIGHTS

SEC. 109. (a) With respect to each wilderness area designated by this Act, Congress hereby reserves a quantity of water sufficient to fulfill the purposes of this Act. The priority date of such reserved water rights shall be the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) The Secretary and all other officers of the United States shall take all steps necessary to protect the rights reserved by this section, including the filing by the Secretary of a claim for the quantification of such rights in any present or future appropriate stream adjudication in the courts of the State of California in which the United States is or may be joined and which is conducted in accordance with the McCarraan Amendment, 43 U.S.C. 666.

(c) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as a relinquishment or reduction of any water rights reserved or appropriated by the United States in the State of California on or before the date of enactment of this Act.

(d) The federal water rights reserved by this Act are specific to the wilderness areas located in the State of California designated by this Act. Nothing in this Act related to the reserved federal water rights shall be construed as establishing a precedent with regard to any future designations, nor shall it constitute an interpretation of any other Act or any designation made thereto.

TITLE II—DEATH VALLEY NATIONAL PARK

FINDINGS

SEC. 201. The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) proclamations by Presidents Herbert Hoover in 1933 and Franklin Roosevelt in 1937 established and expanded the Death Valley National Monument for the preservation of the unusual features of scenic, scientific, and educational interest therein contained;

(2) Death Valley National Monument is today recognized as major unit of the National Park System, having extraordinary values enjoyed by millions of visitors;

(3) the Monument boundaries established in the 1930's exclude and thereby expose to incompatible development and inconsistent management, contiguous federal lands of essential and superlative natural, ecological, geological, archeological, paleontological, cultural, historical and wilderness values;

(4) Death Valley National Monument should be substantially enlarged by the addition of all contiguous federal lands of national park caliber, and afforded full recognition and statutory protection as a national park; and

(5) the wilderness with Death Valley should receive maximum statutory protection by designation pursuant to the Wilderness Act.

ESTABLISHMENT OF DEATH VALLEY NATIONAL PARK

SEC. 202. There is hereby established the Death Valley National Park, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Death Valley National Park", dated February 1986, which shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Superintendent of the Park and the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior. The Death Valley National Monument is hereby abolished as such, and the lands and interests therein are hereby incorporated within and made part of the new Death Valley National Park.

TRANSFER AND ADMINISTRATION OF LANDS

SEC. 203. Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary shall transfer the lands under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management depicted on the map described in section 202 of this title, without consideration, to the administrative jurisdiction of the Director of the National Park Service for administration as part of the National Park System. The boundaries of the public lands and the national parks shall be adjusted accordingly. The areas added to the National Park System by this title shall be administered in accordance with the provisions of law generally applicable to units of the National Park System.

MAPS AND LEGAL DESCRIPTION

SEC. 204. Within six months after the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall file a legal description of the park designated under this title with the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the United States Senate and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description and in the map referred to in section 202. The legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Superintendent of the Park and the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

DISPOSITION UNDER MINING LAWS

SEC. 205. Subject to valid existing rights, the federal lands and interests therein added to the park system by this title are withdrawn from disposition under the public land laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970.

STUDY AS TO VALIDITY OF MINING CLAIMS

SEC. 206. The Secretary shall not approve any plan of operation prior to determining the validity of any unpatented mining claims within the additions to the park system and submit to Congress recommendations as to whether any valid or patented claims should be acquired by the United States, including the estimated acquisition costs of such claims, and a discussion of the environmental consequences of the extraction of minerals from these lands.

TITLE III—JOSHUA TREE NATIONAL PARK

FINDINGS

SEC. 301. The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) a proclamation by President Franklin Roosevelt in 1936 established Joshua Tree National Monument to protect various objects of historical and scientific interest;

(2) Joshua Tree National Monument today is recognized as a major unit of the National Park System, having extraordinary values enjoyed by millions of visitors;

(3) the Monument boundaries as modified in 1950 and 1961 exclude and thereby expose to incompatible development and inconsistent management, contiguous federal lands essential and superlative natural, ecological, archeological, paleontological, cultural, historical and wilderness values;

(4) Joshua Tree National Monument should be enlarged by the addition of contiguous federal lands of national park caliber, and afforded full recognition and statutory protection as a national park; and

(5) the non-designated wilderness within Joshua Tree should receive maximum statutory protection by designation pursuant to the Wilderness Act.

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOSHUA TREE NATIONAL PARK

SEC. 302. There is hereby established the Joshua Tree National Park, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Joshua Tree National Park", dated January 1989, which shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Superintendent of the Park and the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior. The Joshua Tree National Monument is hereby abolished as such, and the lands and interests therein are hereby incorporated within and made part of the new Joshua Tree National Monument.

TRANSFER AND ADMINISTRATION OF LANDS

SEC. 303. Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary shall transfer the lands under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management depicted on the map described in section 302 of this title, without consideration, to the administrative jurisdiction of the Director of the National Park Service for administration as part of the National Park System. The boundaries of the public lands and the national parks shall be adjusted accordingly. The areas added to the National Park System by this title shall be administered in accordance with the provisions of law generally applicable to units of the National Park System.

MAPS AND LEGAL DESCRIPTION

SEC. 304. Within six months after the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall file a legal description of the park designated by this title with the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the United States Senate and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description and in the map referred to in section 302. The legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Superintendent of the Park and the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

DISPOSITION UNDER MINING LAWS

SEC. 305. Subject to valid existing rights, federal lands and interests therein added to the park system by this title are withdrawn from disposition under the public lands laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from the operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970.

STUDY AS TO VALIDITY OF MINING CLAIMS

SEC. 306. The Secretary shall not approve any plan of operation prior to determining the validity of any unpatented mining claims within the park and submit to Congress recommendations as to whether any valid or patented claims should be acquired by the United States, including the estimated acquisition costs of such claims, and a discussion of the environmental consequences of the extraction of minerals from these lands.

TITLE IV—MOJAVE NATIONAL PARK

FINDINGS

SEC. 401. The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) Death Valley and Joshua Tree National Parks, as established by this Act, protect unique and superlative desert resources, but do not embrace the particular ecosystems and transitional desert type found in the Mojave Desert area lying between them on public lands now afforded only impermanent administrative designation as a national scenic area;

(2) the Mojave Desert area possesses outstanding natural, cultural, historical, and recreational values meriting statutory designation and recognition as a unit of the National Park System;

(3) the Mojave Desert area should be afforded full recognition and statutory protection as a national park; and

(4) the wilderness within the Mojave Desert should receive maximum statutory protection by designation pursuant to the Wilderness Act.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE MOJAVE NATIONAL PARK

SEC. 402. There is hereby established the Mojave National Park, comprising approximately one million five hundred thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Mojave National Park", dated September 1990, which shall be on file and available for inspection in the offices of the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

TRANSFER OF LANDS

SEC. 403. Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary shall transfer the lands under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management depicted on the map described in section 402 of this title, without consideration, to the administrative jurisdiction of the Director of the National Park Service. The boundaries of the public lands shall be adjusted accordingly.

MAPS AND LEGAL DESCRIPTION

SEC. 404. Within six months after the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall file a legal description of the park designated under this title with the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the United States Senate and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description and in the map referred to in section 402. The legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

ABOLISHMENT OF SCENIC AREA

SEC. 405. The East Mojave National Scenic Area, designated on January 13, 1981 (46 FR 3994) and modified on August 9, 1983 (48 FR 36210), is hereby abolished.

ADMINISTRATION OF LANDS

SEC. 406. The Secretary shall administer the park in accordance with this title and with the provisions of law generally applicable to units of the National Park System, including the Act entitled "An Act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535; 16 U.S.C. 1-4).

DISPOSITION UNDER MINING LAWS

SEC. 407. Subject to valid existing rights, federal lands within the park, and interests therein, are withdrawn from disposition under the public land laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970.

STUDY AS TO VALIDITY OF MINING CLAIMS

SEC. 408. The Secretary shall not approve any plan of operation prior to determining the validity of any unpatented mining claims within the park and submit to Congress recommendations as to whether any valid or patented claims should be acquired by the United States, including the estimated acquisition costs of such claims, and a discussion of the environmental consequences of the extraction of minerals from these lands.

REGULATION OF MINING

SEC. 409. Subject to valid existing rights, all mining claims located within the park shall be subject to such reasonable regulations as the Secretary may prescribe to assure that mining will, to the maximum extent practicable, be consistent with the protection of the scenic, scientific, cultural and other resources of the park, and any patent which may be issued after the date of enactment of this title shall convey title only to the minerals together with the right to use the surface of lands for mining purposes subject to such reasonable regulations.

GRAZING RIGHTS

SEC. 410. The Secretary shall permit those persons holding currently valid grazing permits within the boundary of the park to continue to exercise such permits consistent with other applicable law: Provided, however, that upon expiration of the current term of such permits, the permits shall not be renewed.

UTILITY RIGHTS OF WAY

SEC. 411. Nothing in this title shall have the effect of terminating any validly issued right-of-way or right-of-use within the boundary of the park issued, granted, or permitted for

(a) systems for transmission or distribution of electric energy,

(b) pipelines for the transmission or distribution of natural gas or oil, and

(c) communication cables or lines.

PREPARATION OF MANAGEMENT PLAN

SEC. 412. Within three years of the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary shall submit to the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the United States Senate and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives a detailed and comprehensive management plan for the park. Such plan shall place emphasis on historical and cultural sites and ecological and wilderness values within the boundaries of the park and shall evaluate the feasibility of using the Kelso Depot and existing railroad corridor to provide public access to and a facility for special interpretive, educational and scientific programs within the park.

GRANITE MOUNTAINS NATURAL RESERVE

SEC. 413. (a) There is hereby designated the Granite Mountains Natural Reserve within the park comprising approximately 9,000 acres as generally depicted on a map entitled "Granite Mountains Natural Reserve", dated January 1989.

(b) Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary shall enter into a cooperative management agreement with the University of California for the purposes of managing the lands within the Granite Mountains Natural Reserve. Such cooperative agreement shall ensure continuation of arid lands research and educational activities of the University of California, consistent with the provisions of law generally applicable to units of the National Park System.

CONSTRUCTION OF VISITOR CENTER

SEC. 414. The Secretary is authorized to construct a visitor center in the park for the purpose of providing information through appropriate displays, printed material, and other interpretive programs, about the resources of the park.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS

SEC. 415. The Secretary is authorized to acquire all lands and interest in lands within the boundary of the park by donation, purchase, or exchange, except that—

(1) any lands or interests therein within the boundary of the park which are owned by the State of California, or any political subdivision thereof, may be acquired only by donation or exchange; and

(2) lands of interests therein within the boundary of the park which are not owned by the State of California or any political subdivision thereof may be acquired only with the consent of the owner thereof unless the Secretary determines, after written notice to the owner and after opportunity for comment, that the property is being developed, or proposed to be developed, in a manner which is detrimental to the integrity of the park or which is otherwise incompatible with the purposes of this title.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 417. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

TITLE V—NATIONAL PARK WILDERNESS

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS

SEC. 501. The following lands are hereby designated as wilderness in accordance with section (3) of the Wilderness Act (78 Stat. 890; 16 U.S.C. 1132(c)) and shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the applicable provisions of the Wilderness Act.

(1) Death Valley National Park Wilderness, comprising approximately three million one hundred fifty-nine thousand seven hundred twenty acres, and potential wilderness additions comprising approximately twenty thousand four hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Death Valley National Park Wilderness—Proposed", dated January 1987, and which shall be known as the Death Valley Wilderness;

(2) Joshua Tree National Park Wilderness Additions, comprising approximately one hundred thirty-three thousand five hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Joshua Tree National Park Wilderness Additions—Proposed", dated January 1989, and which are hereby incorporated in, and which shall be deemed to be a part of the Joshua Tree Wilderness as designated by Public Law 94-567; and

(3) Mojave National Park Wilderness, comprising approximately seven hundred forty-seven thousand nine hundred forty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Mojave National Park Wilderness—Proposed", dated January 1989, and which shall be known as the Mojave Wilderness.

FILING OF MAPS AND DESCRIPTIONS

SEC. 502. A map and description of the boundaries of the areas designated in section 501 of this title shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior, and in the Office of the Superintendent of each area designated in section 501. As soon as practicable after this title takes effect, maps of the wilderness areas and descriptions of their boundaries shall be filed with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, and such maps and descriptions shall have the same force and effect as if included in this title: Provided, That correction of clerical and typographical errors in such maps and descriptions may be made.

CESSATION OF CERTAIN USES

SEC. 503. Any lands (in section 501 of this title) which represent potential wilderness additions upon publication in the Federal Register of a notice by the Secretary that all uses thereon prohibited by the Wilderness Act have ceased, shall thereby be designated wilderness. Lands designated as potential wilderness additions shall be managed by the Secretary of the Interior insofar as practicable as wilderness until such time as said lands are designated as wilderness.

ADMINISTRATION OF WILDERNESS AREAS

SEC. 504. The areas designated by section 501 of this title as wilderness shall be administered by the Secretary in accordance with the applicable provisions of the Wilderness Act governing areas designated by that title as wilderness, except that any reference in such provisions to the effective date of the Wilderness Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the effective date of this title, and where appropriate, and reference to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be deemed to be a reference to the Secretary of the Interior.

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

TRANSFER OF LANDS TO RED ROCK CANYON STATE PARK

SEC. 601. Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary shall transfer to the State of California certain lands within the California Desert Conservation Area, California, of the Bureau of Land Management, comprising approximately twenty thousand five hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Red Rock Canyon State Park Additions", dated February 1986, for inclusion in the State of California Park System. Should the State of California cease to manage these lands as part of the state park system, ownership of the lands shall revert to the Department of the Interior to be managed as part of the California Desert Conservation Area to provide maximum protection for the area's scenic and scientific values.

DESERT LILY SANCTUARY

SEC. 602. (a) There is hereby established the Desert Lily Santuary within the California Desert Conservation Area, California, of the Bureau of Land Management, comprising approximately two thousand forty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Desert Lily Sanctuary", dated February 1986. The Secretary shall administer the area to provide maximum protection to the desert lily.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, federal lands within the sanctuary, and interests therein, are withdrawn from disposition under the public land laws and from entry or appropriation under the mining laws of the United States, from the operation of the mineral leasing laws of the United States, and from operation of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970.

INDIAN CANYONS NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE

SEC. 603. (a) There is hereby established the Indian Canyons National Historic Site, comprising approximately four hundred ninety acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Indian Canyons National Historic Site", dated February 1986.

(b) Upon enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior shall enter into negotiations to acquire by exchange the privately owned lands or interests therein within the national historic site designated by subsection (a). The value of the properties so exchanged either shall be equal or, if they are not equal, the values shall be equalized by the payment of cash to the grantor or to the Secretary as the circumstances require.

(c) The Secretary shall enter into a cooperative management agreement with the Aqua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians for the purposes of managing the Indian Canyons National Historic Site. Upon execution of the management agreement, the Secretary shall transfer title of the land to be held in trust for the Aqua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians as part of the Aqua Caliente Indian Reservation and such transfer shall remain effective so long as the agreement remains in force and in effect.

LAND TENURE ADJUSTMENTS

SEC. 604. In preparing land tenure adjustment decisions within the California Desert Conservation Area, of the Bureau of Land Management, the Secretary shall give priority to consolidating federal ownership within the national park units and wilderness areas designated by this Act.

STATE EXCHANGES

SEC. 605. (a) Upon the request of the State of California and pursuant to the provisions of this section, the Secretary shall exchange public lands or interests in lands elsewhere in the State of California of approximately equal value and selected by the State of California, acting through the State Lands Commission, for any lands or interests therein owned by the State located within the boundaries of the wilderness or the parks designated pursuant to this Act which the State wishes to exchange with the United States.

(b) Within six months from the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall notify the Chairman of the State Lands Commission what state lands or interests therein are within the wilderness areas and national park units designated by this Act. The notice shall contain a listing of all public lands or interests therein within the boundaries of the State of California which have not been withdrawn from entry and which the Secretary, pursuant to the provisions of section 202 and 206 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, has identified as appropriate for transfer to the State in exchange for state lands. Such listing shall be updated at least annually.

(c) If the Chairman of the State Lands commission gives notice to the Secretary of the state's desire to obtain public lands so listed, the Secretary shall notify the Chairman in writing whether the Department of the Interior considers the state lands within the wilderness areas and national park units to be of equal value to the list of lands the chairman has indicated the State wishes to obtain. It is the sense of the Congress that the exchange of lands and interests therein with the State pursuant to this section should be completed within two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

MINERAL EXCHANGES

SEC. 606. (a) The Secretary is authorized to exchange the federal mineral interests in lands within the State of California for private mineral interests in lands located within the boundaries of the wilderness areas and national park units designated by this Act if—

(1) the owner of such private mineral interests has made available to the Secretary all information requested by the Secretary as to the respective values of the private and federal mineral interests to be exchanged; and

(2) on the basis of information obtained pursuant to paragraph (1) and any other information available, the Secretary has determined that the mineral interests to be exchanged are of approximately equal value; and

(3) the Secretary has determined—

(A) that except insofar as otherwise provided in this section, the exchange is not inconsistent with the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976; and

(B) that the exchange is in the public interest.

(b) The Secretary shall file a legal description of the mineral interest areas exchanged pursuant to this section with the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description. The legal descrition shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior.

(c) It is the sense of the Congress that all exchanges pursuant to this section shall be completed no later than three years after the date of enactment of this Act.

NATIVE AMERICAN USES

SEC. 607. In recognition of the past use of the parks and wilderness areas by Indian people for traditional cultural and religious purposes, the Secretary shall insure nonexclusive access to the parks and wilderness areas by Indian people for such traditional cultural and religious purposes. Such access shall be consistent with the purpose and intent of the American Indian Religious Freedom Act of August 11, 1978 (42 U.S.C. 1996).

FEE LANDS AND RIGHTS OF THE METROPOLITAN WATER DISTRICT OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

SEC. 608. Nothing in this Act shall affect the land and rights granted to the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California pursuant to the Act of June 18, 1932 (47 Stat. 324) or any rights to use public and reserved lands of the United States obtained by Metropolitan pursuant to the Boulder Canyon Project Act (43 U.S.C. 617–619b): Provided, That none of the lands designated as wilderness or included in the national park system by this Act shall be granted to Metropolitan pursuant to the Act of June 18, 1932, nor shall the use of such lands be granted to Metropolitan pursuant to the Boulder Canyon Project Act after the date of enactment of this Act.

TITLE VII—MILITARY ACTIVITIES

MILITARY OVERFLIGHTS

SEC. 701. The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) The national parks and wilderness areas designated by this Act lie within a region critical to providing training, research, and development for the Armed Forces of the United States and its allies;

(2) there is a lack of alternative sites available for these military training, testing and research activities;

(3) continued use of lands and airspace in the California desert region is essential for military purposes; and

(4) these military activities in the California desert have not impaired the natural and cultural values of the areas designated as parks and wilderness by this Act.

SEC. 702. Nothing in this Act shall preclude low level overflights of military aircraft, the designation of new units of special airspace, or the use or establishment of military flight training routes over the new units of the National Park or Wilderness Preservation Systems (or any additions to existing units) designated by this Act.

MILITARY WITHDRAWALS

SEC. 703. (a) CHINA LAKE. (1) Subject to valid existing rights and except as otherwise provided in this title, the Federal lands referred to in paragraph (2), and all other areas within the boundary of such lands as depicted on the map specified in such paragraph which may become subject to the operation of the public land laws, are hereby withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the public land laws (including the mining laws and the mineral leasing laws). Such lands are reserved for use by the Secretary of the Navy for—

(A) use as a research, development, test, and evaluation laboratory;

(B) use as a range for air warfare weapons and weapon systems;

(C) use as a high hazard training area for aerial gunnery, rocketry, electronic warfare and countermeasures, tactical maneuvering and air support; and

(D) subject to the requirements of section 4(f), other defense-related purposes consistent with the purposes specified in this paragraph.

(2) The lands referred to in paragraph (1) are the Federal lands, located within the boundaries of the China Lake Naval Weapons Center, comprising approximately 1,100,000 acres in Inyo, Kern, and San Bernardino Counties, California, as generally depicted on a map entitled "China Lake Naval Weapons Center Withdrawal—Proposed", dated January 1985, and filed in accordance with section 704.

(b) CHOCOLATE MOUNTAINS.—(1) Subject to valid existing rights and except as otherwise provided in this title, the Federal lands referred to in paragraph (2), and all other areas within the boundary of such lands as depicted on the map specified in such paragraph which may become subject to the operation off the public land laws, are hereby withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the public land laws (including the mining laws and the mineral leasing and geothermal leasing laws). Such lands are reserved for use by the Secretary of the Navy for—

(A) testing and training for aerial bombing, missile firing, tactical maneuvering and air support; and

(B) subject to the provisions of section 4(f), other defense-related purposes consistent with the purposes specified in this paragraph.

(2) The lands referred to in paragraph (1) are the Federal lands comprising approximately 227,369 acres in Imperial and Riverside Counties, California, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Chocolate Mountain Aerial Gunnery Range Withdrawal" dated July 1987 and filed in accordance with section 704.

MAPS AND LEGAL DESCRIPTIONS

SEC. 704. (a) PUBLICATION AND FILING REQUIREMENT.—As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(1) publish in the Federal Register a notice containing the legal description of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this title; and

(2) file maps and the legal description of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this title with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and with the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives.

(b) TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS.—Such maps and legal descriptions shall have the same force and effect as if they were included in this title except that the Secretary of the Interior may correct clerical and typographical errors in such maps and legal descriptions.

(c) AVAILABILITY FOR PUBLIC INSPECTION.—Copies of such maps and legal descriptions shall be available for public inspection in the Office of the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, Washington, District of Columbia; the Office of the Director, California State Office of the Bureau of Land Management, Sacramento California; the office of the commander of the Naval Weapons Center, China Lake, California; the office of the commanding officer, Marine Corps Air Station, Yuma, Arizona; and the Office of the Secretary of Defense, Washington, District of Columbia.

(d) REIMBURSEMENT.—The Secretary of Defense shall reimburse the Secretary of the Interior for the cost of implementing this section.

MANAGEMENT OF WITHDRAWN LANDS

SEC. 705. (a) MANAGEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—(1) Except as provided in subsection (g), during the period of the withdrawal the Secretary of the Interior shall manage the lands withdrawn under section 701 pursuant to the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.) and other applicable law, including this title.

(2) To the extent consistent with applicable law and Executive orders, the lands withdrawn under section 703 may be managed in a manner permitting—

(A) the continuation of grazing pursuant to applicable law and Executive orders where permitted on the date of enactment of this title;

(B) protection of wildlife and wildlife habitat;

(C) control of predatory and other animals;

(D) recreation;

(E) the prevention and appropriate suppression of brush and range fires resulting from nonmilitary activities; and

(F) geothermal leasing on the lands withdrawn under section 703(a) (relating to China Lake).

(3)(A) All nonmilitary use of such lands, including uses described in paragraph (2), shall be subject to such conditions and restrictions as may be necessary to permit the military use of such lands for the purposes specified in or authorized pursuant to this title.

(B) the Secretary of the Interior may issue any lease, easement, right-of-way, or other authorization with respect to the nonmilitary use of such lands only with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy.

(b) CLOSURE TO PUBLIC.—(1) If the Secretary of the Navy determines that military operations, public safety, or national security require the closure to public use of any road, trail, or other portion of the lands withdrawn by this title, the Secretary of the Navy, after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior determines necessary or desirable to effect and maintain such closure.

(2) Any such closure shall be limited to the minimum areas and periods which the Secretary of the Navy determines are required to carry out this subsection.

(3) Before and during any closure under this subsection, the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(A) keep appropriate warning notices posted; and

(B) take appropriate steps to notify the public concerning such closures.

(c) MANAGEMENT PLAN.—The Secretary of the Interior (after consultation with the Secretary of the Navy) shall develop a plan for the management of each area withdrawn under section 703 during the period of such withdrawal. Each plan shall—

(1) be consistent with applicable law;

(2) be subject to conditions and restrictions specified in subsection (a)(3);

(3) include such provisions as may be necessary for proper management and protection of the resources and values of such areas; and

(4) be developed not later than three years after the date of enactment of this title.

(d) BRUSH AND RANGE FIRES.—The Secretary of the Navy shall take necessary precautions to prevent and suppress brush and range fires occurring within and outside the lands withdrawn under section 703 as a result of military activities and may seek assistance from the Bureau of Land Management in the suppression of such fires. The memorandum of understanding required by subsection (e) shall provide for Bureau of Land Management assistance in the suppression of such fires, and for a transfer of funds from the Department of the Navy to the Bureau of Land Management as compensation for such assistance.

(e) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy shall (with respect to each land withdrawal under section 703) enter into a memorandum of understanding to implement the management plan developed under subsection (c). Any such memorandum of understanding shall provide that the Director of the Bureau of Land Management shall provide assistance in the suppression of fires resulting from the military use of lands withdrawn under section 703 if requested by the Secretary of the Navy.

(2) The duration of any memorandum shall be the same as the period of the withdrawal of the lands under section 703.

(f) ADDITIONAL MILITARY USES.—Lands withdrawn by section 703 may be used for defense-related uses other than those specified in such section. The Secretary of Defense shall promptly notify the Secretary of the Interior in the event that the lands withdrawn by this title will be used for defense-related purposes other than those specified in section 703. Such notification shall indicate the additional use or uses involved, the proposed duration of such uses, and the extent to which such additional military uses of the withdrawn lands will require that additional or more stringent conditions or restrictions be imposed on otherwise/permitted nonmilitary uses of the withdrawn land or portions thereof.

(g) MANAGEMENT OF CHINA LAKE.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior may, except as provided in subsection (g)(4), assign the management responsibility for the lands withdrawn under section 703(a) to the Secretary of the Navy who shall manage such lands, and issue leases, easements, rights-of-way, and other authorizations, in accordance with this title and cooperative management arrangements between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy. In the case that the Secretary of the Interior assigns such management responsibility to the Secretary of the Navy before the development of the management plan under subsection (c), the Secretary of the Navy (after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior) shall develop such management plan.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior shall be responsible for the issuance of any lease, easement, right-of-way, and other authorization with respect to any activity which involves both the lands withdrawn under section 703(a) and any other lands. Any such authorization shall be issued only with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy and, to the extent that such activity involves lands withdrawn under section 703(a), shall be subject to such conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

(3) The Secretary of the Navy shall prepare and submit to the Secretary of the Interior an annual report on the status of the natural and cultural resources and values of the lands withdrawn under section 703(a). The Secretary of the Interior shall transmit such report to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate.

(4) Neither this title nor any other provision of law shall be construed to prohibit the Secretary of the Interior from issuing any lease for the development and utilization of geothermal steam and associated geothermal resources on the lands withdrawn under section 703(a) pursuant to the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970 (30 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.) but no such lease shall be issued without the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy. Upon isssuance of such a lease, the Secretary of the Interior, consistent with his authority under applicable federal laws, shall be responsible for the administration of the lease and for the issuance of associated permits, rights-of-way, other authorizations and approval of required environmental impact mitigation measures within the leasehold.

(5) This title shall not affect the geothermal exploration and development authority of the Secretary of the Navy under section 2689 of title 10, United States Code, except that the Secretary of the Navy shall obtain the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior before taking action under that section with respect to the lands withdrawn under section 703(a).

DURATION OF WITHDRAWALS

SEC. 706. (1) DURATION.—The withdrawal and reservation established by this title shall terminate 15 years after the date of enactment of this title.

(b) DRAFT ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STATEMENT.—No later than 12 years after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Navy shall publish a draft environmental impact statement concerning continued or renewed withdrawal of any portion of the lands withdrawn by this title for which the Secretary intends to seek such continued or renewed withdrawal. Such draft environmental impact statement shall be consistent with the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (41 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) applicable to such a draft environmental impact statement. Prior to the termination date specified in subsection (a), the Secretary of the Navy shall hold a public hearing on any draft environmental impact statement. Such hearing shall be held in the State of California in order to receive public comments on the alternatives and other matters included in such draft environmental impact statement.

(c) EXTENSIONS OR RENEWALS.—The withdrawals established by this title may not be extended or renewed except by an Act or joint resolution.

ONGOING DECONTAMINATION

SEC. 707. (a) PROGRAM.—Throughout the duration of the withdrawals made by this title, the Secretary of the Navy, to the extent funds are made available, shall maintain a program of decontamination of lands withdrawn by this title at lease at the level of decontamination activities performed on such lands in fiscal year 1986.

(b) REPORTS.—At the same time as the President transmits to the Congress the President's proposed budget for the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this title and for each subsequent fiscal year, the Secretary of the Navy shall transmit to the Committees on Appropriations, Armed Services, and Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and to the Committees on Appropriations, Armed Services, and Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives a description of the decontamination efforts undertaken during the previous fiscal year on such lands and the decontamination activities proposed for such lands during the next fiscal year including:

(1) amounts appropriated and obligated or expended for decontamination of such lands;

(2) the methods used to decontaminate such lands;

(3) amount and types of contaminants removed from such lands;

(4) estimated types and amounts of residual contamination on such lands; and

(5) an estimate of the costs for full decontamination of such lands and the estimate of the time to complete such decontamination.

REQUIREMENTS FOR RENEWAL

SEC. 708. (a) NOTICE AND FILING.—(1) No later than three years prior to the termination of the withdrawal and reservation established by this title, the Secretary of the Navy shall advise the Secretary of the Interior as to whether or not the Secretary of the Navy will have a continuing military need for any of the lands withdrawn under section 703 after the termination date of such withdrawal and reservation.

(2) If the Secretary of the Navy concludes that there will be a continuing military need for any of such lands after the termination date, the Secretary shall file an application for extension of the withdrawal and reservation of such needed lands in accordance with the regulations and procedures of the Department of the Interior applicable to the extension of withdrawals of lands for military uses.

(3) If, during the period of withdrawal and reservation, the Secretary of the Navy decides to relinquish all or any of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this title, the Secretary shall file a notice of intention to relinquish with the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) CONTAMINATION.—(1) Before transmitting a notice of intention to relinquish pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary of Defense, acting through the Department of Navy, shall prepare a written determination concerning whether and to what extent the lands that are to be relinquished are contaminated with explosive, toxic, or other hazardous materials.

(2) A copy of such determination shall be transmitted with the notice of intention to relinquish.

(3) Copies of both the notice of intention to relinquish and the determination concerning the contaminated state of the lands shall be published in the Federal Register by the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) DECONTAMINATION.—If any land which is the subject of a notice of intention to relinquish pursuant to subsection (a) is contaminated, the Secretary of the Navy, determines that decontamination is practicable and economically feasible (taking into consideration the potential future use and value of the land) and that upon decontamination, the land could be opened to operation of some or all of the public land laws, including the mining laws, the Secretary of the Navy shall decontaminate the land to the extent that funds are appropriated for such purpose.

(c) ALTERNATIVES.—If the Secretary of the Interior, after consulation with the Secretary of the Navy, concludes that decontamination of any land which is the subject of a notice of intention to relinquish pursuant to subsection (a) is not practicable or economically feasible, or that the land cannot be decontaminated sufficiently to be opened to operation of some or all of the public land laws, of if Congress does not appropriate a sufficient amount of funds for the decontamination of such land, the Secretary of the Interior shall not be required to accept the land proposed for relinquishment.

(e) STATUS OF CONTAMINATED LANDS.—If, because of their contaminated state, the Secretary of the Interior declines to accept jurisdiction over lands withdrawn by this title which have been proposed for relinquishment, or if at the expiration of the withdrawal made by this title the Secretary of the Interior determines that some of the lands withdrawn by this title are contaminated to an extent which prevents opening such contaminated lands to operation of the public land laws—

(1) the Secretary of the Navy shall take appropriate steps to warn the public of the contaminated state of such lands and any risks associated with entry onto such lands;

(2) after the expiration of the withdrawal, the Secretary of the Navy shall undertake no activities on such lands except in connection with decontamination of such lands; and

(3) the Secretary of the Navy shall report to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Congress concerning the status of such lands and all actions taken in furtherance of this subsection.

(f) REVOCATION AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Interior, upon deciding that it is in the public interest to accept jurisdiction over lands proposed for relinquishment pursuant to subsection (a), is authorized to revoke the withdrawal and reservation established by this title as it applies to such lands. Should the decision be made to revoke the withdrawal and reservation, the Secretary of the Interior shall publish in the Federal Register an appropriate order which shall—

(1) terminate the withdrawal and reservation;

(2) constitute official acceptance of full jurisdiction over the lands by the Secretary of the Interior;

(3) state the date upon which the lands will be opened to the operation of some or all of the public land laws, including the mining laws.

DELEGABILITY

SEC. 709. (a) DEFENSE.—The functions of the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the Navy under this title may be delegated.

(b) INTERIOR.—The functions of the Secretary of the Interior under this title may be delegated, except that an order described in section 708(f) may be approved and signed only by the Secretary of the Interior, the Under Secretary of the Interior, or an Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

HUNTING, FISHING, AND TRAPPING

SEC. 710. All hunting, fishing, and trapping on the lands withdrawn by this title shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of section 2671 of title 10, United States Code.

IMMUNITY OF THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 711. The United States and all departments or agencies thereof shall be held harmless and shall not be liable for any injuries or damages to persons or property suffered in the course of any geothermal leasing or other authorized nonmilitary activity conducted on lands described in section 703 of this title.

EL CENTRO RANGES

SEC. 712. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to permit the Secretary of the Navy to use until January 1, 1990 the public lands in Imperial County, California, generally depicted on the map entitled "El Centro Ranges" dated July 1987, for the same purposes and to no greater extent than such lands were used by the Secretary of the Navy as of July 1, 1987. Such permission shall be through a cooperative agreement or other appropriate means. Such use shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may require so as to protect the natural, environmental, scientific, cultural, and other resources and values of such lands and to minimize the extent to which such use by the Secretary of the Navy impedes or restricts use of such or other public lands for recreational and other purposes.•

By Mr. BREAUX:

S. 22. A bill to regulate interstate commerce with respect to parimutuel wagering on greyhound racing, to maintain the stability of the greyhound racing industry, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

INTERSTATE GREYHOUND RACING ACT

• Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, today I am introducing in the 102d Congress a bill that the Senate should have adopted in the 101st Session, the Interstate Greyhound Racing Act of 1991. This legislation, when enacted, will regulate interstate commerce with respect to interstate parimutuel wagering on greyhound racing. I say that we should have passed this bill, Mr. President, because it provides for greyhound owners the same protective system that has proven so successful for owners of racing horses. The dog racing industry is one of increasing interest and importance; this bill ensures fairness for dog owners, and it thereby ensures orderly growth and stability for the industry.

Eleven years ago nearly identical legislation, the Interstate Horse Racing Act of 1978, was considered by the U.S. Senate and passed by voice vote. I hasten to add that the House of Representatives also passed the Interstate Horse Racing Act of 1978 by voice vote. The major difference between my bill and that passed in 1978 is that I am asking today that we extend to greyhound owners the same protection given to horsemen in 1978.

Mr. President, my bill does not require that we spend Federal money. It does not create a new agency of government, and it does not legalize off-track betting. The States legalize off-track betting.

This legislation does provide that an interstate wager on a greyhound race taking place in one State may not be placed with an off-track betting office in another State without the consent of: First, the racetrack where the race is to be run, second, the racing commission of the State where the race is to be run, and third, the racing commission of the State where the off-track betting office is located.

Greyhound wagering across State lines will not take place without the agreement of these indispensable parties. State interests are protected, and the interests of greyhound owners cannot be disregarded by racetracks.

A host racetrack must have a written agreement with the greyhound owners' group. This agreement will specify terms and conditions under which the track will consent to an interstate wager with an off-track, out of State betting system.

Mr. President, no longer will greyhound races be simulcast to interstate off-track betting locations without the consent or agreement of greyhound owners. These owners have the same "proprietary" interest as horsemen. A horseman's interest is protected by law, and my bill offers that same protection to greyhound owners.

An icon of the Senate, the Honorable Walter D. Huddleston of Kentucky, with remarkable conciseness, spoke to the issue this way during the Senate floor consideration of the Interstate Horse Racing Act of 1978 when he said:

> In essence, this bill regulates the acceptance of an interstate off-track wager that is placed or accepted in one State on the outcome of a horse race taking place in another (State).
> The bill prohibits such wagering unless all the parties involved in racing—the track, the horsemen, the off-track betting interests, and the racing commissions of the States involved—agree, either directly or indirectly, regarding the terms and conditions of such wagering. This bill will prevent an off-track betting system in one State from using a race in another State without the permission of the parties that have a "proprietary" interest in that race.

This is an issue of considerable national interest, and I urge my colleagues to support the enactment of the legislation. It is a little-known fact that 26 million people visited the 46 greyhound race tracks in the United States in 1988. I remind us that greyhound racing contributed $225 million to 14 racing States and their county governments. Additionally, the sport generated millions of dollars in payroll taxes and sales taxes paid at the track and at local motels, restaurants, gasoline stations, and other greyhound-related businesses.

Few of us know that greyhound racing is the sixth largest spectator sport in America, and it's still growing. Ten new greyhound tracks are planned for construction in Kansas, Texas, and Wisconsin. A track that generates a "handle" of more than $500,000 will employ a minimum of 600 people.

The National Greyhound Association [NGA] is the sole registry for the racing greyhound on the North American Continent. The NGA, a voluntary nonprofit association, is located in the State of Kansas. It was organized in 1906, and has a membership today of over 6,000 owners and breeders of racing greyhounds. The NGA maintains a rigid identification system with records of all breeding, litters whelped, individual registrations, transfers, and leases. The NGA's exacting system is a major factor in maintaining greyhound racing's "clean as a hound's teeth" very admirable reputation as a major spectator sport. The NGA is an associate member of the World Greyhound Racing Federation and a charter and founding member of the World Alliance of Greyhound Registries and the American Greyhound Council.

Mr. President, this sport has a history that is worthy of veneration. As early as 4,000 years ago, the greyhound was the subject of art, lore, sport and entertainment in ancient civilizations of Egypt, Persia, Greece, Rome, and later in England and Ireland. Cleopatra loved greyhound hunting and racing. Queen Elizabeth I established the first formal rules of greyhound racing in the 1700's.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the continued orderly development of this venerable "sport of queens."●

By Mr. DOLE (for Mr. SIMPSON, for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. THURMOND, and Mr. JEFFORDS):

S. 23. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to index rates of veterans' disability compensation and surviving spouses' and children's dependency and indemnity compensation to automatically increase to keep pace with the cost of living; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS' AND SURVIVOR'S COMPENSATION INDEXING ACT

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, earlier in the day the Republican leader introduced a bill, S. 23, that is a cost of living allowance adjustment bill for veterans. I rise to join in the introduction of that legislation that would remedy a very strange and unfortunate and unfair situation faced by many disabled veterans and their survivors in this country today. As I say, I am joined in this effort by the Republican leader, Senator DOLE, and by Senator MURKOWSKI, Senator SPECTER, Senator THURMOND, and Senator JEFFORDS.

Last fall, Mr. President, in our last minute extremity with regard to the budget, Congress failed to pass a cost-of-living adjustment for these veterans when the bill became loaded down with unnecessary and costly and burdensome provisions.

Several of us tried to remedy that situation. We were poised to pass a bill which would be defined as a clean bill that would have provided only the cost-of-living adjustment, only the COLA adjustment. But that effort was stymied by an objection raised in the House of Representatives, and the bill went nowhere amid a great clatter about somebody or various groups being antiveteran. About the last thing I have ever noticed in this body is that anybody is antiveteran.

But there is, of course, a limit somewhere when we deal with those veterans who have never left the United States, maybe have been involved in service for 6 months or 1 year. That is a distinction I have always made and will continue to make.

We give veterans $31½ billion, and there are 27½ million of us. I am proud to be one of that number. I was overseas with the army of occupation after the war in Europe. No shells were flying when I was there. I have related that before, but in some sensible way, we have to emphasize that our first care is to the service-connected disabled veteran, the combat veteran, and that is something we have to do; not get caught in the emotion of the issue.

In any event, there is not anyone that would not indicate that the veterans, these veterans covered in the legislation, deserve to have their COLA without having to depend on Congress to pass separate legislation authorizing it in each and every year. That is something you do not want to miss. It is what has happened over the years.

Some of the veterans groups got together years ago and decided it would be better for them if they had a separate COLA, if you dealt with it separately, and not let it get tied to any other form of index. The reason for that was that they would get more. That worked pretty well except for 1 year.

Yet, that is something that certainly did not work last year. That is why I am introducing this legislation today, which provides for an automatic cost-of-living adjustment for veterans receiving disability compensation, and for their surviving spouses and children who receive dependency and indemnity compensation.

It would also automatically increase the clothing allowance for those veterans who have service-connected disabilities that require them to use prosthetic devices that may cause their clothing to wear. The unstoppable freight train is what stopped the bill last year.

Madam President, the Senate was never given the opportunity to vote on a bill that would simply have assured disabled veterans received the cost-of-living adjustment. I supported and tried to secure consideration of such a measure. I supported and tried to secure consideration of a more streamlined and responsible Senate bill.

I worked with a fine chairman in the House, SONNY MONTGOMERY, who is "Mr. Veteran" and "Mr. Veterans' Affairs" as to what he has done for many years in this Congress. But there were Senators who felt more strongly that it would be a fine opportunity to hook it up; to hook the old freight up with everything you could get on it including a caboose; that it was more important to mandate another study of the health effects of Agent Orange than it was for disabled veterans to have their COLA.

They put a stop to that effort and through their auspices in the House, they achieved that. They also had other items on their mind, things that have been rejected by the full Veterans' Affairs Committee in a bipartisan fashion. But since the freight train was going through the building, they thought they would tack it all on, and it failed for them, I hope we will not see that again. This bill will assure that we do not. So let us assure that disabled veterans and their survivors never again have to be faced with that particular uncertainty.

I also want to bear my efforts to secure rapid consideration and passage of the bill to provide that cost-of-living adjustment, a bill that is assured of rapid passage because it contains only the veterans cost-of-living adjustment, the COLA bill.

But I trust that we will then make this effort under this bill, S. 23, to assure that the COLA for veterans each year becomes automatic and not subject to the whims of Congress. It is a fun and games that should not go on. Let us just do a COLA and let the other thing rise or fall on their worth. Certainly Agent Orange is a very complex issue, and will remain ever so. But it need not ever be tied again to a COLA.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. NICKLES. I compliment the Senator for his leadership on this issue, and I ask that he be kind enough to add me as a cosponsor.

Mr. SIMPSON. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma very much, and indeed will include him as a cosponsor.

I will conclude my remarks, and say I am very much looking forward to working with the leadership on these bills. We have heard today a great discussion on the Democratic agenda and their bills, and the Republican agenda and their bills.

I must say I was a bit surprised with the intensity of the majority leader as he talked about the education measure as if George Bush were really not the education President. He did not say that in those words. The education bill passed the Senate and passed the House, and died in the last hours of the night before we exited here in October. It had nothing to do with George Bush—child care, these issues of parental activity, civil rights—to indicate somehow that George Bush, the President, had a lesser commitment to civil rights. Those things are balderdash.

If we are going to start off on this bright Monday, after dealing with a very serious issue Saturday—and I commend the majority leader and the minority leader for their work. None of us have any satisfaction from that tough vote. We did it. We did what we had to do, and we will see whether it does what all of us hope it will do, and that is increase the prospects for peace by showing that we are ready to use another option in our activities.

But I do not think it is really very appropriate to simply lay out every bill on the Democratic agenda as if it were somehow saving the world from George Bush. I think we can do a little better than that.

Thank you.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 23

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE AND REFERENCES

SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the "Veterans' and Survivors' Compensation Indexing Act."

(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

DISABILITY COMPENSATION AND DEPENDENCY AND INDEMNITY COMPENSATION RATE INCREASES

SEC. 2. Section 3112 is amended by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d) and inserting the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) Effective December 1 of each year, each rate of disablity compensation under sections 314 and 315, dependency and indemnity compensation under sections 411, 413, and 414, and the clothing allowance under section 362 shall be increased by the percent change in the price index for the base quarter of such year over the price index for the base quarter of the immediately preceding year, adjusted to the nearest 1/10 of 1 percent.

"(2) For the purpose of this section—

"(A) 'price index' means the Consumer Price Index published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics;

"(B) the term 'base quarter,' as used with respect to a year, means the calendar quarter ending on September 30 of such year; and

"(C) the price index for a base quarter is the arithmetical mean of such index for the three months comprising such quarter."

SEC. 3. The redesignated subsection (d) of section 3112 is amended by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (3) and inserting the following new paragraph:

"(2) Whenever disability compensation, dependency and indemnity compensation, and clothing allowance rates are increased under subsection (c) of this section, the Secretary shall publish new rates in the Federal Register as soon as practicable."

SEC. 4. The Secretary may, consistent with the increases authorized by this title, administratively adjust the rates of disability compensation payable to persons within the purview of section 10 of Public Law 85-857 who are not in receipt of compensation payable under chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code. Notice of any adjustments made under this section will be published in accordance with section 3, above.

S. 24. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to make permanent the exclusion from gross income of educational assistance provided to employees; to the Committee on Finance.

EMPLOYEE EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Employee Educational Assistance Act of 1991, legislation that will make permanent section 127 of the Internal Revenue Code. This bill ensures that employees will be able to continue to receive up to $5,250 annually in tuition reimbursements or similar educational benefits from their employers on a tax-free basis. I am pleased to be joined in introducing this legislation by 35 of my distinguished colleagues. We have had similar levels of support for this measure in past years. Such continued support is indicative of the importance that so many of us attach to tax-free treatment of educational assistance, and to the need to make it a permanent part of the Tax Code.

First enacted in 1978, section 127 has enabled over 7 million working men and women to advance their education and improve their job skills without incurring additional income tax liabilities and a reduction in take-home pay. Without this provision, an employee would owe taxes on the value of any educational benefits provided by an employer that do not directly relate to the current job held. For example, a clerical worker pursuing a college diploma who earns $21,000 annually and who receives tuition reimbursement for two semesters of night courses—worth approximately $4,000—would owe additional Federal income and payroll taxes of over $1,000 on this educational assistance. If the educational benefits are accepted, the employee incurs a loss of over $1,000 in take-home pay. The effects are even more severe if he or she lives in a State that uses the Federal definition of income for State tax purposes. It is shortsighted to impose such a tax burden on employees seeking to further their education. For many low- and moderate-income employees, this cut in take-home pay is simply prohibitive, preventing them from enrolling in courses that would upgrade their job skills and improve their future career prospects. Without this investment in our employees' education, the ability of our work force to compete in the global economy erodes. By removing the requirement that educational assistance be job related, section 127 eliminates a tax burden on workers seeking to further their education and improve their career prospects.

Moreover, section 127 removes a tax bias against lesser skilled workers because they have greater difficulty proving that educational benefits are directly related to their current job, due to narrower job descriptions.

Congress has until now only enacted section 127 for temporary periods. It has repeatedly allowed the provision to lapse, only to reextend it on a retroactive basis for another temporary period. Since 1978, there have been 5 extensions of this provision. Most recently the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 provided for a 15-month extension of section 127, retroactive from its September 30, 1990, expiration date through December 31, 1991. Without further action by Congress, the provision will agian expire on that date.

It is time for this cliffhanger approach to stop. Employees cannot plan sensibly for their educational goals, not knowing the extent to which accepting educational assistance may reduce their take-home pay. And for employers, the fits and starts of the legislative history of section 127 have been a serious administrative nuisance. If section 127 is in force, then there is no need to withhold taxes on educational benefits provided; if not, the job-relatedness of the educational assistance must be ascertained, a value assigned, and withholding adjusted accordingly. And we leave everyone to guess until late in the year whether Congress will extend the provision, or reenact it retroactively if it has already expired. This needless uncertainty and inefficiency reflects badly on the legislative process; it must cease.

The Employee Educational Assistance Act of 1991 would restore certainty to section 127, by extending it on a permanent basis. The 1990 Budget Reconciliation Act, in addition to extending the tax-free treatment for undergraduate assistance, restored tax-free treatment for assistance provided for graduate level studies. Tax-free graduate assistance had been eliminated in 1988. The Employee Educational Assistance Act of 1991 will permanently extend the tax-free status for both undergraduate and graduate assistance.

Mr. President, I introduced similar legislation in the 101st Congress, S. 260 and S. 2988, which enjoyed wide bipartisan support. Encouraging workers to further their education and to improve their job skills is an important national priority, crucial for preserving our competitive position in the global economy. Permitting employees to receive educational assistance on a tax-free basis, without incurring significant cuts in take-home pay, is a demonstrated cost-effective means to achieve these objectives.

Employee educational assistance is not an extravagant fringe benefit for highly paid executives. It largely benefits low- and moderate-income employees seeking access to higher education or further job training. A recent survey undertaken by the American Society for Training and Development indicated that over 70 percent of recipients of section 127 benefits in 1986 earned less than $30,000. In fact, lower income employees are more likely to participate in educational assistance programs than those on the higher end of the income scale. Employees making less than $30,000 participate at a much higher rate than those making above that income, and participation rates decline as salary levels increase. Moreover, employees making less than $15,000 participate at almost twice the rate of those who earn over $50,000.

Further, section 127 makes an important contribution to simplicity in the Tax Code. Without it, employers and the IRS would be required to determine on a case-by-case basis which employer-provided educational benefits are sufficiently related to the job to avoid treatment as taxable income.

Today, American workers are the most productive in the industrialized and developing world. Yet pressures from international competition and the pace of technological change require continual adjustment by our work force. Retraining will thus be necessary to maintain and strengthen American industry's competitive position in the global economy. Section 127 permits employees to adapt and retrain without incurring additional tax liabilities and a reduction in take-home pay. By removing the tax burden from workers seeking retraining, section 127 will enable employees displaced by foreign competition or technological change to learn new job skills. Retraining will take on an increasing importance in this decade, given that approximately 85 percent of those who will make up the work force in the year 2000 are already working today. Work force growth in the next decade is expected to barely match that during the Great Depression.

The American Electronics Association has reported that the United States is experiencing an acute shortage of engineers—some 20,000 engineers between 1981 and 1985. The association further notes the troubling fact that the United States produces fewer engineers per capita than many of our major trading partners and has relatively smaller numbers of workers in research and development. To counter this trend, almost half of America's largest electronic firms have initiated educational assistance programs under section 127 to encourage employees to pursue advanced degrees in electronics. Without section 127, employees participating in this important effort to maintain our competitive position in high technology will incur a penalty of additional taxes. The Tax Code should not hinder such an effort, and section 127 is designed to make sure that it does not.

Section 127 has also helped to improve the quality of America's public education system, at a fraction of the cost of direct-aid programs. It has enabled thousands of public school teachers to obtain advanced degrees, augmenting the quality of instruction in our schools. A survey by the National Education Association a few years ago found that almost half of all American public school systems provide tuition assistance to teachers seeking advanced training and degrees. Again, the Tax Code should not impose obstacles to this kind of shared effort at improvement. This legislation, by making section 127 permanent, for both graduate and undergraduate assistance, will ensure that it does not.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 24

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Represenatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE EXCLUSION MADE PERMANENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 127 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking subsection (d).

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to join my distinguished colleague, the Senior Senator from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN, in introducing the Employee Educational Assistance Act of 1991. This important legislation would permit an employee to receive educational benefits, such as tuition reimbursement or outside training, from their employers on a tax-free basis. In addition, this bill would make section 127 a permanent provision of the Internal Revenue Code.

Educational assistance is not a fringe benefit for highly paid executives. Rather, it is a program that directly benefits students, employees seeking to better themselves, and employers needing to retrain their work force.

Educational assistance is designed to help young students meet the soaring costs of education in this country, enabling them to pursue their studies. Without the benefit of this program, graduate students would be forced to pay taxes on their tuition waivers and stipends. Taxing these meager stipends places unbearable demands upon our Nation's youth.

In addition, this assistance allows employers to provide their employees with a prescribed amount of tax-exempt tuition payments in order to advance in studies which are related to their jobs. This program is particularly important for workers who want to upgrade their skills and vocational opportunities, and for retraining employees whose current skills have become technologically obsolete.

Mr. President, since 1979, Congress has recognized the important benefits derived from this provision. Unfortunately, section 127 is not a permanent provision of the Code. Thus, over the years, continuation of this worthy provision has been left to temporary and piecemeal extensions. On several occasions, this provision actually lapsed, only to be reextended on a retroactive basis for another temporary period. Such uncertainty has hampered the effectiveness of section 127.

I encourage and applaud incentives that will improve our nations work force, and increase our competitiveness in the world market. It is vital to the competitiveness of the United States business that Congress act to create an environment that encourages productivity improvement in the workplace, as well as individual opportunity for personal growth.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

S. 25. A bill to protect the reproductive rights of women, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE ACT

• Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to have reintroduced today S. 25, the proposed Freedom of Choice Act, which I introduced in the last Congress with the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], as S. 1912 following the Supreme Court's 1989 decision in Webster versus Reproductive Health Services. Although the Webster decision did not directly overturn the landmark Roe versus Wade decision, it gave State legislatures an open invitation to begin meddling with the rights of women to make their own decisions regarding the issue of abortion. The Freedom of Choice Act is intended to codify as a Federal right the holding of the Roe versus Wade decision and thereby prevent the erosion of individual rights threatened by the Webster decision.

The legislation being introduced today has broad bipartisan support. I am very pleased to be joined in introducing this legislation by Members of both sides of the aisle who are strongly committed to protecting freedom of choice for all women, regardless of where they may reside. A companion measure, H.R. 25, was introduced in the House of Representatives on January 3 by my good friend and colleague from California, Representative DON EDWARDS. During the last Congress, a number of hearings were held on this legislation in both the House and the Senate. The Freedom of Choice Act was also favorably reported by the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the House Judiciary Committee shortly before the 101st Congress adjourned.

At the time that the Freedom of Choice bill was first introduced in the Senate on November 17, 1989, I submitted a lengthy statement outlining its purpose and explaining certain terms included in the legislation. The text of the bill being introduced today is identical to the text of the bill, S. 1912, in the 101st Congress, and the legislative intent described in that statement is fully applicable to the current bill, S. 25.

Mr. President, the vast majority of Americans believe that decisions in this difficult area should be made by individuals, free from government intrusion or control. The Freedom of Choice Act is designed to help ensure that access to safe and legal abortion remains a protected right, secured by the laws of the United States, as it has been since Roe versus Wade was decided almost two decades ago.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my 1989 statement detailing the provisions of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks along with the text of S. 25.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. SIMON, Mr. PELL, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. WILSON, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. GLENN, Mr. COHEN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. ROBB, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. LAUTENBERG, and Mr. KENNEDY):

S. 1912. A bill to protect the reproductive rights of women, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am proud to introduce today with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] and other Members of the Senate the proposed Freedom of Choice Act of 1989. This bipartisan legislation is designed to codify the holding of the 1973 Roe versus Wade decision.

We are joined in introducing this legislation by the Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI], the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA], the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], the Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBB], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

Companion legislation is being introduced in the House of Representatives by my good friend and colleague from California, Representative DON EDWARDS and the co-Chair of the Congressional Caucus on Women's Issues, the Representative from Colorado, PAT SCHROEDER.

Mr. President, this legislation is intended to accomplish one simple goal: Preserve the rights of pregnant women to make their own individual decision regarding whether or not to terminate a pregnancy. These rights which were guaranteed by the Supreme Court in the landmark decision in Roe versus Wade almost 17 years ago are in grave jeopardy today.

BACKGROUND: ROE VERSUS WADE

Mr. President, in 1973 the United States Supreme Court held in Roe v. Wade, 40 U.S. 113, that the Constitution protects a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy. The Court noted that its prior decisions had found a right to personal privacy embedded in the Constitution's protection of personal liberty and concluded that right of privacy encompassed a woman's decision whether or not to carry a pregnancy to term. The Court further concluded that since the right of personal privacy is a fundamental right, only a "compelling state interest" could justify its limitation by a state. In a related case, Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, handed down at the same time, the Court explicitly stated that a State may not interfere in a significant way with the exercise that prohibit or substantially limit access to the means of effectuating that decision.

The Roe decision set forth a number of basic principles by which State regulation of abortion rights were to be measured. Balancing competing interests at different stages of a pregnancy, the Court found that the stage of fetal viability was the point at which the State's interest arises. It held that following viability, the State's interest permits it to regulate and even proscribe an abortion except when necessary for the preservation of the life or health of the mother. Prior to viability, the State's powers were limited to promoting its interest in the health of mother by regulating the abortion procedure in ways that are reasonably related to maternal health. During the first trimester, the Court held that the abortion decision and its effectuation must be left solely to the woman and her physician.

In the intervening years, the Court on numerous occasions, rigorously enforced its 1973 holding, striking down attempts by States to interfere with a woman's right to decide whether or not to terminate a pregnancy.

On July 3, 1989, however, the Court sent a shockwave through the country when it handed down its decision in Webster versus Reproductive Health Services. The Webster decision gave State legislatures an open invitation to begin meddling with the freedom of individual women to make their own decisions in this difficult area. Although the decision did not directly overturn Roe, it signaled the Court's willingness to apply a less stringent standard of review to State restrictions concerning a woman's right to an abortion.

Mr. President, after the Webster decision, Americans can no longer assume that access to safe and legal abortions will remain a guaranteed right. The Webster decision was a blow to all Americans who look to the Court to protect and preserve fundamental rights and liberties.

There is ample evidence to indicate that this legislation is sorely needed. Freedom of choice is already under assault in the State legislatures.

Shortly after the Webster decision, the Louisiana legislature passed a non-binding resolution urging State district attorneys to enforce a long-standing law outlawing abortions and requiring jail terms for doctors who provide them.

In Florida, an effort was made by the antichoice Governor to force the State legislature to enact restrictions in a special session called for that purpose. That ill-conceived effort failed, but there is little doubt that there will be further attempts in Florida in the coming year.

Only a few days ago, the Pennsylvania legislature won the distinction of making that State one of the most restrictive in the Nation by passing sweeping antichoice legislation. That legislation included provisions such as 24-hour waiting periods and spousal consent requirements which had previously been declared unconstitutional under Roe.

The purpose of the legislation we are introducing today is to create a statutory basis for the rights established under the Roe decision in order to prevent the States from undermining those rights. It is our intention to codify the state of the law established under Roe prior to Webster.

It has long been recognized that Congress has the authority, under section 5 of the 14th amendment and other provisions of the Constitution to enact legislation to restrain States from denying due process and equal protection rights to individuals or interfering with fundamental rights.

OUTLINE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. President, the Freedom of Choice Act of 1989 is very simple. Section 2(a) provides that a State may not restrict the right of a woman to choose to terminate a pregnancy before fetal viability or at any time if such termination is necessary to protect the life or health of the woman. As I indicated earlier, that is the basic principle established under the Roe decision.

Section 2(b) provides that a State may impose only those restrictions on a woman's right to an abortion prior to viability that are medically necessary to protect the woman's life or health—a concept established in Roe. This provision allows a limited exception to the general rule that a State may not interfere with a woman's fundamental right to choose whether or not to have an abortion. To meet this exception, the State would have to demonstrate that a rule or procedure was designed to protect the life or health of the woman, was medically necessary, and consituted the least restrictive means of furthering the State's interest in the woman's health.

Thus, under Roe versus Wade, it has been held that a State could not impose requirements which are not medically necessary such as a requirement that all abortions be performed in a hospital. Similarly, spousal consent requirements and waiting requirements have been held to be not medically necessary and therefore unconstitutional under Roe. On the other hand, statutes requiring that abortions be performed by licensed physicians have been upheld.

Mr. President, Roe versus Wade and its progeny clearly barred States from devising ingenious statutory schemes to deny women the right to exercise the basic right of freedom of choice. To the extent that Webster both invites and approves erosion of the Roe rights, this legislation is intended to reverse the impact of that decision.

There are several specific aspects of this legislation which should be noted.

First, the bill refers to the concept of fetal viability which the Court held in Roe to be the point where the State's interest in the fetus arises. In Roe, the Court defined viability as the point at which the fetus is "potentially able to live outside the mother's womb, albeit with artificial aid," 410 U.S. at 160. Such potentiality, however, must be for "meaningful life" and this cannot encompass simply momentary survival, 410 U.S. at 163. Finally, and most importantly, Roe stressed the central role of the pregnant woman's doctor in determining viability, emphasizing that "the abortion decision in all its aspects is inherently, and primarily, a medical decision," 410 at 160. In a subsequent case, Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52 (1976), the Court reemphasized that viability is "a matter of medical judgment, skill, and technical ability." In that decision, the Court also held that "it is not the proper function of the legislature or the courts to place viability, which is essentially a medical concept, at a specific point in the gestation period. The time when viability is achieved may vary with each pregnancy, and the determination of whether a particular fetus is viable is, and must be, a matter for the judgment of the attending physician", 428 U.S. at 64. The physician's central role in determining viability, and the lack of such definitional authority in the legislatures was reaffirmed by the Court in Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379 (1979).

Another important issue relates to the question of funding of abortion services for low-income women. Roe versus Wade did not address the issue of public funding for abortion services and subsequent Supreme Court decisions involving Medicaid funding distinguished the right to terminate a pregnancy from the right to have government funding. Since this bill is designed simply to codify the basic rights established under Roe, it does not include any requirement for public funding of abortion services. However, separate legislation, the Reproductive Health Equity Act, which has previously been introduced in the House of Representatives, will be introduced in the Senate. That measure would have the effect of repealing the numerous restrictions on funding for abortion services in various programs, like Medicaid which have been enacted in the past decade.

Although the measure is totally separate and distinct from the legislation we are introducing today, many of the supporters of freedom of choice feel strongly that a two-tiered system which protects only the rights of women who can afford to pay for an abortion is unconscionable. Hopefully, in the not-so-distant future we will be able to assure all women, regardless of economic status, equal access to safe and legal abortion services.

Finally, the bill we are introducing, like Roe versus Wade itself, does not specifically address the issue of parental consent or notification requirements. The sponsors of this measure may have differing views as to whether a specific provision dealing with this issue is either necessary or appropriate. In the intervening years since the Roe decision, although that holding has clearly been applied to pregnant minors, the specific issue of the constitutionality of parental consent or notification statutes has not been clearly settled. Two of the three cases pending before the Supreme Court directly address the over-all question of whether a State can impose any type of restriction on minors' access to abortions.

My own view is that carving out an exception which would result in denying minors access to abortion would be unacceptable and would only serve to drive desparate teenagers into the hands of back-ally butchers or deadly efforts to induce their own abortions. Access to safe, legal abortions for all women who make that choice ought to remain an over-riding goal. The specific issues of parental consent or notification statutes will undoubtedly be addressed during the consideration of this legislation once the Supreme Court has acted in the pending cases.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I believe that when future historians write the book on the progress of expansion of individual rights in the last quarter of the 20th century, they will mark the introduction of the Freedom of Choice Act of 1989 as one the milestones in the steady progress of our society towards securing the rights of women, and all Americans, to live their own lives, free from unwarranted governmental intervention.

The vast majority of Americans support the right of an individual woman to make her own decision regarding whether or not to terminate a pregnancy and don't support government intervention.

Individual freedom is a value Americans have always held dear. We neither want nor need government by "big brother".

Nor do most Americans want to see the clock turned back and a return to the days when unskilled, illegal abortionists preyed upon desperate women.

Abortion is a very emotional and controversial issue. There are strong feelings on both sides, often based upon deeply felt religious convictions and beliefs. The central issue, however, is a simple one: who decides. The sponsors of this legislation believe that decisions regarding abortions are deeply personal, profound matters best made by the individual woman herself, guided by her own personal beliefs and convictions, free from governmental interference. That approach is consistent with the most deeply cherished values in our society—individual liberty and personal freedom.

This bill is designed to help ensure that access to safe and legal abortion remains a protected right, secured by the laws of the United States. It is designed to help ensure that women, whatever State they may reside in, continue to have the freedom of choice which was guaranteed by the Roe versus Wade decision.

S. 25

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Freedom of Choice Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. RIGHT TO CHOOSE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), a State may not restrict the right of a woman to choose to terminate a pregnancy—

(1) before fetal viability; or

(2) at any time, if such termination is necessary to protect the life or health of the woman.

(b) MEDICALLY NECESSARY REQUIREMENTS.—A State may impose requirements medically necessary to protect the life or health of women referred to in subsection (a).

SEC. 3. DEFINITION OF STATE.

As used in this Act, the term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and each other territory or possession of the United States.

• Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join as an original cosponsor to the Freedom of Choice Act in the 102d Congress. I was a cosponsor in the 101st Congress, and I have done so again this year because I firmly support the right to privacy, including the principles embodied in Roe versus Wade.

The decision of whether or not to have an abortion is one of the most personal decisions a woman can make. Women should be able to make this decision according to their own circumstances and beliefs—without unnecessary interference from the government or politicians.

Unfortunately, the Supreme Court has been retreating from Roe versus Wade and the right to privacy which was reaffirmed in that case. The 1989 Webster decision, in particular, undermined privacy rights significantly. The Freedom of Choice Act is designed to end this retreat and reaffirm Americans' fundamental right to privacy. To do so, the act would codify the Supreme Court's basic holding in Roe, as elaborated upon in subsequent pre-Webster decisions.

Concerns have been raised about whether the Act would permit laws that encourage parental involvement before a young woman makes her decision. Under Roe, the Supreme Court has upheld such laws, so long as they contain a "bypass" procedure for cases—such as incest—where special circumstances make parental involvement inappropriate. A legal analysis by the congressional research service concludes that, by incorporating the Roe standard, the Freedom of Choice Act would continue to permit such laws. "It is likely," the report says, that:

> The courts would interpret the otherwise unexplicated language of the [Act], if enacted, in a way as to make it compatible with the surrounding body of law into which it must be integrated. That body of law includes, under the regime of Roe versus Wade . . . the permissibility of state laws mandating parental notification or consent, subject to an alternative bypass.

I feel the Freedom of Choice Act is necessary to send a clear message that the constitutional right to privacy should be maintained.

• Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Freedom of Choice Act along with Senator CRANSTON and a number of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

The Freedom of Choice Act was first introduced in the 101st Congress, in response to the assaults on a woman's right to choose which resulted from the Supreme Court's decision in Webster versus Reproductive Health Services in 1989. Accepting the invitation to restrict women's access to safe and legal abortion which was recognized in Roe versus Wade in 1973, many States have passed or attempted to pass laws varying from mandating the consent of the woman's husband to subjecting medical facilities which perform abortions to unreasonable or unnecessary regulations. In the U.S. territory of Guam, abortion has actually been outlawed. Most of these restrictions are being challenged in court—a costly and time-consuming process to secure a right recognized nearly 20 years ago.

The basic principles of Roe versus Wade have been relied upon by women and by the medical profession since 1973. In Roe the Court addressed the issue of abortion by balancing the competing interests involved. During the first trimester of pregnancy, the abortion decision is left to the woman and her doctor. During the second trimester, a State may regulate abortion in ways that are reasonably related to maternal health. After fatal viability, a State may regulate and even proscribe abortion except where abortion is necessary to preserve the life or health of the woman.

We have endeavored to codify the reasonable framework of Roe versus Wade in the Freedom of Choice Act. Basically, the act says that States may not restrict a woman's right to terminate a pregnancy before fetal viability, or at any time during pregnancy if such termination is necessary to protect the woman's life or health. It further allows States to impose requirements which are medically necessary to protect the life or health of the woman.

As simple and straightforward as this bill is, I have been amazed at the misinterpretations and off-base legal analyses being put forth by those who oppose the right to choose. For instance, an antichoice lobby group is distributing literature which says that under the Freedom of Choice Act, States' ability to regulate abortion would be so severely curbed that midwives would be allowed to perform abortions. However, the Court in Roe specifically resolved this question. It held that a State may proscribe any abortion by a person who is not a physician.

The flier I just mentioned also said that our bill would prevent States from requiring ordinary medical recordkeeping and pathology testing for abortions. These allegations ignore the "medically necessary" clause of the bill. Any restriction which has a legitimate relationship to protecting the life or health of the woman would be permitted. The States have traditionally regulated the safety of medical procedures and we fully intend that they continue to do so pursuant to sound medical practice.

Another area of confusion about the freedom of choice act is "viability." Under the act, States could regulate or even proscribe abortion after fetal viability. A fetus becomes viable when it is able to live outside the mother's womb, with or without artificial aid. The Court in Roe quoted this definition from a medical textbook. Fetal viability is a medical determination which only a trained medical professional is capable of making. Opponents of the Freedom of Choice Act charge that we are somehow giving doctors more leeway to determine viability than they have under Roe. However, in using viability as the point at which a State may begin to regulate abortion to protect the fetus, our bill parallels Roe. Roe did not really use a pure trimester analysis. Under Roe a State could regulate abortion to protect the woman's health beginning at the second trimester, or 12 weeks. However, the Court drew its second line at viability rather than between the second and third trimester: Under Roe a State may regulate abortion beginning at viability to preserve the fetus's potential for life. Therefore physicians have been making viability determinations in this regard ever since Roe was decided. The Freedom of Choice Act will not alter the ability of doctors to continue this practice.

These are examples of the misinformation Senators may hear about this bill. I would like to ask my colleagues who are not already cosponsors of the Freedom of Choice Act to take the time to read S. 25. It will only take a minute—the bill is less than a page long. There is no hidden agenda. What you see is what the bill does. If you have a question or a concern, please direct it to me or to Senator CRANSTON or our staffs. We invite you to join us in enacting the Freedom of Choice Act in the 102d Congress.

• Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the Freedom of Choice Act. This is a very important piece of legislation which will protect the rights and privacy of American women.

The Supreme Court ruled in Roe versus Wade that States cannot restrict the right of a woman to obtain a safe and legal abortion prior to fetal viability. This landmark decision in 1973 afforded women the same rights as all other members of American society—namely to make their own decisions about their reproductive health care. This was the law for seventeen years. Then, in 1989, in Webster versus Reproductive Health Services, the Supreme Court undermined this principle. The so-called Webster decision marked the beginning of the gradual erosion of this fundamental right, and indeed, since Webster, we have seen a great deal of legislative activity in many States attempting to restrict choice.

We must respond to this alarming decision by the Supreme Court in Webster versus Reproductive Health Services by reaffirming our commitment to choice. The Freedom of Choice Act is such a response. The bill is a simple codification of the Supreme Court's decision in Roe versus Wade, guaranteeing a woman's right to choose to terminate her pregnancy as part of the constitutional right to privacy. Women in America fought long and hard to attain this right. It is unconscionable to think that the government would take this basic right away, sending American women back down the road of State-by-State battles that they have already rightfully won. Indeed, Mr. President, we cannot let this happen. Enactment of the Freedom of Choice Act will ensure that it does not. I urge my colleagues to push for swift passage of this important legislation.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. CHAFEE):

S. 26. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude from gross income the value of certain transportation furnished by an employer; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX FREE TREATMENT OF MASS TRANSIT EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill that will help eliminate what can only be characterized as an irrational environmental and transportation policy that has crept into the Tax Code. Current tax law produces a significant bias against the use of mass transit: an employer can provide unlimited free parking to employees without tax consequences to them, but if the same employer wants to provide subway, bus or other mass transit benefits, any benefit over $15 a month produces a tax liability for the employee. In short, you get a better deal under the Tax Code if you drive to work.

Despite the fact that the streets and highways of almost every major city are nearly overwhelmed by the crush of rush hour traffic, and that automotive exhaust from this deluge is the primary cause of urban air pollution, the tax code encourages use of single occupant vehicles during commuting hours. Parking benefits—which are worth $250 a month in New York City; in Boston, $245; in Los Angeles, $120—can be provided tax-free, while mass transit or van pooling benefits are mostly taxed. Current law permits up to $15 is exceeded, the entire amount becomes taxable. Van pooling benefits have been fully taxable since 1986, when the statutory tax exclusion for them was allowed to expire. The juxtaposition of unlimited employee tax benefits for parking and very limited or nonexistent tax benefits for mass transit produces a tax policy encouraging automobile use. As the Urban Mass Transportation Administration concluded in a February 1989 report on commuting behavior, "Federal tax policy appears to favor solo auto usage over other commuting modes. By providing economic incentives for free parking as opposed to transit, auto usage is encouraged."

The effects of this policy are clear enough. In 1984, the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey conducted a survey of drivers commuting into Manhattan during the morning rush hour. Sixty-four percent of those drivers reported receiving some form of automobile-related subsidy from their employers, the most common—84 percent—being a free parking space. In the same survey, 26 percent of these automobile commuters reported that they would switch to mass transit if significant transit benefits were provided.

A Federal tax policy that encourages single occupant vehicle commuting flies in the face of sensible environmental policy. Automobile emissions are the primary cause of most urban air pollution. In New York City, 90 percent of the carbon monoxide and 50 percent of the ozone in the air can be traced to automotive exhaust.

Current law also raises concerns about tax equity. Is it fair for a highly-paid executive to receive tax-free parking benefits worth as much as $3,000 a year, while a clerical worker owes tax on transit passes or the value of a ride in a company-provided van pool?

The legislation that I introduce today will make some progress in eliminating the tax bias encouraging commuting to work by car. The bill will raise the current amount of mass transit benefits that may be provided by an employer on a tax-free basis from $15 per month to $60 per month, which is the average cost nationwide for monthly mass transit commuting. In this manner, the tax treatment of parking and mass transit benefits will be brought into closer parity. In addition, the tax-free treatment of van pool transportation provided by an employer will be reinstated in the tax code.

While $60 per month is the national average, many mass transit commuters incur transit fares which significantly exceed that amount, including in my own State a typical worker taking a commuter train into Manhattan. For these commuters, the bill does provide that the first $60 in monthly mass transit benefits will not be taxed, regardless of the total amount of benefits received. This repeals the arbitrary "cliff" effect of current law, under which the first $15 of tax-free benefits becomes fully taxable if the total monthly benefit exceeds $15.

Mr. President, local governments and private industry are making commendable efforts to address the very pressing problem of urban traffic congestion and attendant air quality deterioration. In the New York City metropolitan area, the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, together with the New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority and New Jersey Transit, have formed the TransitCenter, a public-private alliance to promote transit. TransitCenter has created the TransitChek, a low-cost and administratively simple means for private employers to provide transit benefits to encourage mass transit use by employees. Since October 1987, almost 1,000 companies have joined the TransitChek program. This is a good start, certainly, but only 0.5 percent of the companies in the region. No doubt the meager $15 per month benefit has dampened employers' enthusiasm for undertaking the burdens of participation in the program. Federal tax policy should get behind these efforts.

Employers across the country are also developing many innovative employee van and car pooling arrangements. Again, Federal tax policy should not hamper these efforts.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation to get the Tax Code on the right side of sensible environmental and transportation policy.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 26

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. QUALIFIED TRANSPORTATION FRINGE BENEFIT.

(a) EXCLUSION.—Section 132(a) is amended by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (3), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting ", or", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph."

"(5) qualified transportation fringe."

(b) QUALIFIED TRANSPORTATION FRINGE.—Section 132 is amended by redesignating subsection (k) as subsection (1) and inserting after subjection (j) the following new subsection.

"(K) QUALIFIED TRANSPORTATION FRINGE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified transportation fringe' means—

"(A) transportation in a commuter highway vehicle between the employee's residence and place of employment, and

"(2) LIMITATION ON EXCLUSION FOR TRANSIT PASSES.—In the case of a qualified transportation fringe described in paragraph (1)(B), the amount excluded from gross income under subsection (a)(5) shall not exceed $60 per month.

"(3) BENEFIT NOT IN LIEU OF COMPENSATION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any qualified transportation fringe unless—such benefit is provided in addition to (and not in lieu of) any compensation otherwise payable to the employee.

"(4) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) TRANSIT PASS.—The term 'transit pass' means any pass, token, farecard, voucher, or similar item entitling a person to transportation on mass transit facilities (whether or not publicly owned).

"(B) COMMUTER HIGHWAY VEHICLE.—The term 'commuter highway vehicle' means any highway vehicle—

"(i) the seating capacity of which is at least 7 adults (not including the driver), and

"(ii) at least 80 percent of the mileage use of which can reasonably be expected to be—

"(I) for purposes of transporting employees between their residences and their place of employment, and

"(II) on trips during which the number of employees transported for such purposes is at least ½ of the adult seating capacity of such vehicle (not including the driver).

"(C) TRANSPORTATION PROVIDED BY EMPLOYER.—Transportation referred to in paragraph (1)(A) shall be considered to be provided by an employer if such transportation is furnished in a commuter highway vehicles operated by or for the employer.

"(D) EMPLOYEE.—The term 'employee' does not inlcude an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1).".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 132(h)(1) is amended by striking "and (2)" in the text and heading and inserting ", (2), and (5)".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from New York in introducing a bill to encourage the use of our country's mass transit systems. This bill provides commuters an added incentive to use public transportation by increasing from $15 to $60 per month the amount of transit passes an employer can provide tax-free to employees. Greater use of public transportation will make a significant contribution toward solving traffic gridlock and environmental problems. I know in my State, the city of Portland has been working to reduce the number of automobiles in the downtown area by imposing restrictions on new parking spaces. This bill should help Portland in achieving this goal. Reducing vehicle emissions through the use of public transportation is an important step toward improving air quality in our cities. I urge my colleagues to join me in promoting the use of our mass transit systems as we continue our efforts to address the Nation's air polution and traffic problems.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor to the mass transit/van pool commuter benefit legislation introduced by my senior colleague from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN. This bill would establish an employer provided tax-free benefit of $60 per month to working people who commute by train, bus, subway or van pools.

This legislation advances an equitable commuter policy that I have promoted for several years and will continue to support. At a time when congestion and pollution are choking many of our urban and suburban areas, we must make every effort to encourage the use of mass transit and other high occupancy modes of transportation.

Current tax laws clearly discriminates against mass transit and van pool users. A partner in a law firm who drives and parks at work can receive free parking as a tax-free fringe benefit. A secretary who commutes by train, bus, or subway can receive only $15 a month from an employer. This commuter most likely receives no subsidy at all. The return to administer a $15 benefit program is often viewed by employers as too small to justify operating a program, leaving the bias in favor of automobile use.

In our Nation's cities, where smog is a major problem, the current tax inequity is tantamount to subsidizing pollution. Automobiles are the largest single contributor to the ozone and carbon monoxide problems in New York and in the entire Northeast. Recent analysis shows that in 1987, motor vehicles accounted for anywhere between 50 and 70 percent of the hydrocarbon, nitrogen oxide, and carbon monoxide emissions in the Northeast. Each time a commuter chooses mass transit over driving to work he is making a significant contribution to reducing air pollution.

Mr. President, I encourage my colleagues to consider the lack of equity and fairness surrounding the current commuter-benefit tax policy. This year, as Congress reauthorizes the Surface Transportation Act, we will have the opportunity to address a number of transportation issues. This issue is not within the scope of the reauthorization but it is relevant and it does deserve our attention.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 27. A bill entitled the "Social Security Trust Funds Management Act of 1991"; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS MANAGEMENT ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on this first day of legislation in the 102d Congress, I rise to offer the Social Security Trust Funds Management Act of 1991, legislation to reform current investment practices governing the Social Security trust funds. The intent of this bill is to prevent from happening again what never should have happened at all: The disinvestment in 1984 and 1985 of Social Security trust fund assets in order to keep the Federal Government running.

The facts about the disinvestment are well-known, but they bear repeating. In the fall of 1985, the Federal Government's ability to borrow additional funds to finance the budget deficit temporarily expired because the Government had reached its statutory debt limit. In order to drop the Federal debt below the statutory ceiling, the Secretary of the Treasury, acting in his role as managing trustee of the Social Security trust funds, disinvested, or prematurely redeemed, $25.4 billion of Social Security's long-term securities. As a result, the trust fund reserves were drawn down by November 12, 1985 to about $11 billion—a level insufficient to pay 1 months' worth of benefits. The interest that the trust funds could have lost by such premature redemptions was estimated by the Social Security Office of the Actuary to be some $857 million.

Moreover, the Treasury Department took a similar step the previous year, during the September–October 1984 debt limit impasse. At that time, $5.1 billion of Social Security's long-term bonds were prematurely cashed in, which could have resulted in a $382 million loss of interest to the trust fund.

The Senate did later adopt an amendment offered by myself and Senator RIEGLE to make the trust funds whole. Lone-term bonds were restored to the trust funds, as was lost interest. But a more precious commodity could not be so easily restored—public trust.

In the wake of the trust fund disinvestments, public confidence plummeted. Social Security recipients became concerned about whether they could continue to receive their benefits.

Another aspect of the trust fund disinvestments troubles me: the concealment that surrounded it. Neither the congressional committees with jurisdiction over the program nor the public trustees of the Social Security system received any notification of these extraordinary steps. During a November 7, 1985 hearing on the issue held before the Senate Finance Subcommittee on Social Security and Public Assistance, the Treasury Department witness, former Deputy Assistant Secretary John J. Niehenke, demonstrated an extraordinary lack of candor. He was loathe to divulge such basic information as the total amount of long-term investments held by the trust funds on November 7, the day of the hearing, because such information would have revealed the disinvestments of early that month. Nor was he forthright about admitting to the disinvestment that occurred in 1984.

Mr. President, I remain deeply disturbed by this concealment. Why were we in the Congress not informed about these disinvestments in a timely manner? Why weren't all of the trustees informed? Why were we left to our own devices to find out just what was being done with such large amounts of public money?

The bill I am reintroducing today would address the problems caused by disinvestment. It would help restore public confidence in Social Security by assuring that the trust funds are properly managed. It would force the Treasury to be more candid about its practices by putting into statute reporting requirements. Specifically, the bill would:

Prohibit the disinvestment of OASDI trust fund assets during a debt ceiling crisis for anything other than the timely payment of Social Security benefits and administrative expenses;

Mandate that uninvested Social Security tax receipts be invested in interest-bearing U.S. Government obligations as soon as the debt ceiling is increased;

Make a permanent appropriation to restore to the trust funds any amounts that may be lost in future debt limit crises; and

Require the Managing Trustee to notify the Social Security Board of Trustees and the Congress 15 days in advance of an anticipated disinvestment and to report monthly to the trustees on the operation and status of the trust funds.

Mr. President, I remind my colleagues in the Senate that during the 99th and 100th Congresses they thrice accepted identical language, but the House thrice rejected it. Why? Because the House insisted on prohibiting disinvestment for any purpose even if this resulted in Social Security checks not being mailed during a debt limit crisis. My bill would allow the assets of the Social Security trust funds to be disinvested in order to pay Social Security benefits, but never in order to fund, or temporarily float, other Government expenses. The Treasury Department has endorsed this approach over that taken by the House.

I urge my colleagues to once again support this important legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 27

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Social Security Trust Funds Management Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. INVESTMENT AND RESTORATION OF TRUST FUNDS.

(a) Subsection (d) of section 201 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401(d)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "(1) on original issue" and inserting in lieu thereof "(A) on original issue",

(2) by striking out "(2) by purchase" and inserting in lieu thereof "(B) by purchase";

(3) by striking out "It shall be" and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) It shall be", and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

(2) If—

"(A) any amounts in the Trust Funds have not been invested solely by reason of the public debt limit, and

"(B) the taxes described in clause (3) or (4) of subsection (a) with respect to which such amounts were appropriated to the Trust Funds have actually been received into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, such amounts shall be invested by the Managing Trustee as soon as such investments can be made without exceeding the public debt limit and without jeopardizing the timely payment of benefits under this title or under any other provision of law directly related to the programs established by this title.

"(3)(A) Upon expiration of any debt limit impact period, the Managing Trustee shall immediately—

"(i) reissue to each of the Trust Funds obligations under chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, that are identical, with respect to interest rate and maturity, to public debt obligations held by such Trust Fund that—

"(I) were redeemed during the debt limit impact period, and

"(II) as determined by the Managing Trustee on the basis of standard investment procedures for such Trust Fund in effect on the day before the date on which the debt limit impact period began would not have been redeemed if the debt limit impact period had not occurred, and

"(ii) issue to each of the Trust Funds obligations under chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, that are identical, with respect to interest rate and maturity, to public debt obligations which—

"(I) were not issued during the debt limit impact period, and

"(II) as determined by the Managing Trustee on the basis of such standard investment procedures, would have been issued if the debt limit impact period had not occurred.

"(B) Obligations issued or reissued under subparagraph (A) shall be substituted for obligations that are held by the Trust Fund, and for amounts in the Trust Fund that have not been invested, on the date on which the debt limit impact period ends in a manner that will ensure that, after such substitution, the holdings of the Trust Fund will replicate to the maximum extent practicable the obligations that would be held by such Trust Fund if the debt limit impact period had not occurred.

"(C) In determining, for purposes of this paragraph, the obligations that would be held by a Trust Fund if the debt limit impact period had not occurred, any amounts in the Trust Fund which have not been invested, and any amounts required to be invested under paragraph (2), shall be treated as amounts which were required to be invested upon transfer to the Trust Fund.

"(4) The Managing Trustee shall pay, on the first normal interest payment date that occurs on or after the date on which any debt limit impact period ends, to each of the Trust Funds, from amounts in the general fund of the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, an amount determined by the Managing Trustee to be equal to the excess of—

"(A) the net amount of interest that would have been earned by such Trust Fund during such debt limit impact period if—

"(i) amounts in such Trust Fund that were not invested during such debt limit impact period solely by reason of the public debt limit had been invested, and

"(ii) redemptions and disinvestments with respect to such Trust Fund which occurred during such debt limit impact period solely by reason of the public debt limit had not occurred, over

"(B) the sum of—

"(i) the net amount of interest actually earned by such Trust Fund during such debt limit impact period, plus

"(ii) the total amount of the principal of all obligations issued or reissued under paragraph (3)(A) at the end of such debt limit impact period that is attributable to interest that would have been earned by such Trust Fund during such debt limit impact period but for the public debt limit.

"(5) For purposes of this section—

"(A) The term 'public debt limit' means the limitation imposed by subsection (b) of section 3101 of title 31, United States Code.

"(B) The term 'debt limit impact period' means any period for which the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the issuance of obligations of the United States sufficient to orderly conduct the financial operations of the United States may not be made without exceeding the public debt limit.".

(b) Subsection (a) of section 201 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "All amounts so transferred shall be immediately available exclusively for the purpose for which amounts in the Trust Fund are specifically made available under this title or under any other provisions of law directly related to the programs established by this title.".

SEC. 3. FAITHFUL EXECUTION OF DUTIES BY MEMBERS OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF TRUST FUNDS.

Section 201(c) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking the last sentence and inserting the following: "A person serving on the Board of Trustees (including the Managing Trustee) shall not be considered to be a fiduciary, but each such person shall faithfully execute the duties imposed on such person by this section. A person serving on the Board of Trustees (including the Managing Trustee) shall not be personally liable for actions taken in such capacity with respect to the Trust Funds.".

SEC. 4. REPORTS REGARDING THE OPERATION AND STATUS OF THE TRUST FUNDS.

Subsection (c) of section 201 of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking "once" in the fourth sentence and inserting "twice",

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively,

(3) by redesignating paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) as subparagraphs (D), (E), and (F), respectively,

(4) by inserting after subparagraph (B) (as redesignated by paragraph (2) of this section) the following:

"(C) Report to the Congress as soon as possible, but not later than the date that is 30 days after the first normal interest payment date occurring on or after the date on which any debt limit impact period for which the

Managing Trustee is required to take action under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (d) ends, on—

"(i) the operation and status of the Trust Funds during such debt limit impact period, and

"(ii) the actions taken under paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (d) with respect to such debt limit impact period;",

(5) by striking out "in paragraph (2) above" and inserting in lieu thereof "in subparagraph (B) above",

(6) by inserting "(1) after "(c)", and

(7) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) The Managing Trustee shall report monthly to the Board of Trustees concerning the operation and status of the Trust Funds and shall report to Congress and to the Board of Trustees not less than 15 days prior to the date on which by reason of the public debt limit, the Managing Trustee expects to be unable to fully comply with the provisions of subsection (a) or (d)(1), and shall include in such report an estimate of the expected consequences to the Trust Funds of such inability.".

SEC. 5. ELIMINATION OF UNDUE DISCRETION IN THE INVESTMENT OF TRUST FUNDS.

(a) Section 201(d) of the Social Security Act is amended, in the first sentence—

(1) by inserting "immediately" after "to invest"; and

(2) by striking ", in his judgment,".

(b)(1) Paragraph (2) of section 201(d) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 2 of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) If any amount in either of the Trust Funds is not invested solely by reason of the public debt limit, such amount shall be invested as soon as such investment can be made without exceeding the public debt limit and without jeopardizing the timely payment of benefits under this title or under any other provision of law directly related to the programs established by this title."

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall take effect on July 1, 1992.

SEC. 6. SALES AND REDEMPTIONS BY TRUST FUNDS.

Section 201(e) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(e)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(2)(A) The Managing Trustee may effect any such sale or redemption with respect to either Trust Fund only for the purpose of enabling such Trust Fund to make payments authorized by this title or under any other provisions of law directly related to the programs established by this title. If either of the Trust Funds holds any amounts which are not invested by reason of the public debt limit, the Managing Trustee is nevertheless directed to make such sales and redemptions if, and only to the extent, necessary to assure timely payment of benefits and other payments authorized by this title or by any other provisions of law directly related to the programs established by this title, but the principal amount of obligations sold or redeemed pursuant to this sentence shall not exceed the principal amount of obligations that would have been sold or redeemed under normal operating procedures in order to make such payments.".

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as otherwise provided by this title, the amendments made by this title shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. LAUTENBERG):

S. 28. A bill to amend title 13, United States Code, to remedy the historic undercount of the poor and minorities in the decennial census of population and to otherwise improve the overall accuracy of the population date collected in the decennial census by directing the use of appropriate statistical adjustment procedures, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

DECENNIAL CENSUS IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Decennial Census Improvement Act of 1991. It is the same legislation I introduced in the 101st Congress, and it is more vital, more justified, than ever. The 1990 census is nearing completion—249,632,692 heads were counted. The Bureau of the Census went to great effort to count as much of the population as possible. But the Bureau did not get everyone. Growth and changes in the Nation have made this task more difficult than ever. Fewer people responded by mail than 10 years ago. More are homeless.

In 1980 the Bureau itself estimated that it missed 1.5 percent of the population. In most statistical endeavors this would be considered a success, but the census is too important to strive for anything less than a complete count. The most disturbing aspect of this undercount is that it disproportionately includes minorities. Blacks were undercounted by an estimated 5.9-percent nationally. With congressional representation and the distribution of Federal funds so reliant on census data, and with a solution at hand, this differential undercount cannot be tolerated. This legislation will ensure the fair representation of the people,[1] Edmund Randolph's words, in the House of Representatives, and the equitable distribution of Federal funds.

EQUAL REPRESENTATION AND THE CENSUS

Article I, section 2, clause 3 of the Constitution requires the Federal Government to conduct a decennial census. A national census was and is necessary to implement the terms of the "Great Compromise", which, for all practical purposes, based the allocation of Congressmen in the House of Representatives solely on population. Indeed, only an accurate and honest census could accomplish this goal. As the Supreme Court stated in Wesberry versus Sanders (1964):

> While it may not be possible to draw congressional districts with mathematical precision, that is no excuse for ignoring our Constitution's plain objective of making equal representation for equal numbers of people the fundamental goal for the House of Representatives.[2]

Otherwise, the weight of some citizen's votes is diluted, while others are strengthened.

THE UNDERCOUNT

A census is never exact. Invariably, some persons are missed. An undercount is, to some degree or other, inevitable. Nonetheless, the Census Bureau has made considerable progress in reducing it over the years. In 1940, for example, the undercount for the population as a whole was 5.6 percent; by 1980, the total undercount had been reduced to between 1.4 and 1.6 percent. Despite this improvement, the Bureau of the Census continues to miss a significant portion of the population, particularly the nonwhite population, and those living in central cities across the country.

In 1955 the demographer Ansley J. Coale established that the 1950 census missed a substantial proportion of the black population.[3] Subsequently, Jacob Siegel, senior demographic statistician at the Census Bureau, estimated the minority undercount for the 1950 census at 11.5 percent. Though the 1960 census did somewhat better, Siegel has concluded that 9.5 percent of blacks were missed and that the differential between whites and blacks remained pronounced.[4]

In 1966 when I became director of the Joint Center for Urban Studies at MIT and Harvard I asked Prof. David Heer of the Harvard School of Public Health to work with me in planning a conference to publicize the nonwhite undercount in the 1960 census and to foster concern about the problem of obtaining a full enumeration, especially of the urban poor. It was our hope that the public airing of this issue would lead to greater public support for the Census Bureau to obtain the resources to deal with this problem in the 1970 census.

In his introduction to the published report of the conference, Social Statistics and the City (1968), Professor Heer described our planning:

> Daniel P. Moynihan, then Assistant Secretary of Labor, became aware of the findings concerning the underenumeration of nonwhites in the census while preparing his now famous report "The Negro Family: The Case for National Action," which was published in 1965.[5] In the fall of 1966 Moynihan became director of the Joint Center for Urban Studies of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard University. In December of that year he asked me if I would plan a conference that would (1) publicize the fact that many Negroes had not been counted in the 1960 census and (2) attempt to arouse national concern about the matter. In further discussion we decided that the proposed conference should be broadened to include not only census underenumeration of Negroes but the adequacy of all official social statistics for Negroes, Puerto Ricans and Mexicans in the United States. In January 1967 the Carnegie Corporation of New York informed us that it was willing to provide financial support for the conference.
> A prime aim of the conference was to stimulate public interest in the importance of social statistics for Negroes, Puerto Ricans and Mexicans so that the chief agencies concerned with gathering such statistics—the U.S. Bureau of the Census and the National Center for Health Statistics—might obtain a more adequate budget from Congress to improve the quality and quantity of data for these groups. With this goal in mind we decided that the conference would have to be held before the fall of 1967, since the Bureau of the Budget was to decide upon the recommended appropriations for the 1970 Decennial Census at that time. The final dates established were June 22 and 23, 1967, and the conference was to be held in Washington, DC.

Among those providing invaluable assistance in planning the conference were Dr. A. Ross Eckler, director of the U.S. Bureau of the Census; Dr. Conrad Taeuber, Assistant Director for Demographic Fields, U.S. Bureau of the Census; and Dr. Anders Lunde, Assistant Director of the Division of Vital Statistics, National Center for Health Statistics, U.S. Public Health Service. It was decided that six papers should be presented on the first day of the conference. On the morning of the second day, the participants would divide into three workshops to discuss recommendations with respect to each of the following topics: First, ways of improving coverage of Negroes, Puerto Ricans, and Mexicans in the census; second, ways of improving vital statistics for those groups; and third, needed additions in available social statistics for the three groups. On the afternoon of the second day, the rapportuers from each of the morning sessions would report the recommendations of their respective panels, and the conference as a whole would then adopt a general series of recommendations.[6]

Since the report was published, the decline in the undercount of minorities has continued. Still, in 1980 it remained disproportionately high. While the undercount for whites and nonblacks in 1980 was an estimated 0.7 percent, a much higher 5.9 percent of all blacks were not counted. Other estimates of the black undercount are even higher. In that census, the Bureau estimates it missed some 1.5 million whites, and 1.67 million blacks. Thus, in 1980, blacks constituted 53 percent of all people missed in the census, even though they made up less than 12 percent of the total population—the official population. Moreover, 1980 was the first time in the history of the census that more blacks than whites were missed.

Some estimates also indicate that perhaps 5.9 percent of all Hispanics are not being counted. And the undercount rates among our central city population are estimated to be the highest. Possibly 6 percent of all central city inhabitants were missed in the 1980 count; 11.3 percent of black central city residents, and 10.3 percent of such Hispanic residents.

Merely increasing the resources available to the Census Bureau is not likely to remedy this differential undercount. The 1990 census was the most expensive in history, but there was still not sufficient money or time to completely train the army of enumerators hired. Finding people qualified to go into some ubran areas remains a difficult problem.

Moreover, the National Academy of Sciences has determined that further coverage improvement programs are likely to be extremely expensive, costing as much as $75 per capita. Prof. Everett S. Lee of the University of Massachusetts forecast this situation when he wrote in our 1968 conference report, "Social Statistics and the City" that:

> [M]ore money will not in itself greatly improve the situation. Traditional census procedures, while highly effective, cannot be expected to provide the additional or better data needed in our effort to deal with the numerous problems posed by the disadvantaged. The Census Bureau has gone about as far as it can go with traditional procedures.[7]

Some analysts even suggest that increasing resources can actually worsen the differential undercount. In 1980, additional resources helped to increase the count of whites more than the count of minorities, thus exacerbating the differential. At a conference held on the 1970 census post enumeration program in October of that year, Bureau Director Vicent Barabba admitted—

> [Y]ou could reduce the 1970 undercoverage level (by augmenting resources), but perhaps increase the differential.[8]

At the same conference, Professor Nathan Keyfitz of Harvard University also stated:

> [A]s the census pushes harder and reduces the undercount it is almost certain to increase the differential of the undercount.[9]

Finally, Jacob Siegel, who also participated in our 1967 conference, remarked:

> Don't be surprised if you get something like an overcount of whites and an undercount of blacks with therefore an impossible-to-compute differential except in absolute terms or something that might go far beyond the 4 to 1 of 1970.[10]

IMPACT OF THE UNDERCOUNT

Estimates vary as to the impact of past undercounts on various communities, and there are divergent views about how an adjustment of the undercount would benefit different areas. But scholars agree that those groups which tend to be undercounted—namely, minorities, the poor, and the homeless—generally reside in the largest cities, and in poor or remote rural areas.

New York State officials estimate that the 1980 census left between 500,000 and 860,000 New Yorkers uncounted; others estimate that a large undercount in New York City was mitigated by a substantial overcount in other parts of the State, leaving a net undercount of some 250,000 people. Double counting of students, individuals with two homes, residential mobility, et cetera, all contribute to the undercount, which is most likely to occur in rural and more affluent areas.

There is general agreement, however, that New York City suffered a substantial undercount—of at least a half million people—and lost one congressional seat as a result.

City officials, extrapolating from 1980 Census Bureau data, estimate the total city undercount at 7.4 percent, with the worst discrepancies in the black and Hispanic counts; 15.2 percent of black New Yorkers were missed, and 12.4 percent of Hispanics in the city may have been missed.

After the 1980 census the city and State of New York obtained a court order requiring the Census Bureau to accept "Were You Counted?" forms, distributed by the Census Bureau but not received within the Bureau's deadline. City officials claim that as a result of this action somewhere between 12,000 and 20,000 additional individuals were included in the final count. This balance, said city officials, saved a congressional seat for New York. Correction of the undercount does matter.

In addition to almost losing a second seat in Congress, city officials believe New York loses annually between $26 and $52 million in Federal and State dollars distributed on the basis of population. Among other cities, Chicago, Detroit, Kansas City, and Los Angeles have each alleged substantial undercounts in the 1980 census, with resulting loss of Federal aid and representation in Congress.

FEASIBILITY OF ADJUSTMENT

Statistical adjustments to remedy this situation are quite feasible. For example, in 1970, the Bureau of the Census imputed almost 5 million additional people into apparently occupied housing, and into the official count. In 1980 over half a million were imputed. Yet, the Department of Commerce—with jurisdiction over the Census Bureau—decided not to adjust the 1990 census for the undercount. Announcing the Department's decision, Dr. Robert Ortner, Under Secretary for Economic Affairs, stated on October 30, 1987:

> Adjustment would be controversial, even among statisticians. Techniques are available to adjust, but there are questions about the validity of their results . . . Different statisticians would employ different models and get different results.[11]

Notwithstanding the Department's official position, the Census Bureau's former Associate Director for Statistical Standards and Methodology, Barbara Bailar, in her capacity as president of the American Statistical Association, stated this:

> [T]he consensus of the statisticians—statisticians from government, industries, and academia, statisticians who have carefully reviewed all the work in this area—is that an adjustment will provide more accurate data on the size, location, and demography of the minority population in this country. It's time to get on with the job.[12]

After making that statement, Ms. Bailar resigned her post in protest over Mr. Ortner's decision. While she opposed adjusting the 1980 census because suitable methodology did not exist, she is now convinced that it does and that the adjustment should be made.

Moreover, a panel of five Census statisticians—Dan Childers, Gregg Diffendal, Howard Hogan, Nathanial Schenker, and Kirk Wolter—published a monograph titled, "The Technical Feasibility of Correcting the 1990 Census," substantiating Bailar's view that adjustment is feasible. Expressing their collective views, and not those of the Census Bureau per se, they concluded:

> [A coverage measurement program exists] in which some weakness remain and must be addressed * * * However, none of the weaknesses or errors are so large as to invalidate the adjustment * * * On this basis, we conclude that it is technically feasible to correct the 1990 census for differential coverage.[13]

A CONSTITUTIONAL OBLIGATION

Since the feasibility of adjustment is widely admitted, the Bureau really does not have a choice about whether to undertake it. In 1967, I wrote in the foreword to "Social Statistics and the City" that:

> [T]he full enumeration of the American population is not simply an optional public service provided by the Government for the use of sales managers, sociologists, and regional planners. It is, rather, the constitutionally mandated process whereby political representation in the Congress is distributed as between different areas of the Nation. It is a matter not of convenience but of the highest seriousness, affecting the very foundations of sovereignty. That being the case there is no lawful course but to provide the Bureau with whatever resouces are necessary to obtain a full enumeration.[14]

After the 1980 census some 50 lawsuits were filed challenging its validity, primarily on the basis of the undercount. The Bureau argued that the words "actual enumeration" restricted it to a literal headcount. Though the Supreme Court has not yet had the opportunity to address the issue, these lower court cases clearly establish, assuming technical feasibility, the constitutional permissibility, if not requirement, of utilizing statistical adjustments to improve the accuracy of census figures used for both apportionment and funding purposes. As the Federal district court in Michigan stated in Young versus Klutznick (1980):

> With the modern knowledge and the scientific techniques available to adjust for the known undercount differentials, and to bring about official population counts that are closer to the truth than those derived from the raw, unadjusted headcount, surely the framers of the Constitution would have intended that such an adjustment be made.[15]

The district court in Young further noted that if an adjustment is necessary in order to obtain a figure that more accurately reflects the actual population, article 1 of the Constitution and the 14th amendment would mandate such an adjustment. Thus, in response to the question of whether a headcount unadjusted for an acknowledged undercount could be used for apportionment and distribution of Federal funds, the district court stated, "The answer is clearly no" and ordered the 1990 census figures to be adjusted.

In 1981, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed this decision for unrelated procedural reasons. However, as Judge Keith of the sixth circuit emphasized in his dissent, the district court's "formulation of the law governing this controversy is unassailable." He further noted that:

> Since the sole constitutional function of the decennial census is to provide a population base for reapportionment of congressional districts, the Census Bureau is bound by the Constitution to count people as accurately as possible.[16]

In Carey versus Klutznick (1980), the Federal district court for the southern district of New York held that statistical adjustments to improve the accuracy of the count were:

> [R]equired to prevent an unwarranted dilution of the votes of New York City and New York State residents. The Constitution requires no less. (emphasis supplied).[17]

The second circuit reversed the district court on procedural grounds, but in so doing stated "we also agree with the district court that the appellees [the City and State of New York] have demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits."[18] Specifically, the second circuit affirmed that the Constitution required the Bureau to determine the population as accurately as possible and that statistical adjustments were not prohibited. In so doing, the court restated a principle laid down in 1832 by Daniel Webster in discussing the subject of apportionment:

> That which cannot be done perfectly, must be done in a manner as near perfection as can be. If exactness cannot, from the nature of things, be attained, then the greatest practicable approach to exactness ought to be made.[19]

Most recently, the city and State of New York, joined by several other municipalities and organizations, filed suit on November 7, 1988, to require the Secretary of Commerce to adjust the 1990 census for the undercount. As the case was going to trial, the Secretary agreed to take a fresh, unbiased look at the issue, aided by an eight-member panel of experts. He has until July 15 of this year to announce his decision.

I believe it is time Congress settles the matter appropriately and with statute. It must not be left to the discretion of future Secretaries of Commerce. The Constitution provides that the census shall be made "in such manner as [Congress] shall by law direct." If we do not exercise our constitutional responsibility, the courts will be forced to resolve the undercount problem. However, the prospect of another 50-plus lawsuits challenging the 1990 census is not likely to satisfy either the Bureau or its critics. As the Federal district court in City of Philadelphia versus Klutznick (1980) observed, allowing the courts to address this issue on an ad hoc basis "sacrifice[s] the national [census] program to the exact dangers of local manipulation and bias, no matter how well intentioned, the framers sought to avoid."[20]

THE NEED FOR LEGISLATION

We in Congress and city and State officials concerned about the differential undercount were hoping this problem could be resolved without Federal legislation. Once the 1980 undercount levels were determined, the Census Bureau agreed to study the possibility of undertaking an automatic adjustment of the 1990 census to correct for the inevitable undercount, and to undertake a post enumeration survey, used to estimate the size of the undercount. However, the Bureau has not received the Secretary's permission to actually adjust the count, based on the survey findings, and I do not want to rely on the scales falling from his eyes.

Thus, I see no alternative but to mandate a correction through statute. The purpose of the legislation I offer today is most straightforward: to improve the overall accuracy of the population data collected in the decennial census. It would require the Secretary of Commerce to adjust this and all subsequent decennial censuses to correct for any undercounts or overcounts, using "the most accurate methods available." This corrected data will be the only set of census data, and will be used for all purposes for which such data are needed. As such, this data will be the basis for apportionment of seats in Congress, as well as distribution of Federal aid based on population. The Secretary would be required to notify Congress of his or her plans to adjust at least 6 months prior to each decennial census.

It is up to Congress. A constitutional obligation exists, and the methodology is sufficiently understood. Will we meet this challenge and ensure that each and every citizen receives equal representation and a fair share of Federal funds, or will we allow the courts to do this for us?

I urge the support of my colleagues in this important matter of fairness and equity as provided by our Constitution.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill, and my foreward to "Social Statistics and the City" be inserted in the RECORD following my remarks. I thank the Chair.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOCIAL STATISTICS AND THE CITY

FOREWORD

At one point in the course of the 1950's John Kenneth Galbraith observed that it is the statisticians, as much as any single group, who shape public policy, for the simple reason that societies never really become effectively concerned with social problems until they learn to measure them. An unassuming truth, perhaps, but a mighty one, and one that did more than he may know to sustain morale in a number of Washington bureaucracies (hateful word!) during a period when the relevant cabinet officers had on their own reached very much the same conclusion—and distrusted their charges all the more in consequence. For it is one of the ironies of American government that individuals and groups that have been most resistant to liberal social change have quite accurately perceived that social statistics are all too readily transformed into political dynamite, whilst in a curious way the reform temperament has tended to view the whole statistical process as plodding, overcautious, and somehow a brake on progress. (Why must every statistic be accompanied by detailed notes about the size of the "standard error"?)

The answer, of course, is that this is what must be done if the fact is to be accurately stated, and ultimately accepted. But, given this atmosphere of suspicion on the one hand and impatience on the other. It is something of a wonder that the statistical officers of the federal government have with such fortitude and fairness remained faithful to a high intellectual calling, and an even more demanding public trust.

There is no agency of which this is more true than the Bureau of the Census, the first, and still the most important, information-gathering agency of the federal government. For getting on, now, for two centuries, the Census has collected and compiled the essential facts of the American experience. Of late the ten-year cycle has begun to modulate somewhat, and as more and more current reports have been forthcoming, the Census has been quietly transforming itself into a continuously flowing source of information about the American people. In turn, American society has become more and more dependent on it. It would be difficult to find an aspect of public or private life not touched and somehow shaped by Census information. And yet for all this, it is somehow ignored. To declare that the Census is without friends would be absurd. But partisans? When Census appropriations are cut, who bleeds on Capitol Hill or in the Executive Office of the President? The answer is almost everyone in general, and therefore no one in particular. But the result, too often, is the neglect, even the abuse, of an indispensable public institution, which often of late has served better than it has been served.

The papers in this collection, as Professor Heer's introduction explains, were presented at a conference held in June 1967 with the avowed purpose of arousing a measure of public concern about the difficulties encountered by the Census in obtaining a full count of the urban poor, especially perhaps the Negro poor. It became apparent, for example, that in 1960 one-fifth of nonwhite males aged 25–29 had in effect disappeared and had been left out of the Census count altogether. Invisible men. Altogether, one-tenth of the nonwhite population had been "missed." The ramifications of this fact were considerable, and its implications will suggest themselves immediately. It was hoped that a public airing of the issue might lead to greater public support to ensure that the Census would have the resources in 1970 to do what is, after all, its fundamental job, that of counting all the American people. As the reader will see, the scholarly case for providing this support was made with considerable energy and candor. But perhaps the most compelling argument arose from a chance remark by a conference participant to the effect that if the decennial census were not required by the Constitution, the Bureau would doubtless never have survived the economy drives of the nineteenth century. The thought flashed: The full enumeration of the American population is not simply an optional public service provided by government for the use of sales managers, sociologists, and regional planners. It is, rather, the constitutionally mandated process whereby political representation in the Congress is distributed as between different areas of the nation. It is a matter not of convenience but of the highest seriousness, affecting the very foundations of sovereignty. That being the case, there is no lawful course but to provide the Bureau with whatever resources are necessary to obtain a full enumeration. Inasmuch as Negroes and other "minorities" are concentrated in specific urban locations, to undercount significantly the population in those areas is to deny residents their rights under Article I, Section 3 of the Constitution, as well, no doubt, as under Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment. Given the further, more recent practice of distributing federal, state, and local categorical aid on the basis not only of the number but also social and economic characteristics of local populations the constitutional case for full enumeration would seem to be further strengthened.

A sound legal case? Others will judge: and possibly one day the courts will decide. But of one thing the conference had no doubt: the common-sense case is irrefutable. America needs to count all its people. (And reciprocally, all its people need to make themselves available to be counted.) But if the legal case adds any strength to the common-sense argument, it reamins only to add that should either of the arguments bring some improvement in the future, it will be but another instance of the generosity of the Carnegie Corporation, which provided funds for the conference and for this publication.

S. 28

Be in enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Decennial Census Improvement Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO THE DECENNIAL CENSUS OF POPULATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 141(a) of title 13, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)";

(2) by striking out "1980" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990";

(3) by striking out "date'," and all that follows thereafter through "surveys." and inserting in lieu thereof "date. Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, each such census shall be taken in such form and content as the Secretary may determine, including the use of sampling procedures and special surveys."; and

(4) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) In taking any census under this subsection, including the 1990 census, the Secretary shall adjust the population data to correct for any undercounts or overcounts, using the most accurate methods available. The adjusted population data shall constitute the official census data for all purposes for which decennial census data are used, whether under this title or any other provision of law.".

(b) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—Section 141(f) of title 13, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(f)";

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (1) through (3) as subparagraphs (A) through (C), respectively;

(3) by striking out "paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection" in subparagraph (C) (as so redesignated by paragraph (2) of this subsection) and inserting in lieu thereof "subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph"; and

(4) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) With respect to each decennial census conducted under subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary shall submit to the committees of Congress having legislative jurisdiction over the census—

"(A) not later than June 30 of the year preceding the appropriate decennial census date, a report containing the Secretary's proposed plan for adjusting population data to correct for any undercounts or overcounts, as required by subsection (a)(2) of this section, including a description of any surveys, sampling, or other statistical procedures proposed to be used, as well as the projected timetable for carrying out any such procedures; and

"(B) after submission of a report under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, if the Secretary finds new circumstances exist which necessitate that any matter contained in such report be modified, a report containing the proposed modifications, including a detailed statement of justification therefor.".

SEC. 3. CLARIFYING AMENDMENT RELATING TO THE USE OF SAMPLING.

Section 195 of title 13, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§195. Use of sampling

"The Secretary shall, if he considers it feasible, authorize the use of the statistical method known as 'sampling' in carrying out this title. In taking a decennial census of population, the use of sampling shall be governed by applicable provisions of section 141 of this title.".

S. 29. A bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to permit coverage of residential drug treatment for pregnant women and certain family members under the Medicaid program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

MEDICAID DRUG TREATMENT FOR FAMILIES ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce the Medicaid Drug Treatment for Families Act of 1991, legislation that would permit coverage of residential drug treatment for pregnant women and certain family members under the Medicaid Program. My distinguished colleagues, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. BRADLEY and Mr. HATFIELD join me as original cosponsors.

For some time now, we in Congress have been about the business of redefining our approach to the crack epidemic. We need to balance our resources between reducing drug demand and reducing drug supply. In the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, we put into statute that our goal was to provide treatment to all those requesting it. For too long we relied only upon law enforcement to cope with what is also a medical emergency.

Treatment is what is most needed by pregnant women and mothers. Their drug problems are particularly insidious, affecting not only themselves, but also their children. Addiction is passed from one generation to another. Hundreds of thousands of children in the United States are prenatally exposed to illicit drugs. And drug-exposed children face overwhelming problems. Brain damage, premature delivery, low birthweight and withdrawal symptoms, to name a few. Saddest of all, these misfortunate children are being abandoned by their mothers in growing numbers. Where the heroin epidemic of the 1960's gave us the single parent family, the "crack" epidemic of the 1980's has given us the no-parent child.

Unfortunately, there are few avenues of help open to drug-addicted mothers and mothers-to-be. A recent survey conducted by the National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors found that of the estimated 4 million women needing drug abuse treatment, only about one-seventh receive it. Of the quarter million pregnant women needing treatment, only one-eighth receive it.

Mr. President, I would call attention to a recent study prepared by the General Accounting Office entitled "Drug Exposed Infants: A Generation at Risk," which stated:

> With additional federal funding, the large gap between the number of women who could benefit from drug treatment and the number of residential and outpatient slots available could be reduced. . . . These include:
> Requiring states to include substance abuse treatment as part of the package of services available to pregnant women under Medicaid.

Our bill would do just that. It would permit, at State option, Federal Medicaid reimbursement for certain case-managed, substance abuse treatment services provided in residential settings for pregnant women whose incomes are below 185 percent of the Federal poverty line. Substance abuse treatment services would continue for 12 months post partum. And not only could pregnant women receive Federally reimbursable substance abuse treatment, but also Medicaid-eligible parents and children.

Residential drug treatment programs would be required to provide certain services including: individual, group, and family substance abuse counseling; substance abuse education and treatment provided pursuant to individualized treatment plans; HIV prevention education; family support services; parenting skills training and, where appropriate, domestic violence counseling and sexual abuse counseling; child care, either onsite or off through contract; room and board with onsite supervision 24 hours per day; counseling services to assist in the transition to independent living; and staff training programs on a continuing basis. In addition, programs would be required to refer clients to other service providers, when necessary.

All required services would be reimbursed through Medicaid, except child care which would be paid for under title IV of the Social Security Act. For pregnant women, services would be reimbursable for 1 year post partum. For everyone else, for no more than 12 months.

While we believe it is important that facilities be limited in size and scale, we also recognize that providers as well as States must have the flexibility to determine, with the approval of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the size of the residential centers. Our bill limits the size of residential treatment facilities to no more than 40 beds unless the States assure the Secretary that the requisite services will be provided in larger facilities.

If we intend to eliminate the pathology associated with drug addiction, then we must invest our energies in solutions that work. There is no better place to start than with pregnant women. Treatment of them helps two lives.

Mr. President, I ask that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 29

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Medicaid Drug Treatment for Families Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. MEDICAID COVERAGE OF ALCOHOLISM AND DRUG DEPENDENCY RESIDENTIAL TREATMENT SERVICES FOR PREGNANT WOMEN AND FAMILY MEMBERS.

(a) OPTIONAL COVERAGE OF ALCOHOLISM AND DRUG DEPENDENCY RESIDENTIAL TREATMENT SERVICES.—Section 1905 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d), as amended by the Omnibus Budget and Reconciliation Act of 1990, is further amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (21),

(B) in paragraph (24) by striking the comma at the end and inserting a semicolon;

(C) by redesignating paragraphs (22), (23), and (24) as paragraphs (25), (22), and (23) respectively, and by transferring and inserting paragraph (25) after paragraph (23), as so redesignated; and

(D) by inserting after paragraph (23) as redesignated the following new paragraph:

"(24) alcoholism and drug dependency treatment services (as defined in subsection (t) and alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services (as defined in subsection (u)); and";

(2) in the matter following paragraph (25), as so redesignated—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by striking "or"

(B) in subparagraph (B)—

(i) by inserting "(other than services described in paragraph (22))" after "care or services"; and

(ii) by striking the period and inserting "; or", and

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) any such payments with respect to alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services under paragraph (24) for individuals not described in subsection (u)(6)"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(t) The term 'alcoholism and drug dependency treatment services' means—

"(1) inpatient alcoholism and drug dependency treatment services (including counseling) provided by a hospital or by any other entity authorized by the State to provide such treatment; and

"(2) outpatient alcoholism and drug dependency treatment services (including counseling) provided by a hospital or by any other entity authorized by the State to provide such treatment.

"(u)(1) The term 'alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services' means (subject to the limitations described in paragraph (5) of this subsection), the required services described in paragraph (3), which shall be provided in a coordinated manner either—

"(A) directly, or

"(B) by contract by a residential treatment facility that meets the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(2) For purposes of this title, alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services shall be considered to be pregnancy-related prenatal care services.

"(3) For purposes of paragraph (1), the required services described in this paragraph are as follows:

"(A) Individual, group, and family counseling, including—

"(i) addiction education and treatment, provided pursuant to individualized treatment plans (including opportunity for involvement in Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous;

"(ii) parenting skills training,

"(iii) education concerning prevention of HIV infection, and

"(iv) domestic violence counseling and sexual abuse counseling (in cases where such counseling is appropriate).

"(B) Room and board in a structured environment with on-site supervision 24 hours-a-day.

"(C) Therapeutic child care (as defined by the Secretary), where appropriate.

"(D) Assisting parents in obtaining access to—

"(i) developmental services (to the extent available) for the pre-school age children of such parents;

"(ii) public education for the school-age children of such parents (including providing assistance in enrollment in school); and

"(iii) public education (with respect to such parents who have not completed a high school education).

"(D) Facilitating access to health and social services, where appropriate and to the extent available, including—

"(i) services provide under title V,

"(ii) services and nutritional supplements provided under section 17(i) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1786(i)),

"(iii) services provided by Federally qualified health centers, outpatient pediatric services, well-baby care, and early and periodic screening, diagnostic, and

"(iv) treatment services (as defined in subsection (r)).

"(E) Planning for and counseling to assist reentry into society, including—

"(i) to the extent such programs are available, referrals to appropriate educational, vocational, and other employment-related programs (including the Job Opportunities and Basic Skills Training Program under part F of title IV),

"(ii) referrals to appropriate outpatient treatment and counseling, and

"(iii) referrals to transitional housing, and assistance in obtaining suitable affordable housing and employment upon discharge.

"(F) Continuing specialized training for the staff members of residential treatment facilities with respect to the special needs of residents of such facilities and the children of such residents, designed to inform such staff members of the most recent and most effective treatment techniques.

"(4)(A) The requirements of this paragraph with respect to a facility are as follows:

"(i) Each State agency that administers alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment activities and programs has certified to the single State agency under section 1902(a)(5) that the facility—

"(I) is able to provide, either directly or by contract, the services described in paragraph (3); and

"(II) meets the State licensing or certification requirements applicable to the facility.

"(ii) The facility that provides the residential services described in paragraph (3) is not licensed as a hospital, and—

"(I) has no more than 40 beds, or

"(II) has more than 40 beds the State provides assurances in an approved State plan demonstrating that—

"(aa) such facilities are capable of providing the services described in paragraph (3); and

"(bb) the State shall ensure that such services are provided by such facilities.

"(B) A facility may restrict the age of children who may receive services in the facility described in paragraph (5)(B) or (5)(C) and may restrict the number of such children that may accompany each mother or caretaker parent (except that the facility may not restrict the number of such children so as to prohibit one child from accompanying each mother).

"(5)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), services described in paragraph (3) shall be covered in the amount, duration and scope medically required for each eligible individual in need of such services (as defined and determined by the Secretary).

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), with respect to an individual covered under a State plan, such State plan shall provide coverage of alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services for a period, if the period is not less than 12 months.

"(C) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed so as to prevent a State from requiring prior authorization and utilization review with respect to alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services to ensure that such services are appropriate and medically necessary.

"(6) A State plan shall limit coverage under the plan of alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services under subsection (a)(22) to the following individuals (who are otherwise eligible for medical assistance under this title):

"(A) Women during pregnancy, and until the end of the 1-year period following the end of the pregnancy.

"(B) Children of a woman described in subparagraph (A).

"(C) At the option of a State, the caretaker parent of a child of a woman described in subparagraph (A).

"(7) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a State plan for medical assistance may provide for medical assistance for alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services with respect to an individual described in subparagraph (B) or (C) of paragraph (5) who—

"(A) is the child or spouse of a woman described in subparagraph (A) of such paragraph; and

"(B) is not otherwise eligible for medical assistance under the plan during the period of time described in subparagraph (A) of such paragraph.".

(b) Optional Coverage of Caretaker Parents.—Section 1902(a)(10) of such Act as amended by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(1)) is further amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (E);

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (F); and

(3) by inserting before the matter at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(G) that the medical assistance made available to individuals who are parents of a child eligible for medical assistance under a State plan and who are eligible for medical assistance under subclause (I), (III), or (V) of clause (i) of subparagraph (A), under subclause (I), (II), or (III) of clause (ii) of such subparagraph, or under subparagraph (C), may include alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services (as defined in section 1905(u)) notwithstanding the exclusion from coverage for individuals in institutions for mental diseases under section 1905(a), without making such alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services available to other groups covered by the State plan (notwithstanding subparagraph (B));".

(c) Payment on a Cost-Related Basis.—Section 1902(a)(13) of such Act (42 U.S.C 1396a(a)(13)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (E),

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (F), and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(G) for payment for alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services that—

"(i) the State determines (and provides assurances satisfactory to the Secretary) to be reasonable and adequate to meet the cost of efficiently and economically operating facilities to provide services that conform with applicable State and Federal laws and regulations, including any quality and safety standards; and

"(ii) to assure that individuals eligible for such services have reasonable access to such services;".

(d) Case Management Services.—Section 1902(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)), as amended by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, is further amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (54);

(2) in paragraph (55) inserted by section 4602(a)(3) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon;

(3) by redesignating paragraph (55) inserted by section 4604(b)(3) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 as paragraph (56), by transferring and inserting it after paragraph (55) inserted by section 4602(a)(3) of such Act, and by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon;

(4) by placing paragraphs (57) and (58), inserted by section 4751(a)(1)(C) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, immediately after paragraph (56), as redesignated by paragraph (3);

(5) in paragraph (58) inserted by section 4751(a)(1)(C) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon;

(6) by redesignating paragraph (58) inserted by section 4752(c)(1)(C) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 as paragraph (59), by transferring and inserting it after paragraph (58) inserted by section 4751(a)(1)(C) of such Act and by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(7) by inserting after paragraph (59) as so redesignated the following new paragraph:

"(60) if the State plan includes, as medical assistance, alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services, provide—

"(A) with respect to each eligible individual who requests such services, for a case management evaluation of the needs of the eligible individual and the family of the eligible individual (as determined by the Secretary), to be conducted prior to the provision of such services, including—

"(i) an assessment of the necessity and desirability of providing the alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services;

"(ii) the adequacy of the services described in clause (i) to meet the health needs of the individual at the time of such case management evaluation and to promote the maximum level of physical, psychological, and emotional well-being with respect to such individual;

"(iii) the feasibility of meeting such needs through alternative institutional or non-institutional services, as defined by the Secretary, (to be provided as medical assistance to the extent that such alternative services are included as medical assistance under the State plan); and

"(iv) upon completion of the initial case management evaluation, referral to the alternative services in the case where a determination is made that such services meet the needs of the individual and the family of such individual; and

"(B) with respect to each eligible individual who receives such alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services, for a regular program of periodic case management review of the continued need for such services, including—

"(i) an assessment of the necessity and desirability of continuing to provide such services;

"(ii) the adequacy of such services in meeting the health needs of the eligible individual at the time of such review to promote the maximum level of physical, psychological, and emotional well-being with respect to such individual;

"(iii) the feasibility of meeting such needs through alternative institutional or non-institutional services, as defined by the Secretary, (to be provided as medical assistance to the extent that such alternative services are included as medical assistance under the State plan); and

"(iv) upon completion of the case management review, referral to the alternative services in the case where a determination is made that such services meet the needs of the individual and the family of such individual.".

(e) CHILD CARE UNDER THE AID TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN PROGRAM UNDER TITLE IV OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.—Section 402(g)(1)(A)(i) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 602(g)(1)(A)(i)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subclause (I);

(2) by striking the period at the end of subclause (II) and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subclause:

"(III) for each individual described in paragraph (6) of section 1905(u), who receives alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services (as defined in paragraph (1) of such section) for which medical assistance is made available under a State plan under title XIX, to the extent the State agency (described in section 1902(a)(5)) determines such services to be necessary for a member of the family of such eligible individual.".

(f) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) CLARIFICATION OF CONTINUATION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR 12 MONTHS FOLLOWING END OF PREGNANCY.—Section 1902 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a) is amended—

(A) in subsection (e)(5), by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", and, with respect to alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services (if covered under the plan), through the end of the month in which the 1-year period (beginning on the last day of her pregnancy) ends"; and

(B) in subsection (l)(1)(A), by inserting "and, with respect to alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services (if covered under the plan) through the end of the month in which the 1-year period, beginning on the last day of her pregnancy, ends" after "last day of pregnancy".

(2) REDESIGNATIONS.—Section 1902 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a), as amended by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, is further amended—

(A) in subsection (a)(10)(C)(iv), by striking "(21)" and inserting "(24)", and

(B) in subsection (j), by striking "(22)" and inserting "(25)".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE; TRANSITION.—

(1) The amendments made by this section apply to alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services furnished on or after January 1, 1992, without regard to whether or not final regulations to carry out such amendments have been promulgated by such date.

(2) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall not take any compliance, disallowance, penalty, or other regulatory action against a State under title XIX of the Social Security Act in regards to alcoholism and drug dependency residential treatment services (as defined in section 1905(t)(1) of such Act) made available under such title on or after January 1, 1992, before the date the Secretary issues final regulations to carry out the amendments made by this section, if the services are provided under its plan in good faith compliance with such amendments.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 30. A bill to mandate a study of the effectiveness of the National Drug Strategy and to provide for an accounting of funds devoted to its implementation; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

STUDY OF THE NATIONAL DRUG STRATEGY

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, last fall, I noted that the Congress has never mandated a comprehensive examination of our anti-drug efforts to identify the most useful, cost-efficient methods. Today, I reintroduce a bill to require such a study.

In 1988 I co-chaired a Democratic Working Group on drug policy with our esteemed colleague Senator NUNN. The Group developed a comprehensive approach which was written into law as the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. This bill distinguished between the problems of supply and demand for illegal drugs. Significantly, it emphasized demand.

I have long been skeptical of anti-drug programs that place their primary emphasis on an attempt to interrupt the supply of drugs. To be sure, anti-supply programs have their place, but as long as there is significant demand, restricting the supply has the adverse effect of making the drug business more profitable for those who succeed in circumventing the law. There will always be those who try.

The point here is that the plan proposed by the Democratic Working Group embodied a broad approach. It included law enforcement and interdiction, but also emphasized the importance of providing treatment on request or application.

Last year the administration issued a White Paper which, for all intents and purposes, rejects the specific, legislatively mandated goal of providing treatment on request. Former Director Bennett said that he thinks it is not sensible to put those seeking treatment in the driver's seat. Never mind the fact that Congress wrote that goal into the law.

The administration's hostility toward treatment on request is all the more reason that we should conduct a thorough, non-partisan, scientific review of what actually works—dollar for dollar—and what does not. As we approach and perhaps exceed the $10 billion level in annual drug program appropriations, it is high time that we ask the simple question: "What works?"

Research is an important part of the President's drug strategy, for which I commend him. But we need a comprehensive review of all of our efforts. If we are to succeed—especially in this time of fiscal constraint—in reducing the level of epidemic drug addiction in the United States, then we need to compare the various possible approaches and make intelligent, informed choices among the competing priorities. As I said last October, the study mandated by this legislation in the sine qua non of making these choices in an intelligent manner.

This legislation would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to arrange for the National Academy of Sciences to conduct this study. It also provides for an annual audit report of our drug programs by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 30

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) there is great disagreement concerning the causes of the problem of epidemic drug addiction in the United States and about the most effective way to reduce it;

(2) one of the factors which most inhibits an effective response to the problem of epidemic drug addiction in the United States is the lack of accurate information concerning both the problem and the specific effectiveness of each individual element of the Nation's anti-drug effort;

(3) evaluating the effectiveness of the individual elements of the Federal program to reduce epidemic drug abuse requires accurately establishing cause and effect relationship concerning drug addiction;

(4) the United States has promulgated a National Drug Strategy pursuant to the requirements of the 1988 Anti-Drug Abuse Act and will devote many billions of dollars to anti-drug programs for many years to come; and

(5) it is in the interests of the Nation that these funds be spent as effectively as possible and that a permanent mechanism exist to audit their expenditure.

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) require a study of the effectiveness of federally funded anti-drug programs; and

(2) create a permanent auditing mechanism for federally funded anti-drug programs.

SEC. 3. STUDY OF ANTI-DRUG PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (referred to as the "Secretary") shall enter into appropriate arrangements with the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a comprehensive study and investigation of the effectiveness in reducing drug addiction of the various components of the Federal anti-drug program, including—

(1) crop eradication;

(2) crop substitution;

(3) support for foreign law enforcement;

(4) interdiction, including a separate analysis of the effectiveness of the military services in the interdiction effort;

(5) education;

(6) treatment;

(7) support for local law enforcement;

(8) criminal justice system reforms; and

(9) research, including a separate analysis of effectiveness of pharmacological research and research into other types of medical treatments for drug addiction.

(b) METHODOLOGY.—The study described in subsection (a) shall to the maximum extent possible—

(1) control for the effects of broad societal changes unrelated to specific anti-drug initiatives, such as changing demographic patterns;

(2) separate the effects of such component of the Federal anti-drug program from the effects of other anti-drug initiatives;

(3) consider the extent to which the expenditure of Federal funds on job training, education, and other health, education, and welfare programs contribute to reducing epidemic drug addiction;

(4) study the cost-effectiveness of each component of the Federal anti-drug program, as well as the programs described in subsection (b)(3); and

(5) take into account the social and demographic factors which influence rates and forms of epidemic drug addiction and provide, where possible, information on the effectiveness of the various components of the Federal anti-drug program on various demographic subgroups within the population.

(c) REPORTING.—In conducting the study described in subsection (a), the National Academy of Sciences shall provide to the Secretary and the Congress—

(1) not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act a detailed written description of the manner in which the study will be conducted, including a specific set of goals for the study;

(2) not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act the preliminary results of the study; and

(3) not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act the final results of the study.

(d) UPDATE OF STUDY.—The Secretary shall enter into appropriate arrangements with the National Academy of Sciences to update the results of the study described in subsection (a) every 2 years following the initial report.

(e) ASSISTANCE FROM FEDERAL AGENCIES.—Agencies of the Federal Government shall provide to the National Academy of Sciences such information as it may reasonably request for the purpose of conducting the study described in subsection (a).

SEC. 4. AUDIT BY THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The General Accounting Office shall provide to the Congress on an annual basis an audit report concerning the management and expenditures of the component parts of the Federal anti-drug program.

(b) SEPARATE COMPONENTS.—The report described in (a) shall contain a separate section on each of the component parts of the Federal anti-drug program.

(c) ACCESS TO RECORDS.—In order to carry out the purposes of this section, the Comptroller General shall have such access to records, files, personnel, and facilities of the Federal agencies involved in the Federal anti-drug program, including the military and intelligence services, as he considers necessary.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 31. A bill to establish a national program to identify contaminated sediments in the Great Lakes and in coastal waters and to restore the quality of those sediments; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

GREAT LAKES AND COASTAL SEDIMENT ASSESSMENT AND RESTORATION ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce a bill entitled "The Great Lakes and Coastal Sediment Assessment and Restoration Act." A long name for a bill that addresses a complex subject. I originally introduced this bill in the last Congress. Hearings were held in the Environment and Public Works Committee, but unfortunately, Congress adjourned before final action on the bill could occur.

I believe this bill to be the first serious effort to address the matter of sediment contamination. Such sites have been identified in a number of States, although very little has been done about them. In a few, cleanups have been planned, but none has progressed very far. The sites that have received attention have been treated as Superfund cases. In large part, the structure of Superfund is unsuited to underwater contamination, and no cleanup has been done.

To get these sites cleaned up, we must determine the extent to which sediment pollution problems are present and may be affecting water quality in the Nation's lakes, rivers, harbors, and other water bodies. We have a lot to learn. To date, there has not been a comprehensive survey of contaminated aquatic sediments.

The problem is staggering given the historic use of waterways as disposal areas. The United States have 39.4 million acres of lakes, 1.8 million miles, and hundreds of thousands of square miles of near-shore, Continental Shelf habitat. Even if only a small percentage of these have polluted sediments, and we suspect many do, we will need a major effort to correct them.

More than any other, one serious problem has obstructed attempts to deal with contaminated sediments. This is what to do with contaminated material once it is found. Do we move it? Try to treat it in place? Leave it alone? The truth of the matter is we just don't know. To fill the gaps in our understanding, this bill proposes to establish a program of research and development for the management of contaminated sediments. We have the ability to do these things. We have made some progress toward the understanding of toxic waste sites on land. Let us do the same for those under water.

Mr. President, the Clean Water Act has set standards for ongoing toxic pollution discharge into our waters. The Superfund Program and its site designation system has focused on direct human health hazards on land. Unfortunately, neither deals directly with the problems caused by contaminated sediments, and neither helps to document or mitigate them. Many standards exits for acceptable water quality, but none are in place to defend unacceptable sediment quality. My bill would correct this situation by directing the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to develop sediment quality criteria and standards.

With the start of industrialization, the simplest and most common method of disposal for any particular industrial waste product was to dump it into the nearest body of water. Out of sight was truly out of mind, and this has left us with an unknown number of underwater slag heaps.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the Environmental Protection Agency need to develop guidelines for sediment restoration. Once those guidelines are established, the corps should be directed to implement restoration techniques on identified projects. The corps has a long history of maintaining the harbors and channels, and it would not seem unreasonable that while conducting maintenance work, the corps addresses contaminated work, the corps addresses contaminated sediment problems, as well.

Mr. President, contaminated sediments can be cleaned up. This is a worthy effort and one we ought not delay.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the business was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 31

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE AND TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. (a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Great Lakes and Coastal Sediment Assessment and Restoration Act".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—

Sec. 1. Short title and table of contents.
Sec. 2. Purpose.
Sec. 3. Definitions.
Sec. 4. National Sediment Contamination Task Force.
Sec. 5. Sediment survey and monitoring.
Sec. 6. Sediment restoration research.
Sec. 7. Sediment quality criteria and standards.
Sec. 8. Sediment restoration guidelines.
Sec. 9. Sediment restoration project identification.
Sec. 10. Sediment restoration project statements.
Sec. 11. Contaminated sediment account.
Sec. 12. Intergovernmental coordination.
Sec. 13. Authorizations.

PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The purposes of this Act are to—

(a) establish a national program of research and technology development for the management, removal, and restoration of contaminated sediment;

(b) provide for a comprehensive national survey of sediment contamination in Great Lakes and coastal waters of the United States;

(c) direct the Environmental Protection Agency to develop sediment quality criteria and standards to clearly identify sediments which are contaminated;

(d) direct the Environmental Protection Agency and the Army Corps of Engineers to develop guidelines for the implementation of contaminated sediment restoration projects; and

(e) to direct the United States Army Corps of Engineers to implement contaminated sediment restoration projects in certain areas.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this Act—

(1) The term "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

(2) The term "Secretary" means the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works.

(3) The terms "coastal waters" or "coastal waterbody" refer to estuaries, waters of the estuarine zone, and any other waters seaward of the historic height of tidal influence to the outer boundary of the territorial sea.

(4) The term "Great Lakes" has the meaning established in subparagraph 118(a)(3)(B) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act.

(5) The term "Great Lake and coastal sediment" refers to sediments underlying Great Lake and coastal waters.

(6) The term "contaminant" means any solid, liquid, semisolid, dissolved solid, gaseous material or disease causing agent which upon exposure, ingestion, inhalation, or assimilation into any organism, either directly from the environment or indirectly by ingestion through food chains, will, on the basis of information available to the Administrator, cause death, disease, behavioral abnormalities, cancer, genetic mutations, physiological malfunctions (including malfunctions in reproduction) or physical deformations, in such organisms or their offspring.

(7) The term "Great Lakes and coastal States" means States which border on waters of the Great Lakes or coastal waters.

(8) The term "State" means a State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territories of the Pacific Islands.

(9) The terms "release", "remedial action", and "hazardous substance" shall have the meaning provided in section 101 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act as amended.

NATIONAL CONTAMINATED SEDIMENT TASK FORCE

SEC. 4. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a National Contaminated Sediment Task Force.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—The Task Force shall—

(1) advise the Administrator and the Secretary in the implementation of this Act;

(2) review and comment on reports concerning the extent and seriousness of sediment contamination throughout the Nation;

(3) oversee programs for the research and development of sediment restoration methods, practices, and technologies;

(4) monitor the selection of contaminants for development of sediment criteria and standards and the schedule for the development of such criteria and standards;

(5) advise appropriate officials in the development of guidelines for restoration of contaminated sediment; and

(6) oversee the implementation of sediment restoration projects.

(c) MEMBERSHIP.—(1) The membership of the Task Force shall include representatives of—

(A) the Environmental Protection Agency;

(B) the Army Corps of Engineers;

(C) the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration;

(D) the Fish and Wildlife Service;

(E) the Geological Survey; and

(F) the Department of Agriculture.

(2) Ex officio members of the Task Force shall be selected by the Administrator, with the concurrence of the Secretary, and shall include—

(A) not less than three representatives of Great Lakes and coastal states;

(B) not less than three representatives of Great Lakes and coastal ports and harbors; and

(C) not less than three representatives of environmental organizations with a demonstrated interest in sediment contamination.

(3) The Administrator and the Secretary shall serve as cochairmen of the Task Force.

(d) SUPPORT.—Such clerical and technical assistance as may be necessary to discharge the duties of the Task Force shall be provided for by personnel of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Army Corps of Engineers.

(e) COMPENSATION.—The ex officio members of the Task Force shall, while attending meetings or conferences of the Task Force, be compensated at a rate to be fixed by the co-Chairmen, but not to exceed the daily equivalent of the base rate of pay in effect for grade GS-15 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5 of the United States Code, for each day (including traveltime) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Task Force. While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Task Force such members shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703(b) of title 5 of the United States Code.

SEDIMENT SURVEY AND MONITORING

SEC. 5. (a) NATIONAL SEDIMENT CONTAMINATION SURVEY.—Section 115 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1265) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(a)" following "Section 115"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following:

"NATIONAL SEDIMENT CONTAMINATION SURVEY

"(b)(1) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall conduct a comprehensive national survey of data regarding bottom sediment contamination in Great Lakes and coastal waters of the United States. The administrator shall compile all existing information on the quantity, chemical and physical makeup, and geographic location of contaminated sediments, including the probable source of contamination.

"(2) Not later than twenty-four months after the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall report to Congress the findings of such survey.".

(b) AUTHORITY.—The Administrator, in cooperation with the Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and in consultation with the Secretary, shall conduct a program to further identify and monitor contaminated sediments in the Great Lakes and coastal waters.

(c) PROGRAM ELEMENTS.—The monitoring program conducted pursuant to this section shall, at a minimum—

(1) identify the location of contaminated sediments in Great Lakes and coastal sediments;

(2) identify the extent of contamination of sediments and whether contaminants are present in concentrations in excess of standards adopted pursuant to section 7 of this Act;

(3) establish the methods and protocols for monitoring the physical, chemical, and biological effects of contaminated sediments;

(4) develop a system for the management, storage, and dissemination of data concerning sediment quality;

(5) provide an assessment of sediment quality trends over time; and

(6) identify locations where contaminated sediments may pose a threat to the quality of drinking water supplies.

SEDIMENT RESTORATION RESEARCH

SEC. 6. (a) AUTHORITY.—The Administrator and the Secretary shall conduct research related to the restoration of contaminated sediments.

(b) AREAS OF INVESTIGATION.—The Administrator and the Secretary shall conduct or assist research, investigations, studies, surveys and demonstrations with respect to, but not limited to—

(1) the range of contaminants found in sediments and the location of such contaminated sediments;

(2) the effects of sediment contaminants on aquatic ecosystems, and aquatic life;

(3) the effect of sediment contaminants on human health as a result of direct exposure, exposure through the food chain, and any other exposure;

(4) the effects of sediment contaminants on water quality;

(5) methods for the measurement and assessment of contaminants in sediments including sediment classification methodologies;

(6) processes effecting sediment cohesion, resuspension and deposition and modeling of sediment transport;

(7) transport of sediment in aquatic environments, including partitioning of contaminants among sediments, soils, water, organisms, and atmosphere;

(8) practices, methods, techniques, and processes for removal of contaminants in sediment;

(9) practices, methods, techniques, and processes for in place management of contaminants in sediment; and

(10) practices, methods, techniques, and processes for treatment of contaminants in sediment including bioremediation, chemical treatment, and thermal destruction.

(c) RESEARCH PLAN.—Within one year of the date of enactment of this Act, and biennally thereafter, the Administrator and Secretary, in consultation with the Task Force established pursuant to section 4 of this Act, shall prepare and submit to the Congress a report describing research conducted under this section in the previous three fiscal years and identifying research priorities for the following three fiscal years.

SEDIMENT CRITERIA AND STANDARDS

SEC. 7. (a) CRITERIA.—(1) The Administrator shall publish criteria and information for contaminants in Great Lake and coastal sediment.

(2) Criteria documents published pursuant to this section shall provide information on the impacts of the contaminant on human health and the aquatic environment and shall be sufficient to support the promulgation of sediment standards pursuant to this section.

(3) In the case of any pollutant for which criteria and information are published pursuant to subsection 304(a) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, the Administrator shall, within twelve months of the date of enactment of this Act, revise and republish such criteria and information as necessary to support the development of sediment standards pursuant to this section.

(4) In the case of a pollutant for which criteria and information have not been published, any person may petition the Administrator to develop and publish such criteria for Great Lake and coast sediment. Any petitioner shall provide evidence of the negative effect of the pollutant on human health and the aquatic environment. The Administrator shall approve the petition if he determines that the pollutant is preventing the attainment of a balanced, indigenous population of fish, shellfish, and wildlife or preventing recreation in and on the Great Lakes or coastal waters of three or more States. Within Six months of the receipt of a petition, the Administrator shall publish a notice in the Federal Register approving or denying the petition. If the Administrator fails to announce a decision pursuant to this paragraph, such petition shall be deemed approved. In the case of approval of a petition pursuant to this paragraph, the Administrator shall, within twenty-four months of the date of such decision publish criteria and information for such pollutant pursuant to this section.

(b) SEDIMENT QUALITY STANDARDS.—(1) The Administration shall promulgate numerical standards for Great Lake and coastal sediment quality.

(2) Standards promulgated pursuant to this section shall assure the protection of human health and the protection and propagation of a balanced, indigenous population of fish, shellfish and wildlife and provide for recreation in and on the water.

(3) The Administrator shall promulgate sediment standards for contaminants for which sediment criteria are published pursuant to this section at the time such criteria are published, but in one case later than three months of the date of publication of such criteria.

(4) The Administrator may establish by regulation, and in consultation with the Task Force established pursuant to section 4 of this Act, a method of assessing the extent and seriousness of sediment contamination which recognizes the cumulative effect of individual contaminants and provides a comprehensive perspective on the ecological and human health impacts of such contaminants. Such methods shall be applied in addition to, and not in place of, numerical contaminant standards established pursuant to this section.

SEDIMENT RESTORATION GUIDELINES

SEC. 8. (a) AUTHORITY.—The Administrator, in cooperation with the Secretary, shall within twenty-four months of the date of enactment of this Act, publish guidelines for restoration of contaminated sediment.

(b) RESTORATION ALTERNATIVES.—(1) Guidelines published pursuant to this section shall address methods and practices of contaminated sediment restoration and management.

(2) At a minimum, guidelines shall be published addressing—

(A) removal of contaminated material and disposal at an upland site;

(B) removal of contaminated sediment and disposal of such material at an aquatic disposal site;

(C) in-place management of contaminated sediment including capping, sediment solidification, and sediment stabilization;

(D) chemical treatment of contaminated sediment;

(E) bioremediation of contaminated sediment; and

(F) thermal destruction of sediment contaminants.

(3) The Administrator may develop and publish guidelines for additional sediment restoration methods.

(c) CONTENTS.—Guidelines published pursuant to this section shall—

(1) describe the best available technique for the implementation of the restoration method or practice;

(2) identify practices to mitigate impacts on other environmental media;

(3) identify the expected period of effectiveness of the restoration practice or method;

(4) identify the expected costs of implementing the restoration practice or method in a range of circumstances; and

(5) establish minimum standards for determining the short and long term effectiveness of the practice or method.

(4) REVIEW AND REVISION.—The Administrator shall review and revise guidelines published pursuant to this section not less often then every five years.

SEDIMENT RESTORATION PROJECT IDENTIFICATION

SEC. 9. (a) CONTAMINATION ASSESSEMENT.—(1) In the case of any project to be conducted by the Secretary in waters of the Great Lakes or coastal waters in whole or in part with funds from the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund established pursuant to section 9505 of subchapter A of chapter 98 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the Secretary shall conduct tests of sediment to determine whether there are present in sediment to be dredged contaminants in concentrations in excess of standards adopted pursuant to section 7 of this Act.

(2) In any case in which the Secretary determines, pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection, that material to be dredged is contaminated, the Secretary shall conduct such additional surveys and tests as necessary to determine, pursuant to section 7 of this Act, the extent and degree of contamination in sediment in the area adjacent to any sediment to be dredged and, at a minimum, shall determine the degree of contamination of sediment in the area within two thousand five hundred feet of the outer boundry of the area to be dredged.

(3) In any case in which the Secretary determines that sediment adjacent to sediment to be dredged or within two thousand five hundred feet of the outer boundary of the area to be dredged is contaminated pursuant to section 7, the Secretary shall expand the project scope and boundary of the project to include the area of contamination.

(4) In any case where the Secretary determines pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection that sediment is contaminated, the Secretary shall prepare a Sediment Restoration Project Statement pursuant to section 10 of this Act and shall implement such project in accordance with such statement.

(b) DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—(1) Within one year of the date of enactment of this Act and in each of the following four years, the Administrator, in consultation with the Secretary, shall identify a sediment restoration project which will demonstrate the development of innovative and effective sediment restoration technology, measures, and practices including technology, measures, and practices developed pursuant to section 6 of this Act.

(2) Projects identified pursuant to this section shall be in the water of the Great Lakes or coastal waters and shall be at sites other than sites at which a project funded with funds from the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund may be implemented.

(3) The Administrator shall assure that, of the sediment restoration demonstration sites identified pursuant to this subsection, not less than one site shall be—

(A) in the waters of the Great Lakes,

(B) in coastal waters of the Gulf of Mexico, and

(C) Onondaga Lake, New York.

(4) Within one year of the identification of a project pursuant to this subsection, the Secretary shall complete a Sediment Restoration Project Statement pursuant to section 11 of this Act. The Secretary shall begin implementation of the Sediment Restoration Project Statement within one year of approval of such statement.

SEDIMENT RESTORATION PROJECT STATEMENTS

SEC. 10. (a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator, shall develop Sediment Restoration Project Statements in which contaminated sediment is identified pursuant to section 9 of this Act.

(b) ELEMENTS.—Statements prepared pursuant to this section shall include, at a minimum—

(1) identification of the contaminants present in the sediments and a statement of the standard of clean up to be achieved for the contaminant;

(2) assessment of restoration, treatment, and management alternatives applicable to the site, including an assessment of environmental impacts expected to be caused by implementation of an alternative;

(3) selection of the restoration and management practices which will assure attainment of applicable sediment quality standards at the least cost;

(4) monitoring necessary to determine the long term effectiveness of the restoration project; and

(5) identification of sources of contaminants in the sediment and recommendations for revisions to pollution control programs, including any permits issued pursuant to section 402 of the Clean Water Act or any nonpoint pollution control programs approved pursuant to section 319 of the Clean Water Act, which are necessary to assure that contamination in the sediment does not exceed the standards established pursuant to section 8 of this Act.

(c) MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS.—Any restoration program developed pursuant to this section shall, at a minimum—

(1) be consistent with the guidelines developed pursuant to section 8 of this Act;

(2) assure the attainment and maintenance of sediment quality standards established pursuant to section 8 of this Act;

(3) assure that, following project completion, sediments will not cause the violation of any water quality standard adopted pursuant to section 303 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, or where no such standard has been adopted for such contaminant, the criteria for a contaminant published pursuant to section 304 of such Act; and

(4) be consistent with all applicable Federal laws and regulations, including requirements for land disposal of wastes.

(d) SELECTION.—In selecting a contaminated sediment restoration option, the Secretary shall—

(1) give preference to restoration options in which treatment which will permanently and significantly reduce the volume, toxicity and mobility of contaminated sediment is a principal element; and

(2) provide for a cost-effective response, taking into account the total short and long-term costs of such actions, including the costs of operation and maintenance for the entire period for which such activities will be required.

(e) PUBLIC REVIEW.—The Secretary shall provide for public review and comment on draft Sediment Restoration Project Statements. At a minimum, the Secretary shall—

(1) hold not less than one public hearing in the State in which the project is located to hear comments on the draft statement; and

(2) include in the statement a summary of the comments on the draft statement and any changes made to the statement in response to the comments.

(f) CONSISTENCY.—A project implemented pursuant to a Sediment Restoration Project Statement shall be deemed to be consistent with the National Contingency Plan of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act for the purposes of determining liability for the costs of restoration.

(g) APPROVAL.—The Secretary shall provide a copy of a final proposed Sediment Restoration Project Statement to the Administrator and the Governor of the affected State.

(2) The Administrator shall, within ninety days, approve such statement or make such amendments or revisions to such statement which, in the judgement of the Administrator, are necessary to assure the protection of human health and the environment and to comply with the requirements of this section and the objectives of this Act. If the Administrator has not acted pursuant to this paragraph within the prescribed time, such statement shall be deemed approved.

(3) The Governor of a State shall, within ninety days, approve such statement or make such amendments or revisions to such statement which, in the judgement of the Governor, are necessary to assure protection of human health and the environment and to comply with the requirements of State law. If the Governor has not acted pursuant to this paragraph within the prescribed time, such statement shall be deemed approved.

CONTAMINATED SEDIMENT ACCOUNT

SEC. 11. (a) Section 210(a) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 is amended by—

(1) striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) striking out the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting "; and" in lieu thereof; and

(3) adding a new paragraph (3), as follows:

"(3) from the Contaminated Sediment Account, 100 percent of the costs of implementing the Great Lakes and Coastal Sediment Assessment and Restoration Act.".

(b) Section 9505 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by—

(1) inserting "which shall contain a separate 'Contaminated Sediment Account'," in subsection (a) before "consisting";

(2) inserting ", provided that the Secretary shall deposit 8 percent of amounts received from the Treasury in the Contaminated Sediment Account" before the period at the end of subsection (b); and

(3) by striking from subsection (c) the portion in parenthesis.

INTERGOVERNMENTAL COORDINATION

SEC. 12. (a) STATE CERTIFICATION.—Projects conducted pursuant to this Act shall be considered a Federal activity requiring a permit or license for the purposes of state certification pursuant to section 401 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act.

(b) STATE REQUIREMENTS.—Nothing in this Act shall prevent or preclude a State from establishing a more stringent standard or limitation with respect to the removal, disposal, or management, or contaminated sediment.

(c) OTHER LAWS.—Nothing in this Act shall preempt or preclude authorities to restore the quality of sediment pursuant to the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act, as amended.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 13. (a) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator from the Contaminated Sediment Account—

(1) $2,000,000 for the purposes of implementing subsection 5(a), relating to a National Contaminated Sediment Survey; and

(2) $10,000,000 for the purpose of implementing sections 4, 5 [other than subsection (b)], 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary from the Contaminated Sediment Account—

(1) $10,000,000 for the purposes of carrying out sections 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9; and

(2) such sums as may be available in such account for the purposes of carrying out section 10.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. WARNER):

S. 32. A bill to increase the rate of special pension payable to persons on the Medal of Honor Roll, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

SPECIAL PENSION FOR THOSE AWARDED THE MEDAL OF HONOR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the bill that will increase the special pension for those living members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Coast Guard Medal of Honor Roll.

This special roll is unique in our Nation. It is a register of those awarded our Nation's highest military honor. They are Americans that come from every part of the country and from all walks of life.

They are truck drivers and corporate presidents. They are doctors and farmers. They are our neighbors and our associates, such as our distinguished colleague from Nebraska, Senator BOB KERREY, who was awarded the Medal of Honor for his action in Vietnam. The Medal of Honor roll represents the values of courage and service to our Nation that is above and beyond the call of duty.

These men did not ask what was in it for them when the crisis appeared. They did not look for a way out. They will explain that they were only doing their duty, or that they were reacting to the situation.

They will give credit to those that were with them and will tell you to remember those that they left behind. But each one of them found the moral strength and physical courage to make the supreme sacrifice when confronted with a choice of personnel safety or death. That decision was made for many reasons and in many different situations. But when that moment came, they did what had to be done. There is no record of the lives saved through their action and courage, but it is clear to anyone who reads the names on the honor roll, what the cost was to those heros—for the fact is that the vast majority of the Medal of Honors are awarded posthumously.

Today, there are only 211 survivors whose names appear on that honor roll. It is unfortunate fact that over 60 of them are actually living below the poverty line. In my view, that is wrong, and I believe that it is time we correct it.

Under title 38 of the United States Code, surviving members of the Medal of Honor receive a nontransferable pension of $200 per month. That pension has not been adjusted in over 10 years and that $200 is equivalent to about $50 a month in today's economy. The cost of this new pension will be approximately $2 million more to the Federal Government then the old plan. In these times of tight budgets, there may be some who feel that the cost is to high—but Mr. President, I don't. These 211 Americans heros have not asked for a thing. It is the nature of those that have the courage to be listed on the Medal of Honor roll that they would not ask of the Nation that they gave so much to.

I believe that it is our responsibility to remember that those 211 Americans answered the call when our Nation demanded the supreme sacrifice. I ask my colleagues to join with us to take this opportunity for our Nation to show its appreciation.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. SANFORD, and Mr. CONRAD):

S. 33. A bill to establish the Social Security Administration as an independent agency, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION AS AN INDEPENDENT AGENCY

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Social Security Administrative Reform Act of 1991, legislation to remove the Social Security Administration from the Department of Health and Human Services and establish it as an independent agency in the executive branch. The new independent agency would be responsible for administering the Old-Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance Program and the Supplemental Security Income Program. It would be governed by a commissioner, appointed by the President for a 4-year term. The bill also provides for a bipartisan, part-time advisory board to make recommendations on policy issues. Two other positions would be created: those of beneficiary ombudsman and chief administrative law judge.

Independence is not a new idea—just one lately forgotten. The original Social Security Act of 1935 established an independent Social Security Board to administer the Old-Age Insurance Program. In 1939, the Social Security program was made part of the Federal Security Agency, where it remained until 1953. At that time, the Social Security Administration was brought under the aegis of the newly formed Department of Health, Education and Welfare which in 1977 became the Department of Health and Human Services. There it has remained.

Placing Social Security into a larger Federal agency may have made sense when the Social Security program was still small. But the program has grown dramatically over the years. Today, Social Security is responsible for monthly payments to almost 40 million beneficiaries and maintains records for more than 125 million contributors. It has more than 1,300 offices around the country. Its annual budget accounts for 20 percent of all federal outlays.

Simply put, the Social Security Administration has outgrown the Department of Health and Human Services. Indeed, Social Security represents 57 percent of Health and Human Services' staff, 62 percent of its expenditures. By budget outlays, Social Security is the second largest agency in the Federal Government, after only the Pentagon. It is time Social Security were made independent.

Independence under this bill would offer several advantages. First, by providing a statutory term for the Commissioner, we would provide sorely needed stability in leadership. In the 14 years I have been on the Finance Committee, there have been 10 Commissioners at the Social Security Administration. This instability at the top has been disruptive and hampered effective management of policy development. Also, the bipartisan advisory board provided for in the bill would help insulate the Social Security Administration from just the sort of political and budget-drive ideology that plagued it during the past decade. Such problems included: the wrongful termination of hundreds of thousands of disability benefits, excessive staff cuts, backlogs in administrative appeals, and violations of the privacy of Social Security numbers, to name a few.

Further, the proposed structure would improve administrative efficiency by eliminating layers of review. In 1989, Robert J. Myers, former Chief Actuary of the Social Security Administration, and former Deputy Commissioner, testified that a remedy he proposed in 1981 for the nettlesome "notch" problem "never surfaced from the layers of review" at the Social Security Administration. With fast action on his proposal, the notch problem might have been circumvented. Instead, it became the so-called "issue from Hell" during the Iowa presidential primary.

Perhaps most importantly, independent agency status, by correcting the problems that have recently hurt the Social Security Administration, would help restore the agency's reputation for efficiency and fairness, and would help rebuild public confidence in the system.

The idea to make the Social Security Administration independent is a good one. It was endorsed in the January 1982 report of the bipartisan National Commission on Social Security Reform, on which I served with with the distinguished Republican leader, Senator DOLE. The Finance Committee approved this identical legislation in 1989, following hearings before the Social Security Subcommittee.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in support of this important initiative, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 33

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT; SHORT TITLE.

(a) AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment is expressed in terms of an amendment to or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to that section or other provision of the Social Security Act.

(b) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Social Security Administrative Reform Act of 1991.".

TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 101. ESTABLISHMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION AS A SEPARATE, INDEPENDENT AGENCY.

Section 701 (42 U.S.C. 901) is amended to read as follows:

"SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 701. There is hereby established, as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government a Social Security Administration (hereafter in this title referred to as the 'Administration'). It shall be the duty of the Administration to administer the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI.".

SEC. 102. COMMISSIONER OF SOCIAL SECURITY AND OTHER OFFICERS.

Section 702 (42 U.S.C. 902) is amended to read as follows:

"COMMISSIONER AND OTHER OFFICERS

"Commissioner of Social Security

"SEC. 702. (a)(1) There shall be in the Administration a Commissioner of Social Security (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Commissioner') who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(2) The Commissioner shall be compensated at the rate provided for level I of the Executive Schedule.

"(3) The Commissioner shall be appointed for a term of 4 years coincident with the term of the President, or until the appointment of a qualified successor.

"(4) The Commissioner shall be selected on the basis of proven competence as a manager.

"(5) The Commissioner shall be responsible for the exercise of all powers and the discharge of all duties of the Administration, and shall have authority and control over all personnel and activities thereof.

"(6) The Commissioner may prescribe such rules and regulations as the Commissioner determines necessary or appropriate to carry out the functions of the Administration. The regulations prescribed by the Commissioner shall be subject to the rulemaking procedures established under section 553 of title 5, United States Code.

"(7) The Commissioner may establish, alter, consolidate, or discontinue such organizational units or components within the Administration as the Commissioner considers necessary or appropriate, except that this paragraph shall not apply with respect to any unit, component, or provision provided for by this Act.

"(8) The Commissioner may, with respect to the administration of the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI, assign duties, and delegate, or authorize successive redelegations of, authority to act and to render decisions, to such officers and employees as the Commissioner may find necessary. Within the limitations of such delegations, redelegations, or assignments, all official acts and decisions of such officers and employees shall have the same force and effect as though performed or rendered by the Commissioner.

"(9) The Commissioner and the Secretary shall consult, on an ongoing basis, to ensure—

"(A) the coordination of the programs, administered by the Commissioner, as described in section 701, with the programs administered by the Secretary under titles XVIII and XIX of this Act; and

"(B) that adequate information concerning benefits under such titles XVIII and XIX shall be available to the public.

"Deputy Commissioner of Social Security

"(b)(1) There shall be in the Administration a Deputy Commissioner of Social Security (hereafter in this title referred to as the 'Deputy Commissioner') who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(2) The Deputy Commissioner shall be appointed for a term of 4 years coincident with the term of the Commissioner, or until the appointment of a qualified successor.

"(3) The Deputy Commissioner shall be compensated at the rate provided for level III of the Executive Schedule.

"(4) The Deputy Commissioner shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Commissioner shall from time to time assign or delegate. The Deputy Commissioner shall be Acting Commissioner of the Administration during the absence or disability of the Commissioner and, unless the President designates another officer of the Government as Acting Commissioner, in the event of a vacancy in the office of the Commissioner.

"Solicitor

"(c)(1) There shall be in the Administration a Solicitor, who shall be appointed by and serve at the pleasure of the Commissioner. The Solicitor shall be the principal legal officer in the Administration.

"(2) The Solicitor shall be compensated at the rate provided for level IV of the Executive Schedule.

"(3) The Solicitor shall be responsible for managing the litigation of the Administration.

"Inspector General

"(d)(1) There shall be in the Administration an Office of the Inspector General. Such Office shall be headed by an Inspector General appointed in accordance with the Inspector General Act of 1978.

"(2) The Inspector General shall be compensated at the rate provided for level IV of the Executive Schedule.

"Beneficiary Ombudsman

"(e)(1) There shall be in the Administration an Office of the Beneficiary Ombudsman, to be headed by a Beneficiary Ombudsman appointed by the Commissioner.

"(2) The Beneficiary Ombudsman shall be appointed for a term of 5 years, except that the individual first appointed to the office of Beneficiary Ombudsman shall be appointed for a term ending September 30, 1996. An individual appointed to a term of office as Beneficiary Ombudsman after the commencement of such term may serve under such appointment only for the remainder of such term. An individual may, at the request of the Commissioner, serve as Beneficiary Ombudsman after the expiration of the term of such individual for not more than 1 year until a successor has taken office. An individual may be appointed as Beneficiary Ombudsman for additional terms.

"(3) The duties of the Beneficiary Ombudsman are as follows:

"(A) to represent within the decision-making process of the Administration the interests and concerns of beneficiaries (and potential beneficiaries) under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI;

"(B) to review the policies and procedures of the Administration for possible adverse effects on such beneficiaries and potential beneficiaries;

"(C) to recommend within the decision-making process of the Administration changes in policies which have caused problems for such beneficiaries and potential beneficiaries;

"(D) to help resolve the problems under such programs of individual beneficiaries and potential beneficiaries in unusual or difficult circumstances as determined by the Commissioner; and

"(E) to represent within the decision-making process of the Administration the views of beneficiaries in the design of forms and the issuance of instructions.

"(5) The Commissioner shall ensure that the Office of the Beneficiary Ombudsman has staff sufficient to enable the Beneficiary Ombudsman to efficiently carry out the duties of the Office.

"(6) The annual report of the Commissioner under section 705 shall include a description of the activities of the Beneficiary Ombudsman.

"Chief Administrative Law Judge

"(f)(1) There shall be in the Administration an Office of the Chief Administrative Law Judge (hereinafter referred to as the 'Office'). The Office shall be headed by a Chief Administrative Law Judge. All functions in the Administration relating to hearings before an administrative law judge conducted in the Administration shall be under the operational control of the Chief Administrative Law Judge.

"(2) The Chief Administrative Law Judge described in paragraph (1) shall be appointed by the Commissioner in accordance with the procedures under this subsection, and shall oversee the activities of administrative law judges that conduct business in the Administration to ensure that such administrative law judges conduct hearings and any other administrative activities for the Administration in accordance with applicable laws and regulations.

"(3) To be eligible for appointment as Chief Administrative Law Judge, an individual shall have completed not less than 3 years of employment as an administrative law judge.

"(4) Prior to the appointment of a Chief Administrative Law Judge under this subsection, the Commissioner shall appoint a Nominating Panel (hereinafter referred to as the 'Panel') not less than 90 days before such appointment. Each Panel shall be comprised of such individuals as the Commissioner determines to be appropriate and the Commissioner shall offer an appointment to the Panel to each of the following:

"(A) The Chairman of the Administrative Conference of the United States, or an individual representing the interests of the Administrative Conference of the United States.

"(B) The President of the American Bar Association, or an individual representing the interests of the American Bar Association.

"(C) The President of the Federal Bar Association, or an individual representing the interests of the Federal Bar Association.

"(D) Other individuals whom the Commissioner determines to be appropriate.

"(5) Members of the Panel shall be appointed for a term which shall terminate as specified under paragraph (13). A vacancy of the Panel shall be filled in the same manner as the initial appointment was made.

"(6) Members of the Panel who are not full-time Federal employees shall, while engaging in the business of the Panel (including travel time) be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Commissioner, but not exceeding the daily rate specified at the time of such service under GS-18 of the General Schedule established under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

"(7) While away from their homes or regular places of business on the business of the Panel, such members may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in Government service.

"(8) To the extent allowed by law, the head of each department and agency of the United States Government shall, upon the request of the Commissioner, provide information, assistance, and support to assist the functions of the Panel.

"(9) The provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) shall not apply with respect to the Panel.

"(10) The Commissioner shall supply such necessary office facilities, office supplies, support services, and related expenses as necessary to carry out the functions of the Panel.

"(11) The Panel shall submit to the Commissioner a list of 3 individuals who meet the requirements under paragraph (3) and whom the Panel determines to be qualified to serve as Chief Administrative Law Judge. Such list shall be submitted to the Commissioner as follows:

"(A) For the initial appointment of the Chief Administrative Law Judge, such list shall be submitted within 30 days after the appointment of the Panel under paragraph (4) and, notwithstanding the 90-day time period described in paragraph (4), such initial appointment may be made at any time thereafter.

"(B) For an appointment to fill a vacancy that occurs before the completion of a term of the office of the Chief Administrative Law Judge, such list shall be submitted not more than 60 days after the Panel receives notice from the Commissioner of such vacancy.

"(C) For an appointment upon the expiration of a term of office of the Chief Administrative Law Judge, such list shall be submitted not less than 60 days before the date of expiration of such term of office.

"(12) The Commissioner may accept or reject a list submitted under paragraph (11). If the Commissioner rejects such list, the Commissioner shall appoint a Chief Administrative Law Judge, and send to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives a written explanation of such decision to select an individual not included on such list to serve as Chief Administrative Law Judge.

"(13) A Panel appointed under this subsection shall cease to exist upon the selection by the Commissioner of an individual for appointment as Chief Administrative Law Judge.

"(14) For purposes of a reappointment of a Chief Administrative Law Judge by the Commissioner, paragraphs (4), (11), and (12), of this subsection shall not apply.

"(15) The Chief Administrative Law Judge shall report directly to the Commissioner, and shall serve for a term of 5 years, or until the reappointment of such Judge, or the appointment of a qualified successor.

"(16) Except as provided in paragraph (17), such Chief Administrative Law Judge shall not be removed from office by the Commissioner before the completion of the term of the appointment.

"(17) The Chief Administrative Law Judge may be removed from office by the Commissioner before completing the term of appointment if—

"(A) the Commissioner makes a finding, with respect to the Chief Administrative Law Judge, of neglect of duty or malfeasance in conducting the duties of the office; and

"(B) the Commissioner transmits such finding to the Speaker of the House and to the President pro tempore of the Senate.

"(18) The Chief Administrative Law Judge shall be compensated at the rate provided for level V of the Executive Schedule.

"Chief of Computer Systems Operations

"(g)(1) There shall be in the Administration a Chief of Computer Systems Operations, who shall be appointed by and serve at the pleasure of the Commissioner.

"(2) The Chief of Computer Systems Operations shall be compensated at the rate provided for level IV of the Executive Schedule.

"Chief Actuary

"(h)(1) There shall be in the Administration a Chief Actuary.

"(2) The position of Chief Actuary shall be a Senior Executive Service Position under the provisions of subchapter 2 of chapter 31 of title V, United States Code.

"(3) The Chief Actuary shall consult, on an ongoing basis, with the following:

"(A) the Commissioner.

"(B) the Chairman of the Committee on Finance in the Senate; and

"(C) the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives, concerning the financial status of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund.

"(2) studying and making recommendations relating to the coordination of other programs that provide economic and health security with programs described in paragraph (1);

"(3) making an independent assessment of the annual report issued by the Board of Trustees, as described in section 201, and issuing a report to the President and to the Congress summarizing such assessment;

"(4) making recommendations to the President of candidates to consider in selecting nominees for the position of Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner;

"(5) reviewing and assessing the quality of service that the Administration provides to the public;

"(6) making an annual assessment of the adequacy of computer technology of the Administration for support of program operations;

"(7) reviewing and assessing the progress of the Administration in developing needed improvements in the management of programs;

"(8) increasing public understanding of the social security system;

"(9) in consultation with the Commissioner, reviewing the development and implementation of a long-range research and program evaluation plan for the Administration;

"(10) reviewing and assessing any major studies of social security as may come to the attention of the Board; and

"(11) conducting such other reviews and assessments that the Board determines to be appropriate.

"Structure and Membership of the Board

"(c) The Board shall be composed of 9 members who shall be appointed as follows:

"(1) 5 members shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than 3 of such members shall be from the same political party.

"(2) 2 members (each member from a different political party) shall be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate with the advice of the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member of the Senate Committee on Finance.

"(3) 2 members (each member from a different political party) shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, with the advice of the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member of the House Committee on Ways and Means.

"Terms of Appointment

"(d) Each member of the Board shall serve for a term of 6 years, except that—

"(1) a member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which a predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term; and

"(2) the terms of service of the members initially appointed under this section shall expire as follows:

"(A) The terms of service of the members initially appointed by the President shall expire as designated by the President at the time of nomination, 1 each at the end of—

"(i) 2 years;

"(ii) 3 years;

"(iii) 4 years;

"(iv) 5 years; and

"(v) 6 years.

"(B) The terms of service of members initially appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate shall expire as designated by the President pro tempore of the Senate at the time of nomination, 1 each at the end of—

"(i) 4 years; and

"(ii) 6 years.

"(C) The terms of service of members initially appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall expire as designated by the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the time of nomination, 1 each at the end of—

"(i) 3 years; and

"(ii) 5 years.

"Chairman

"(e) A member of the Board shall be designated by the President to serve as Chairman for a term of 4 years.

"Compensation

"(f) Members of the Board shall be compensated as follows:

"(1) Members shall be paid at a rate equal to 25 percent of the rate for level III of the Executive Schedule.

"(2) For days when the Board or any authorized subcommittee of the Board meets, members who attend meetings on such days shall receive additional compensation in an amount equal to the daily equivalent of the rate for level III of the Executive Schedule.

"(3) Service on the Board shall not be treated as Federal service or employment for purposes of receiving any benefits under chapters 83, 84, 87, and 89 of title 5, United States Code.

"Meetings

"(g) The Board shall meet not less than 6 times each year to consider a specific agenda of issues.

"Federal Advisory Committee Act

"(h) The Board shall be exempt from the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.).

"Personnel

"(i)(1) The Board shall, without regard to title 5, United States Code, appoint a Staff Director who shall be paid at a rate equivalent to the rate for the Senior Executive Service.

"(2) The Board is authorized, without regard to title 5, United States Code, to appoint and fix the compensation of such additional personnel as the Board determines to be necessary to carry out the functions of the Board.

"(3) In fixing the compensation of additional personnel under paragraph (2), the Board shall not authorize that any individual appointed under such paragraph be compensated at a rate that is greater than the rate of compensation of the Staff Director described in paragraph (1)."

"Authorization of Appropriation

"(j) There are authorized to be made available for expenditure, out of the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Old Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund such sums as the Congress may deem appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section."

SEC. 104. PERSONNEL; BUDGETARY MATTERS; FACILITIES AND PROCUREMENT; SEAL OF OFFICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title VII is amended by redesignating sections 704 through 711 as sections 705 through 712, respectively, and by inserting after section 703 the following new section:

"ADMINISTRATIVE DUTIES OF THE COMMISSIONER

"Personnel

"SEC. 704. (a)(1) The Commissioner shall appoint such additional officers and employees as the Commissioner considers necessary to carry out the functions of the Administration under this Act. Except as otherwise provided in any other provision of law, such officers and employees shall be appointed, and their compensation shall be fixed, in accordance with title 5, United States Code.

"(2) The Commissioner may procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with the provisions of section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) Notwithstanding any requirements of section 3133 of title 5, United States Code, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall authorize for the Administration a total number of Senior Executive Service positions which is substantially greater than the number of such positions authorized in the Social Security Administration in the Department of Health and Human Services as of immediately before the date of the enactment of the Social Security Administrative Reform Act of 1991 to the extent that the greater number of such authorized positions is specified in the comprehensive work force plan as established and revised by the Commissioner under subsection (b)(1). The total number of such positions authorized for the Administration shall not at any time be less then the number of such authorized positions as of immediately before such date.

"(4) The authority and functions of the Office of Personnel Management under section 4703 of title 5, United States Code (relating to demonstration projects), to the extent such section relates to the demonstration project described in subsection (b) of section

104 of the Social Security Administrative Reform Act of 1991, shall be exercised jointly by the Commissioner and the Director of the Office of Personnel Management.

"Budgetary Matters

"(b)(1) Appropriations requests for staffing and personnel of the Administration shall be based upon a comprehensive work force plan, which shall be established and revised from time to time by the Commissioner.

"(2) Appropriations for administrative expenses of the Administration are authorized to be provided on a biennial basis.

"(3) Funds appropriated for the Administration to be available on a contingency basis shall be apportioned upon the occurence of the stipulated contingency, as determined by the Commissioner and reported to each House of the Congress.

"Employment Restriction

"(c) The number of positions in the Administration which may be excepted from the competitive service, on a temporary or permanent basis, because of the confidential or policy-determining character of such positions may not exceed at any time the equivalent of 10 full-time positions.

"Seal of Office

"(d) The Commissioner shall cause a seal of office to be made for the Administration of such design as the Commissioner shall approve. Judicial notice shall be taken of such seal.".

(b) Demonstration Projects Relating to Personnel Matters.—As soon as practicable after June 30, 1992, the Commissioner of Social Security and the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall jointly implement one or more demonstration projects under this subsection. Under each such project, for the period of its duration (which shall not exceed 6 years)—

(1) the Commissioner of Social Security may appoint, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, such technical and professional employees who possess specific knowledge in the field of computer systems and such other fields as the Commissioner and the Director of the Office of Personnel Management consider appropriate whose compensation may be fixed by the Commissioner without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, except that such employees may not be paid at a rate in excess of the rate payable for level IV of the Executive Schedule;

(2) the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall delegate to the Commissioner of Social Security (pursuant to section 1104 of title 5, United States Code, and subject to applicable limitations under such title relating to delegations under such section) functions relating to—

(A) recruitment and examination programs for entry level employees; and

(B) classificiation and standards development systems and pay ranges for these job categories identified by the Commissioner in assuming such delegation; and

(3) the Commissioner may increase the rates of pay under the General Schedule for certain employment positions in the Administration in certain geographic regions if the Commissioner determines that in such geographic regions, with respect to the national average for the Administration—

(A) the level of difficulty of recruiting qualified individuals to fill such employment positions is higher than average; and

(B) the rate of retention of such qualified individuals is lower than average.

The Comptroller General of the United States, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management, and the Commissioner of Social Security shall each issue a report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate concerning such demonstration projects, together with any recommendations, not later than December 31, 1995. Such reports shall include an evaluation of the readiness of the Commissioner of Social Security to assume permanent and full authority over the functions described in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3).

(c) Demonstration Projects Relating to Delegation From Administrator of General Services.—As soon as practicable after June 30, 1992, the Commissioner of Social Security and the Administrator of General Services shall jointly implement one or more demonstration projects under this subsection. Under each such project, for the period of its duration (which shall not exceed 6 years), the Commissioner of Social Security shall have—

(1) all authorities permitted to be delegated under the provisions of Federal law codified under title 40 of the United States Code, relating to the acquisition, operation, and maintenance of the facilities needed for the administration of programs for which the Commissioner is given responsibility under the Social Security Act;

(2) all authorities permitted to be delegated under section 111 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 759), relating to the lease, purchase, or maintenance of automated data processing equipment; and

(3) the authority to contract for any automated data processing equipment or services which the Commissioner considers necessary for the efficient and effective operation of such programs.

The Comptroller General of the United States, the Administrator of General Services, and the Commissioner of Social Security shall each issue a report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate concerning such demonstration projects, together with any recommendations, not later than December 31, 1995. Such reports shall include an evaluation of the readiness of the Commissioner of Social Security to assume permanent and full authority over the functions described in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3).

SEC. 105. TRANSFERS TO THE NEW SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Functions.—There are transferred to the Social Security Administration all functions carried out by the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to the programs and activities the administration of which is vested in the Social Security Administration by reason of this Act and the amendments made thereby. The Commissioner of Social Security shall allocate such functions in accordance with sections 701, 702, 703, and 704 of the Social Security Act.

(b) Personnel, Assets, Etc.—(1) There are transferred from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Social Security Administration, for appropriate allocation by the Commissioner of Social Security in the Social Security Administration—

(A) the personnel employed in connection with the functions transferred by this Act and the amendments made thereby; and

(B) the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balance of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, or used in connection with such functions, arising from such functions, or available, or to be made available, in connection with such functions.

(2) Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this subsection shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated.

(3) Any individual who is an employee of the Department and who was not employed on January 1, 1991, in connection with functions transferred by this Act to the Administration, but who was so employed on June 30, 1992, may be transferred from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Social Security Administration by the Commissioner under subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1), after consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, if the Commissioner determines such transfer to be appropriate.

(4) Any individual who is an employee of the Department and who was employed on July 1, 1990, in connection with functions transferred by this Act to the Administration shall be transferred from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Social Security Administration.

(c) Abolishment of Office of Commissioner in the Department of Health and Human Services.—Effective upon the appointment of a Commissioner of Social Security pursuant to section 702 of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act)—

(1) the position of Commissioner of Social Security in the Department of Health and Human Services is abolished; and

(2) section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking the following:

"Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health and Human Services.".

SEC. 106. TRANSITIONAL RULES.

(a) Interim Authority for Appointment and Compensation.—At any time on or after the date of enactment of this Act—

(1) any of the officers provided for in section 702 of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act) may be nominated and appointed, as provided in such section; and

(2) the Commissioner of Social Security may prescribe regulations providing for the orderly transfer of proceedings before the Secretary of Health and Human Services to the Commissioner of Social Security.

Funds available to any official or component of the Department of Health and Human Services, functions of which are transferred to the Commissioner of Social Security or the Social Security Administration by this Act, may with the approval of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, be used to pay the compensation and expenses of any officer appointed pursuant to this seciton until such time as funds for that purpose are otherwise available.

(b) Continuation of Orders, Determinations, Rules, Regulations, Etc.—All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, contracts, collective bargaining agreements (and ongoing negotiations relating to such collective bargaining agreements), recognitions of labor organizations, certificates, licenses, and privileges—

(1) which have been issued, made, promulgated, granted, or allowed to become effective, in the exercise of functions (A) which were exercised by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (or the Secretary's delegate), and (B) which relate to functions which, by reason of this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder, are vested in the Commissioner of Social Security; and shall (to the extent that they relate to functions described in paragraph (1)(B)) continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, suspended, set aside, or repealed by such Commissioner.

(2) which are in effect immediately before July 1, 1992,

(c) CONTINUATION OF PROCEEDINGS.—The provisions of this act (including the amendments made thereby) shall not affect any proceeding pending before the Secretary of Health and Human Services immediately before July 1, 1992, with respect to functions vested (by reason of this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder) in the Commissioner of Social Security, except that such proceedings, to the extent that such proceedings relate to such functions, shall continue before such Commissioner. Orders shall be issued under any such proceeding, appeals taken therefrom, and payments shall be made pursuant to such orders, in like manner as if this Act had not been enacted, and orders issued in any such proceeding shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or repealed by such Commissioner, by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(d) CONTINUATION OF SUITS.—Except as provided in this subsection—

(1) the provisions of this Act shall not affect suits commenced prior to July 1, 1992; and

(2) in all such suits proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered, in the same manner and effect as if this Act had not been enacted.

No cause of action, and no suit, action, or other proceeding commenced by or against any officer in such officer's official capacity as an officer of the Department of Health and Human Services, shall abate by reason of the enactment of this Act. Causes of action, suits, actions, or other proceedings may be asserted by or against the United States and the Social Security Administration, or such official of such Administration as may be appropriate, and, in any litigation pending immediately before July 1, 1992, the court may at any time, on the court's own motion or that of a party, enter an order which will give effect to the provisions of this subsection (including, where appropriate, an order for substitution of parties.)

(e) CONTINUATION OF PENALTIES.—This Act shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any criminal prosecution, penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred as a result of any function which (by reason of this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder) is vested in the Commissioner of Social Security.

(f) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Orders and actions of the Commissioner of Social Security in the exercise of functions vested in such Commissioner under this Act (and the amendments made thereby) shall be subject to judicial review to the same extent and in the same manner as if such orders had been made and such actions had been taken by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in the exercise of such functions immediately before July 1, 1992. Any statutory requirements relating to notice, hearings, action upon the record, or administrative review that apply to any function so vested in such Commissioner shall continue to apply to the exercise of such function by such Commissioner.

(g) EXERCISE OF FUNCTIONS.—In the exercise of the functions vested in the Commissioner of Social Security under this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder, such Commissioner shall have the same authority as that vested in the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to the exercise of such functions immediately preceding the vesting of such functions in such Commissioner, and actions of such Commissioner shall have the same force and effect as when exercised by such Secretary.

SEC. 107. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), this title, and the amendments made by such title shall take effect July 1, 1992.

(b) TRANSITIONAL RULES.—Section 106 of this subpart shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(B) by striking "The Commissioner of Social Security shall serve as Secretary of the Board of Trustees.".

(3) Section 201(g)(1)(A) (42 U.S.C. 401(g)(1)(A)) is amended—

(A) in clause (i), by striking "by him and the Secretary of Health and Human Services" and inserting "by him, the Commissioner of Social Security, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services", and by striking "by the Department of Health and Human Services and the Treasury Department" and inserting "by the Social Security Administration, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Department of the Treasury";

(B) in clause (ii), by striking, "method prescribed by the Board of Trustees under paragraph (4)" and inserting "applicable method prescribed under paragraph (4)", by striking, "the Secretary of Health and Human Services" and inserting "the Commissioner of Social Security and the Secretary of Health and Human Services", and by striking, "the Department of Health and Human Services" and inserting "the Social Security Administration and the Department of Health and Human Services"; and

(C) by striking, the last sentence and inserting the following: "There are hereby authorized to be made available for expenditure, out of any or all of the Trust Funds, such amounts as the Congress may deem appropriate to pay the costs of the part of the adminstration of this title and title XVI for which the Commissioner of Social Security is responsible, the costs of title XVIII for which the Secretary of Health and Human Services is responsible, and the costs of carrying out the functions of the Social Security Administration, specified in section 232, which relate to the administration of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 other than those referred to in clause (i) of the first sentence of this subparagraph.".

(4) Section 201(g)(1) (42 U.S.C. 401(g)(1)) is further amended by striking subparagraph (B) and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

"(B) After the close of each fiscal year—

"(i) the Commissioner of Social Security shall determine (I) the portion of the costs, incurred during such fiscal year, of administration of this title and title XVI and of carrying out the functions of the Social Security Administration, specified in section 232, which relate to the administration of provisions of the Internal Revenue Cose of 1986 (other than those referred to in clause (i) of the first sentence of subparagraph (A)), which should have been borne by the General Fund in the Treasury, (II) the portion of such costs which should have been borne by the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Funds, and (III) the portion of such costs which should have been borne by the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, and

"(ii) the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall determine (I) the portion of the costs, incurred during such fiscal year, of administration of title XVIII which should have been borne by the General Fund in the Treasury, (II) the portion of such costs which should have been borne by the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and (III) the portion of such costs which should have been borne by the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, except that the determination of the amounts to be borne by the General Fund in the Treasury with respect to expenditures incurred in carrying out such functions specified in section 232 shall be made pursuant to the applicable method prescribed under paragraph (4) of this subsection.

"(C) After the determinations under subparagraph (B) have been made for any fiscal year, the Commissioner of Social Security and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall each certify to the Managing Trustee the amounts which should be transferred from each of the Trust Funds to the General Fund in the Treasury and from the General Fund in the Treasury to each of the Trust Funds, in order to ensure that each of the Trust Funds and the General Fund in the Treasury have borne their proper share of the costs, incurred during such fiscal year, for (i) the part of the administration of this title and title XVI for which the Commissioner of Social Security is responsible, (ii) the part of the administration of this title and title XVIII for which the Secretary of Health and Human Services is responsible, and (iii) carrying out the functions of the Social Security Administration, specified in section 232, which relate to the administration of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (other than those referred to in clause (i) of the first sentence of subparagraph (A)). The Managing Trustee shall transfer any such amounts in accordance with any certification so made.".

(5) Section 201(g)(2) (42 U.S.C. 401(g)(2)) is amended, in the second sentence, by striking "established and maintained by the Secretary of Health and Human Services" and inserting "maintained by the Commissioner of Social Security", and by striking, "Secretary shall furnish" and inserting "Commissioner of Social Security shall furnish".

(6) Section 201(g)(4) (42 U.S.C. 401(g)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The Commissioner of Social Security shall utilize the method prescribed pursuant to this paragraph, as of immediately before the date of the enactment of the Social Security Administrative Reform Act of 1991 for determining the costs which should be borne by the General Fund in the Treasury of carrying out the functions of the Social Security Administration, specified in section 232, which relate to the administration of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (other than those referred to in clause (i) of the first sentence of paragraph (1)(A)). If at any time or times thereafter the Board of Trustees considers such action advisable, the Board of Trustees may modify the method of determining such costs.".

(7) Section 201(i)(1) (42 U.S.C. 401(i)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(i)(1) The Managing Trustee may accept on behalf of the United States money gifts and bequests made unconditionally to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, or the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund or to the Social Security Administration, the Department of Health and Human Services, or any part or officer thereof, for the benefit of any of such Funds or any activity financed through such Funds.".

(8) Subsections (j) and (k) of section 201 (42 U.S.C. 401) are each amended by striking "Secretary" each place it appears and inserting "Commissioner of Social Security".

(9) Section 201(l)(3)(B)(iii)(II) (42 U.S.C. 401(l)(3)(B)(iii)(II)) is amended by striking "Secretary" and inserting "Commissioner of Social Security".

(11) Section 201 (42 U.S.C. 401) is amended by striking "Internal Revenue Code of 1954" each place it appears and inserting "Internal Revenue Code of 1986".

(c) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 218.—Section 218(d) (42 U.S.C. 418(d)) is amended by striking "Secretary" each place it appears in paragraphs (3) and (7) and inserting "Commissioner of Social Security".

(d) AMENDMENT TO SECTION 231.—Section 231(c) (42 U.S.C. 431(c)) is amended by striking "Secretary determines" and inserting "Commissioner of Social Security and the Secretary jointly determine".

SEC. 202. OTHER AMENDMENTS.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO TITLE VII.—(1) Section 705, as redesignated by section 104(a) of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

"REPORTS

"SEC. 705. The Secretary and the Commissioner of Social Security shall make full reports to Congress, not less than 120 days after the beginning of each regular session, of the administration of the functions with which they are charged under this Act. In addition to the number of copies of such reports authorized by other law to be printed, there is hereby authorized to be printed not more than 5,000 copies of each such report for use by the Secretary and the Commissioner of Social Security for distribution to Members of Congress and to State and other public or private agencies or organizations participating in or concerned with the programs provided for in this Act.".

(2) Section 710(b)(2), as redesignated by section 104(a) of this Act, is amended by striking "(as estimated by the Secretary)" and inserting ", as estimated by the Commissioner of Social Security or the Secretary (whichever administers the program involved),".

(3) Title VII (42 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"DUTIES AND AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY

"SEC. 713. (a) The Secretary shall perform the duties imposed upon the Secretary by this Act. The Secretary is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, and to make such expenditures as may be necessary for carrying out the functions of the Secretary under this Act".

(4) Section 707, as redesignated by section 104(a) of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

"ADVISORY COUNCIL ON SOCIAL SECURITY

"SEC. 707. (a) During 1993 (but not before February 1, 1993) and every fourth year thereafter (but not before February 1 of such fourth year), the Commissioner shall appoint an Advisory Council on Social Security for the purposes of reviewing—

"(1) the status of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund in relation to the long-term commitments of the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program; and

"(2) such programs, including the scope of coverage and the adequacy of benefits under such programs, and the relationship of such programs to other programs providing income security, health benefits, and social services.

"(b) Each such Council shall consist of a Chairman and 12 other individuals, appointed by the Commissioner without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service.

"(c) Members appointed to each such Council under this section shall, to the extent possible, represent organizations of employers and employees in equal numbers, and represent self-employed persons and the public.

"(d)(1) Members of each such council who are not full-time Federal employees, while serving on business of the Council (including travel time), shall receive compensation at rates fixed by the Commissioner, but not to exceed the daily rate specified at the time of such service under GS-18 of the General Schedule established under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

"(2) While serving on business of the Council away from their homes or regular places of business, such members may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government employed intermittently.

"(e) Each such Council shall submit reports (including any interim reports such Council may have issued) of the findings and recommendations of such Council to the Commissioner not later than January 1 of the second year after the year in which such Council is appointed. The Commissioner shall thereupon transmit such reports and recommendations to the Congress and to the Board of Trustees of each of the Trust Funds described in subsection (a).

"(f) A Council appointed under this section shall cease to exist on the date immediately following the date prescribed for the transmittal to the Commissioner the reports described in subsection (e).".

(5) Title VII is amended by inserting after section 707, as redesignated by section 104(a) of this Act, the following new section:

"ADVISORY COUNCIL ON HOSPITAL AND SUPPLEMENTARY MEDICAL INSURANCE

"SEC. 707A. (a) During 1993 (but not before February 1, 1993) and every fourth year thereafter (but not before February 1 of such fourth year), the Secretary shall appoint an Advisory Council on Hospital and Supplementary Medical Insurance for the purposes of reviewing—

"(1) the status of the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Fund in relation to the long-term commitments of the programs under parts A and B of title XVIII; and

"(2) such programs, including the scope of coverage and the adequacy of benefits under such programs, and the relationship of such programs to other programs providing income security, health benefits, and social services.

"(b) Each such Council shall consist of a Chairman and 12 other individuals, appointed by the Commissioner without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service.

"(c) Members appointed to each such Council under this section shall, to the extent possible, represent organizations of employers and employees in equal numbers, and represent self-employed persons and the public.

"(d)(1) Members of each such council who are not full-time Federal employees, while serving on business of the Council (including travel time), shall receive compensation at rates fixed by the Commissioner, but not to exceed the daily rate specified at the time of such service under GS-18 of the General Schedule established under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

"(2) While serving on business of the Council away from their homes or regular places of business, such members may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government employed intermittently.

"(e) Each such Council shall submit reports (including any interim reports such Council may have issued) of the findings and recommendations of such Council to the Commissioner not later than January 1 of the second year after the year in which such Council is appointed. The Commissioner shall thereupon transmit such reports and recommendations to the Congress and to the Board of Trusteees of each of the Trust Funds described in subsection (a).

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 34. A bill to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 and the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

PUBLIC WORKS AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill to reauthorize the Economic Development Administration and the Appalachian Regional Commission. Although funded each year through the appropriations process, neither agency has been reauthorized since 1979. The Reagan administrations proposed that these programs be abolished. President Bush, however, included $50 million for the ARC program in his last budget. Perhaps the need to promote infrastructure investment and assist capital investment in the Nation's poorer regions has once again been recognized in the White House.

A bit of history: During the 1960 Kennedy campaign, people campaigning out in Appalachia could not believe the squalor and poverty they encountered. Dirt poor were the people, lacking in education, health, and basic infrastructure. The region had been left behind when the rest of the Nation began to enjoy the fruits of the Industrial Revolution. In 1960 it had an industrial work force without any semblance of an industrial infrastructure. Net migration from Appalachia in the 1950's exceeded 2 million, 13 percent of the total population. In 1960, only one-third of the region's population had a high school education. Unemployment was 40 percent above the national average. There were few highways. Sewage and water systems were primitive. It is a simple proposition that you would not want to build a business in areas so lacking in resources.

What role for the Federal Government? Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, and my distinguished predecessors on this committee, Senator Jennings Randolph of West Virginia and Senator John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky, saw a clear and constructive role for the Federal Government in Appalachia: Public works.

INFRASTRUCTURE

Not just public works as an excuse to create temporary jobs, but coordinated efforts to build a comprehensive infrastructure and attract private resources. The lack of infrastructure was a regionwide problem. The Federal Government, with the ability to address regionwide problems at the regionwide level, could promote regionwide development.

The mission with the Economic Development Administration is much the same. With the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965, we again recognized that certain areas have persistently lagged behind the rest of the Nation, experiencing chronic unemployment, underemployment, low income. These areas are caught as well in a Catch-22, an economic downward spiral as President Johnson called it. EDA provides grants for public works and technical assistance to ensure planned, coordinated infrastructure development, the cornerstone for further economic growth.

Some would argue today that the need for a Federal role no longer exists, or that Federal efforts are ineffective and should be ended. Yet, Federal efforts have played a vital role in successes to this date. In Appalachia, unemployment has been reduced to 15 percent above the national average. Almost two-thirds of the population has at least a high school degree. Most importantly, in the last 10 years the outflow of migration was slowed to less than 1 percent. Contrary to 30 years ago, there is now something worth staying for in Appalachia.

Even with these successes, there is much left to be done. 122 Appalachian counties in 1990 had unemployment rates at least 50 percent above national levels. Job growth between 1980 and 1990 was only half the national average, and most of that was clustered in counties with either Appalachian corridor or interstate highway systems.

Neither the ARC nor the EDA have been reauthorized in over 10 years. It is time to our commitment to these programs. There is nothing worse, nothing more wasteful, than running a program with the instruction to dismantle it. It just doesn't make much for morale. Indeed, the ARC has continued to function based on the enthusiasm of its member States, in spite of Federal antagonism. There must be some rationale for the continued interest of the beneficiaries of these programs.

And there is as well a rationale beyond considerations of morale, for reauthorizing these agencies. As the critics asssert, there are some problems that might be addressed. One concern is that 86.1 percent of the Nation's population currently qualifies for aid under the EDA. This bill would reduce the number of eligibility criteria for EDA support from 13 to 4, cutting the eligible portion of the Nation to less than 42 percent of the population. The bill would also force applicants to requalify each time they applied for aid, removing the existing permanent qualification loopholes.

Further, the labor force participation rate, the fourth of the proposed eligibility criteria, measures the percentage of the population so disillusioned that they have dropped out of the labor force completely. The labor force participation rate improves over previous unemployment measures by catching those people so disillusioned that they have dropped out of the labor force. This is especially important to many of our Nation's inner cities, which suffer high numbers of labor force dropouts.

In reauthorizing the Appalachian Regional Commission and the Economic Development Administration we reaffirm support for our own programs. And we renew for the first time in a decade a Federal determination to provide the infrastructure necessary for these regions to generate economic development and share in the affluence of the rest of the Nation. I urge my colleagues to support passage of this legislation and ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"TITLE I—DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 101. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares the following:

"(1) A prerequisite for economic development is the presence of modern and adequate infrastructure. Such infrastructure includes local and regional economic planning capability; roads, bridges, and other transportation systems; wastewater treatment systems; communications linkages; solid and hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities; other public resources necessary to facilitate the conduct of business and to ensure the long-term economic stability and health of the communities of this nation.

"(2) Since federal initiatives to combat the Great Depression were begun in the 1930s, the government has provided financial assistance to regions, States, and local communities to construct, operate, and maintain such infrastructure. As the post-World War II economic boom waned, prospects for certain parts of the country that had not shared in that prosperity became less and less hopeful. For such pockets of economic distress it became increasingly clear that a fundamental obstacle to economic growth was the lack of capital. An effective role for the federal government: undertake projects to provide public capital to distressed regions.

"(3) The federal government's commitment to infrastructure ought be focused on regions, States, and local communities which have suffered persistent economic distress. Urban centers, suffering persistent economic distress, have deteriorated over the last three decades. Crumbling infrastructure; deteriorating buildings, roads, and access; unhealthy sewer systems, and drinking water; only contribute to the economic distress of these areas.

"(4) The federal government's commitment to infrastructure in these distressed regions is invaluable in contributing to long-term economic stability. Indicators of distress include unemployment, underemployment, low per capita income, and low labor force participation.

"(5) The availability of capital for private business investment is also a prerequisite for long-term economic development.

"(6) Such capital resources are not always available at terms favorable to business investment, particularly in areas that have suffered persistent economic distress.

"(7) The federal government should provide financial assistance to States and local communities to ensure the availability of adequate capital for business investment. Such assistance may take the form of grants and loans for the establishment of State and local revolving loan funds and other financial instruments, as well as direct loans and loan guarantees for local business investment.

"(b) PURPOSE.—The Congress declares that the purpose of this Act is to promote economic growth and development in regions suffering persistent economic distress, by providing federal aid to regions, States, and local communities for the financing, construction, operation, and maintenance of infrastructure, and to ensure the availability of capital for business investment on the regional, State, and local levels.

"SEC. 102. DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT ASSISTANCE.

"(a) GRANTS.—Upon application of an applicant qualifying under section 103 and subject to the provisions of this title, the Secretary is authorized to make a grant to such applicant for one or more of the following:

"(1) CONSTRUCTING AND IMPROVING PUBLIC FACILITIES.—Construction, repair, rehabilitation, and improvement of public facilities, including demolition of existing structures and other site preparation measures, and the acquisition of land and other public works improvements to encourage and support private development.

"(2) REVOLVING LOAN FUNDS.—Establishment of revolving loan funds to promote establishment and growth of small businesses and to retain firms and entrepreneurs which contribute to the creation, retention, and expansion of private sector jobs.

"(3) EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS.—Establishment of revolving loan funds to promote establishment of qualified employee ownership organizations which prevent economic dislocation, facilitate economic adjustment, or contribute to economic diversification and long-term economic vitality.

"(b) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—Upon application of an applicant qualifying under section 103 and subject to the provisions of this title, the Secretary may provide technical assistance for improving and enhancing economic development.

"SEC. 103. QUALIFYING APPLICANTS AND LIMITATIONS ON LOCATIONS OF PROJECTS.

"(a) APPLICANTS FOR DISTRESSED LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.—The following entities may apply for assistance under section 102 for projects and activities to be carried out in the jurisdictional area of a unit of local government which meets the requirements of section 105:

"(1) STATE GOVERNMENT.—The State in which the unit of local government is located may apply if—

"(A) such unit has a population of less than 50,000; and

"(B) such unit is located outside the boundaries of an economic development district.

"(2) Local government.—The unit of local government may apply; except that—

"(A) in any case in which the unit of local government has a population of less than 50,000 and is located outside the boundaries of an economic development district, such unit must consult the State in the preparation of the grant application; and

"(B) in any case in which the unit of local government is located within the boundaries of an economic development district, such unit must consult such district in the preparation of the grant application.

"(3) Economic development district.—The economic development district in which the unit of local government is located may apply.

"(4) Economic development organization.—A private or public nonprofit organization established for economic development purposes and representing an area within the jurisdictional area of the unit of local government may apply if—

"(A) such unit has a population of 50,000 or more;

"(B) such unit is located outside the boundaries of an economic development district; and

"(C) the grant application has been approved by such unit.

"(b) Applications for Indian Lands.—An Indian tribe may apply for assistance under section 102 for projects and activities to be carried out on lands owned by, or held in trust for, such tribe if such lands meet the requirements of section 105.

"(c) Applications for Pockets of Poverty.—The following entities may apply for assistance under section 102 for projects and activities to be carried out in an area which meets the requirements of section 105 and is located in the jurisdictional area of a unit of local government which has a population of 50,000 or more and does not meet such requirements:

"(1) Local government.—The unit of local government may apply; except that in any case in which the unit of local government is located within the boundaries of an economic development district, such unit must consult such district in the preparation of the grant application.

"(2) Development organization as applicant.—A private or public nonprofit organization established for economic development purposes and representing the area meeting the requirements of section 105 may apply if such organization consults the unit of local government in the preparation of the grant application.

"SEC. 104. APPLICATION FOR GRANT.

"(a) Contents.—An application for assistance under this title shall include, but need not be limited to—

"(1) A certification that the area over which the applicant has jurisdiction meets the requirements of section 105; except that—

"(A) in any case in which the applicant is a State, economic development district, or an organization described in section 103(a)(4), the certification must be for the area over which the concerned unit of local government has jurisdiction;

"(B) in any case in which the applicant is an Indian tribe, the certification must be for lands owned by, or held in trust for, such Indian tribe; and

"(C) in any case in which the applicant is an organization described in section 103(c)(2), the certification must be for the area such organization represents;

"(2) a certification relative to the performance of any responsibilities which the Secretary has agreed to accept under section 306; and

"(3) a development investment strategy prepared in accordance with section 106.

"(b) Factors To Be Considered in Approval Process.—In approving applications for assistance under this title, the Secretary shall give consideration to—

"(1) the severity of distress in the area for which the grant is to be made;

"(2) the extent to which the grant will result in increased, or more stabilized, permanent employment in such area;

"(3) the ratio of private sector investments committed in such area to the amount of the grant applied for;

"(4) the extent to which the appropriate State and local governments have undertaken or agree to undertake other related actions to encourage economic development and the expansion of employment opportunities;

"(5) the effectiveness of the development investment strategy and the degree to which the proposed project contributes to its implementation (including the strategy's relationship to economic problems identified in the strategy), expands employment opportunities in the existing labor market, provides incentives to retain private businesses, expands or improves public facilities, and encourages private investment; and

"(6) the extent to which the strategy and activities are consistent with State and local goals and contribute to long-term economic growth and private sector employment opportunities and establish an overall strengthened economic and business environment which will be self-sustaining.

"(c) Limitation on Assistance Facilitating Relocations.—No assistance may be provided under this title for projects intended to facilitate the relocation of industrial or commercial plants or facilities from one area to another, unless the Secretary finds that such relocation would not significantly and adversely affect employment in, or the economic base of, the area from which the industrial or commercial plant or facility would be leaving.

"SEC. 105. DISTRESS REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) Certification.—In order to be eligible for assistance under this title, the applicant must certify that the area which is required by section 103 to meet the requirements of this section meets one or more of the following criteria:

"(1) The area has a per capita income of 80 percent or less of the national average.

"(2) The area has an unemployment rate 1 percent above the national average percentage for the most recent 24-month period for which statistics are available.

"(3) The area has experienced or is about to experience a sudden economic dislocation resulting in job loss that is significant both in terms of the number of jobs eliminated and the effect upon the employment rate of the area.

"(4) The area has a Labor Force Participation rate of 90 percent or less of the national average.

"(b) Documentation of Distress.—Documentation of distress shall be supported by Federal data, when available, and in other cases by data available through the State government. Such documentation shall be accepted by the Secretary unless it is determined to be inaccurate. The most recent statistics available must be used.

"SEC. 106. DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT STRATEGY.

"(a) Preparation and Contents.—Except as provided in subsection (b), an applicant for assistance under this title shall prepare a development investment strategy for the area which is required by section 103 to meet the requirements of section 105. The development investment strategy must—

"(1) identify the economic development problems sought to be addressed by the grant;

"(2) identify past, present, and projected future economic development investments in such area and public and private participants and sources of funding for such investments;

"(3) identify the extent to which the development investment strategy takes into account—

"(A) availability of developable land and space in the area;

"(B) public works, public service, and development facilities in the area;

"(C) availability of low-cost capital;

"(D) tax policy on investments in the area;

"(E) level of skill of the labor force; and

"(F) ability of State and units of local government to provide financial assistance in the management and implementation of the strategy;

"(4) set forth a strategy for addressing the economic problems identified in paragraph (1) and discusses the manner in which the strategy will solve such problems;

"(5) provide a description of the projects necessary to implement the strategy, an estimate and analysis of the costs and anticipated benefits of implementing the strategy, and an estimate of the timetables for completion of such projects;

"(6) provide a summary of public and private resources which are expected to be available for such projects; and

"(7) provide a comprehensive plan which demonstrates participation in all phases of the development and implementation of the development investment strategy by a representative percentage of small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, as defined by section 8(d) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)) and relevant subcontracting regulations promulgated pursuant thereto.

"(b) Consultation of State or Economic Development District.—In any case in which a unit of local government is the eligible applicant under section 103(a)(2), the unit of local government shall consult the State or economic development district, respectively, in the preparation of a development investment strategy.

"(c) Approval of Development Organization's Strategy.—In any case in which a private or public nonprofit development organization within a unit of local government is the eligible applicant under section 103(c)(2), the organization must consult the unit of local government in the preparation of the organization's development investment strategy.

"SEC. 107. LIMITATIONS ON REVOLVING LOAN FUNDS.

"(a) Purposes and Uses of Grants.—Grants under section 102(a) shall be for the purposes of stimulating small business development and promoting economic growth which contributes to an improved local tax base and the creation of permanent employment opportunities. Such grants may only be made to establish or recapitalize a revolving loan fund which will be used only—

"(1) for making loans or guaranteeing loans to small businesses for initial or working capital, or the purchase, rehabilitation or expansion of facilities or equipment; and

"(2) for making loans or guaranteeing loans to businesses if a relatively small amount of capital is needed to complete financing necessary to retain the business in the area.

"(b) DISTRESS REQUIREMENTS.—A grant made under section 102(a)(2) shall be made on the condition that the revolving loan fund established or recapitalized pursuant to such grant shall be used only for providing assistance described in subsection (a) in areas which meet the requirements of section 105.

"(c) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF GRANT.—No grant for the establishment or recapitalization of a revolving loan fund under section 102(a)(2) shall be made for more than $1,000,000.

"(d) CREDIT ELSEWHERE TEST.—No loan or guarantee shall be made from a revolving loan fund established or recapitalized pursuant to a grant under section 102(a)(2) unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available from private lenders on terms which in the opinion of the administrator of the revolving loan fund will permit the accomplishment of the project.

"(e) TERMS OF GRANTS.—

"(1) USE ASSURANCES.—Any applicant for a grant for establishment or recapitlization of a revolving loan fund under section 102(a)(2) shall give assurances that amounts of any loan which are repaid to the fund will be available only for the purposes set forth in subsection (a).

"(2) REPAYMENT ASSURANCES.—No loan or guarantee may be made from a revolving loan fund established or recapitalized pursuant to a grant under section 102(a)(2) unless the applicant for such loan or guarantee provides reasonable assurance of repayment of the loan.

"(3) GRANTEE AS ADMINISTRATOR.—The grantee of any grant for establishment or recapitalization of a revolving loan fund under section 102(a)(2) shall administer the fund.

"(f) CONSIDERATION OF PAST PERFORMANCE.—In determining whether or not to make a grant for recapitalization of a revolving loan fund established or recapitalized pursuant to a grant under section 102(a)(2), the Secretary shall consider past performance of such fund.

"SEC. 108. FEDERAL SHARE.

"(a) CONSTRUCTION AND IMPROVEMENT PROJECTS.—The amount of any grant for a project described in section 102(a)(1) shall be that amount which when added to amounts available from all other sources is sufficient to complete such project. In no event shall the amount of any such grant exceed 50 percent of such cost of completing the project as determined at the time of the grant application. The Secretary may increase the maximum percentage of a grant from 50 percent to not more than 80 percent of the costs of completing a project described in section 102(a)(1) for an area which the Secretary determines is one of the most distressed of the areas meeting the distress requirements of section 105; except that the Secretary may not increase such percentage for more than 25 percent of the grants made in any fiscal year. In developing guidelines for determining which areas are the most distressed, the Secretary shall consider whether (1) the median family income for the area for the most recent 24-month period for which data is available is less than or equal to 75 percent of the national average median family income for such period, or (2) the average unemployment rate for the area such period is greater than or equal to 2 times the national average unemployment for such period. No additional funds shall be granted or otherwise made available under this Act for any project described in section 102(a)(1) for which a grant has been made under this Act.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF REVOLVING LOAN FUNDS.—The amount of any grant for the establishment of a revolving loan fund under section 102(a) shall not exceed an amount which is equal to the amount of funds available from all other sources for the establishment of such revolving loan fund. The amount of any additional grant for the recapitalization of a revolving loan fund previously established with a grant under section 102(a)(2) shall not exceed an amount which is equal to ⅓ of the amount of funds available from all other sources for such recapitalization.

"(c) INDIAN TRIBES.—In the case of a grant to an Indian tribe under section 102(a), the Secretary may reduce or waive any non-Federal share required by this section.

"SEC. 109. LIMITATIONS.

"(a) OBLIGATIONS IN A STATE.—Except for expenditures to Indian tribes, not more than 15 percent of the appropriations made for a fiscal year pursuant to this title may be expended in any one State.

"(b) OBLIGATIONS TO A PERSON.—The Secretary shall not obligate more than $4,000,000 in any fiscal year to any person (including any State or local government or public organization) for grants under this title, other than grants for establishment of qualified employee ownership organizations.

"SEC. 110. COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS.

"(a) GRANTS.—The Secretary may make grants to community development corporations to assist small businesses by reducing the interest rates for economic development activities to be carried out by such businesses in areas meeting the distress requirements of section 105.

"(b) AGGREGATE AMOUNT.—The aggregate amount of grants under this section may not exceed $10,000,000 in any fiscal year.

"SEC. 111. CONGRESSIONALLY MANDATED PROJECTS.

"Any Economic Development Administration project mandated by Congress must meet the eligibility criteria as defined by The Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 as amended.

"SEC. 112. OBLIGATION OF FUNDS.

"(a) BY MAY 31.—Not later than May 31 of each fiscal year, the Secretary shall obligate for grants under this title not less than 50 percent and not more than 60 percent of the funds appropriated for such year pursuant to this title.

"(b) BY SEPTEMBER 30.—Not later than September 30 of each fiscal year, the Secretary shall obligate for assistance under this title the remaining funds appropriated for such fiscal year pursuant to this title.

"SEC. 113. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title, to be available until expended, $200,000,000 per fiscal year for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994. Not more than 25 percent of the amount appropriated pursuant to this section for any fiscal year shall be expended to carry out section 102(a)(2).

"TITLE II—INVESTMENT STRATEGY, PLANNING, EVALUATION, AND DEMONSTRATION

"SEC. 201. INVESTMENT STRATEGY AND PLANNING.

"(a) GRANTS FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PLANNING.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants for economic development planning, including the preparation of development investment strategies under section 106 and the payment of administrative expenses, to—

"(1) any State,

"(2) any economic development district,

"(3) any Indian tribe,

"(4) any county if the jurisdictional area of such county meets the requirements of section 105 and is located outside of the boundaries of an economic development district, and

"(5) any other unit of local government with a population of 50,000 or more if the jurisdictional area of such unit meets such requirements and is located outside of the boundaries of an economic development district.

The Secretary is also authorized to make grants for preparation of a development investment strategy under section 106 to any unit of local government with a population of 100,000 or more if the jurisdictional area of such unit meets the requirements of section 105 and, in any case in which such unit is located within the boundaries of an economic development district, such unit consults the district in the preparation of the investment strategy.

"(b) COMPREHENSIVE PLANNING REQUIREMENT.—Planning carried out under this section shall be a part of a comprehensive planning process and shall be a continuous process involving public officials and private citizens in analyzing local economies, defining development goals, determining project opportunities, and formulating and implementing a development program.

"(c) PREPARATION OF STATE PLANS.—Any State economic development plan prepared with assistance under this section shall be prepared by the State with the active participation of units of local government and economic development districts located in whole or in part within such State and shall set goals for economic development within such State.

"(d) ANNUAL STATE REPORTS.—Each State receiving assistance under this section shall submit to the Secretary an annual report on the planning process assisted under this section.

"(e) DISTRICT AND LOCAL PLANS CONSISTENT WITH STATE PLAN.—Any economic development planning by an economic development district or a unit of local government for which a grant is made under this section shall be consistent with the State economic development plan for the State in which such district or unit is located.

(f) COORDINATION OF RESOURCES.—Grants under this section shall be used, to the maximum extent possible, to provide coordination of investment for community facilities, economic development, manpower training, and transportation services.

"(g) ENCOURAGEMENT OF ASSISTANCE.—Each applicant for assistance under this section is encouraged to provide project planning, financial analysis, marketing, management, feasibility studies, and other technical and financial assistance to communities and neighborhoods within its boundaries.

"SEC. 202. EVALUATION AND DEMONSTRATION.

"(a) EVALUATION OF DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT EFFORTS.—The Secretary is authorized to conduct a program of evaluation of Federal, State, and local development investment efforts in order to—

"(1) assist in determining the causes of unemployment, underemployment, severe economic adjustment problems, and chronic distress in areas and regions of the United States; and

"(2) assist in formulating, implementing, or improving programs at the National, State, or local levels which are designed to increase employment in private firms, assist depressed industry sectors, or otherwise promote economic development or adjustment.

"(b) Demonstration Programs.—

"(1) In General.—The Secretary is authorized to conduct demonstration programs to test the feasibility of new ways to increase productivity and growth designed to make the steel industry and related industries more competitive, to encourage the use and development of innovative technology and research in economic development, to match the labor force with projected labor markets, to improve United States competitiveness, and to encourage economic diversity and regional balance.

"(2) Reports.—Not later than 90 days after completion of each demonstration program conducted under this subsection, the Secretary shall transmit to Congress a report on the results of such program.

"(c) Administration.—Programs authorized under subsections (a) and (b) of this section may be carried out by the Secretary acting through the staff of the Department of Commerce, in cooperation with or by the provision of funding to other departments or agencies of the Federal Government, or by contract.

"(d) Grants for Management and Technical Assistance.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants to colleges, universities, and other organizations to establish and support ongoing programs which provide to businesses and units to local government management and technical assistance for the purposes of promoting productivity, economic development, and employment opportunity.

"SEC. 203. FEDERAL SHARE.

"(a) Economic Development Planning.—The amount of any grant under section 201 may not exceed 75 percent of the cost of economic development planning or of the preparation of a development investment strategy.

"(b) Management and Technical Assistance.—The amount of any grant under section 202(d) may not exceed 75 percent of the cost of establishing and supporting the ongoing management and technical assistance program.

"(c) Determination of Non-Federal Share.—In determining the amount of the non-Federal share of costs under this section, the Secretary shall give consideration to all contributions both in cash and in kind, including space, equipment, and service.

"(d) Indian Tribes.—In the case of a grant to an Indian tribe under section 201, the Secretary may reduce or waive any non-Federal share required by this section.

"SEC. 204. OBLIGATION OF FUNDS.

"Not later than December 31 of each fiscal year, the Secretary shall obligate for grants under section 201, 90 percent of the funds appropriated for such fiscal year pursuant to this title, other than those funds made available for purposes of section 202. The remainder of such funds shall be obligated during such fiscal year only for making grants under section 201 in areas meeting the criteria set forth in section 105(a)(3).

SEC. 205. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) In General.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title, to be available until expended, $50,000,000 per fiscal year for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994.

"(b) Limitation on Amount for Section 202.—Of sums authorized to be appropriated under subsection (a) of this section, not to exceed $13,000,000 in fiscal year 1992 and not to exceed $15,000,000 in each of fiscal years 1993 and 1994 shall be available for purposes of section 202.

"TITLE III—ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 301. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this Act—

"(1) Economic development district.—The term 'economic development district' means—

"(A) an economic development district designated on or before January 1, 1991, under section 403(a)(1) of the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965; and

"(B) any district within a State which is designated by the Secretary, which district is of sufficient size or population and contains sufficient resources to foster economic development on a scale involving more than one county and does not contain within its boundaires any part of another economic development district designated under subparagraph (A) or under this subparagraph.

"(2) Jurisdiction area.—The term 'jurisdictional area' means the area over which a unit of local government has jurisdiction.

"(3) Indian tribe.—The term 'Indian tribe' means the governing body of an Indian tribe, an Indian authority or tribal organization or entity, an Alaska Native village, or any Indian group which is recognized as an Indian tribe by the Secretary of the Interior, except that the term 'Indian tribe' shall also include those bodies, authorities, organizations, entities, or groups not recognized by the Secretary of the Interior, if such body, authority, organization, entity, or group is recognized as a tribe or other similar appropriate entity by the State in which it is located and such State holds land in trust on behalf of such tribe or other similar appropriate entity.

"(4) Qualified employee ownership organization.—The term 'qualified employee ownership organization' includes a qualified employee trust as defined in section 3(c)(2) of the Small Business Act, except that—

"(A) such term shall not be limited to plans maintained by small business concerns or to loans guaranteed under such Act;

"(B) in the case of any form of financial assistance, the principles of section 3(c)(2)(B) of such Act shall apply under regulations prescribed by the Secretary; and

"(C) there shall be periodic reviews of the role, in the management of the concern involved, of employees to whose account stock is allocated.

"(5) Secretary.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Commerce.

"(6) Small business concern.—The term 'small business concern' means a business that is independently owned and operated, is not dominant in its field of operations, and meets such other criteria as the Secretary, after consultation with the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, may by regulation establish, including numbers of employees and dollar volume of business by industrial classes.

"(7) State.—The term 'State' means the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas.

"(8) Unit of local government.—The term 'unit of local government' means any city, county, town, parish, village, or other general purpose political subdivision of a State.

"SEC. 302. APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY.

"The Secretary shall administer this Act with the assistance of an Assistant Secretary of Commerce, established by section 601 of the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965. Such Assistant Secretary shall perform such functions as the Secretary may prescribe.

"SEC. 303. CONSULTATION WITH OTHER PERSONS AND AGENCIES.

"The Secretary is authorized from time to time to call together and confer with any persons, including representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and government, who can assist in meeting the problems of area and regional unemployment or underemployment. The Secretary may make provisions for such consultation with interested departments and agencies as he may deem appropriate in the performance of the functions vested in him by this Act.

"SEC. 304. ADMINISTRATION OF ASSISTANCE.

"No grant shall be approved under this Act unless the Secretary is satisfied that the project for which Federal assistance is granted will be properly and efficiently administered, operated, and maintained.

"SEC. 305 POWERS OF THE SECRETARY.

"(a) List of Powers.—In performing his duties under this Act, the Secretary is authorized to do the following:

"(1) Adopt, alter, and use a seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

"(2) Hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, and take such testimony, as the Secretary may deem advisable.

"(3) Request directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics needed to carry out the purposes of this Act. Each department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment or instrumentality is authorized to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Secretary.

"(4) Acquire, in any lawful manner, any property (real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible), whenever deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of the activities authorized by this Act.

"(5) Procure by contract the temporary or intermittent services of experts and consultants or organizations therefor as authorized by section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, and allow them, while away from their homes or regular places of business, travel expenses (including per diem in lieu of subsistence) in accordance with section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government service employed intermittently, while so employed.

"(6) Sue and be sued in any court of record of a State having general jurisdiction or in any United States district court, and jurisdiction is conferred upon such district court to determine such controversies without regard to the amount in controversy; but no attachment, injunction, garnishment, or other similar process, mesne, or final, shall be issued against the Secretary or property of the Secretary.

"(7) Establish such rules, regulations, and procedures as the Secretary may deem appropriate in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

"(b) Limitation on Statutory Construction.—Nothing in this Act (including subsection (a)(6)) shall be construed to except the activities under this Act from the application of sections 517, 547, and 2679 of title 28, United States Code.

"SEC. 306. CERTIFICATION.

"(a) Acceptance.—The Secretary may discharge any of his responsibilities relative to a project for which a grant may be made under title I of this Act by accepting a certification by the applicant of the applicant's performance of such responsibilities.

"(b) RESCISSION OF ACCEPTANCE. Acceptance by the Secretary of an applicant's certification under this section may be rescinded by the Secretary at any time if, in the opinion of the Secretary, it is necessary to do so.

"(c) REGULATION.—The Secretary shall issue such guidelines and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this section.

"SEC. 307. SAVINGS PROVISIONS.

"(a) AFFECT ON PROCEEDINGS.—No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the Secretary or Assistant Secretary or any other officer in his or her official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his or her official duties under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965, shall abate by reason of the taking effect of the amendment by section 102 of the Public Works and Economic Development Act Amendments of 1991, but the court may, on a motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after the effective date of such amendment, showing a necessity for the survival of such suit, action, or proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, allow such suit, action, or proceeding to be maintained by or against the Secretary or Assistant Secretary or such other officer of the Department of Commerce as may be appropriate.

"(b) EXISTING REGULATIONS AND PROCEEDINGS.—All rules, regulations, orders, authorizations, delegations, or other actions duly issued, made, or taken by or pursuant to applicable law, before the effective date of such amendment, by any agency, officer, or office pertaining to any functions, powers, and duties under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 shall continue in full force and effect after such effective date until modified or rescinded by the Secretary or such other officer of the Department of Commerce as, in accordance with applicable law, may be appropriate.

"SEC. 308. ANNUAL REPORT.

"The Secretary shall make a comprehensive and detailed annual report to Congress of operations under this Act for each fiscal year beginning after the year ending September 30, 1991. Such report shall be printed and shall be transmitted to Congress not later than February 1 of the year following the fiscal year with respect to which such report is made.

"SEC. 309. PREVAILING RATE OF WAGE.

"(a) GENERAL RULES.—All laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors on projects assisted by the Secretary under this Act shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Act of March 3, 1931, commonly known as the Davis-Bacon Act (46 Stat. 1494; 40 U.S.C. 276a–276a–5).

"(b) ASSURANCE.—The Secretary shall not extend any financial assistance under this Act for any project without first obtaining adequate assurance that the standards required by subsection (a) will be maintained upon the construction work.

"(c) FUNCTION OF SECRETARY OF LABOR.—The Secretary of Labor shall have, with respect to the standards required by subsection (a), the authority and functions set forth in Reorganization Plan Numbered 14 of 1950 (15 F.R. 3176; 64 Stat. 1267; 5 U.S.C. App.), and section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 948; 40 U.S.C. 276c).

"SEC. 310. RECORD OF APPLICATIONS.

"The Secretary shall maintain as a permanent part of the records of the Department of Commerce a list of each application approved for a grant under this Act, which shall be kept available for public inspection during the regular business hours of the Department of Commerce. The following information shall be posted in such list as soon as each application is approved:

"(1) The name of the applicant.

"(2) The amount and duration of the grant for which application is made.

"(3) The purposes for which the proceeds of the grant are to be used.

"SEC. 311. RECORDS AND AUDIT.

"(a) GENERAL RULES.—

"(1) RECORDS.—Each recipient of a grant under this Act shall keep such records as the Secretary shall prescribe, including records which—

"(A) fully disclose the amount and the disposition by such recipient of the proceeds of such grant, the total cost of the project or undertaking in connection with which such grant is given or used, and the amount and nature of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking supplies by other sources; and

"(B) review the efficiency, economy, and effectiveness of the project carried out under this Act.

"(2) REPORTS TO SECRETARY.—Not later than January 11 and July 11 of each year, each recipient shall transmit a report to the Secretary containing all information prescribed under paragraph (1) which relates to all activities carried out during the preceding period relating to grants made to it under this Act. Each report submitted in January of each year shall include an audited statement of all funds spent on the project or undertaking during the preceding fiscal year. Such statement shall be prepared in accordance with chapter 75 of title 31, United States Code, or agency regulations governing the audit of nonprofits.

"(b) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—For the purpose of reviewing the efficiency, economy, and effectiveness of programs carried out under the provisions of the Act, including audit and examination, the Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall have access to any books, documents, papers, and records of any recipient, subrecipient, contractor, or subcontractor that are pertinent to assistance received under this Act.

"SEC. 312. NONDISCRIMINATION REQUIREMENTS

"In administering this Act, the Secretary may not—

"(1) discriminate in favor of or against any qualified applicant based on the fact that the area in which the project would be located is either rural or urban in character.

"(2) create separate allocations of funds to provide assistance for urban and rural areas unless such allocations are based on objective findings of relative levels of distress in areas qualified for assistance under this Act; or

"(3) deny assistance to a qualified applicant based on the fact that the project area is located in a State which has a low level of unemployment.

"SEC. 313. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"There is authorized to be appropriated for salaries and administrative expenses to carry out the provisions of this Act $26,000,000 per fiscal year for each of fiscal year 1992, 1993, and 1994. Appropriations under this Act shall remain available until expended. Any contract entered into pursuant to this Act shall be effective only to such extent and in such amounts as may be provided in advance in an appropriation Act.".

TITLE II—APPALACHIAN REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Appalachian Regional Development Act Amendment of 1991".

SEC. 202. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

Section 2 of the Appalachian Region Development Act of 1965 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by striking out the period at the end of the 6th sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "and in severely distressed and underdeveloped counties and areas lacking resources for basic services."; and

(2) by adding at the end of such section the following new subsection:

"(c) The Congress further finds and declares that while there has been significant improvement in the Appalachian region in the last 25 years, the region still does not share equally in the Nation's prosperity. In 1965 unemployment in the Appalachian region was 40 percent above the national average. In 1965 only 33 percent of the population in the region had completed high school. One in three families in the region were below the poverty level in 1963.

The region lacked modern infrastructure—few roads, fewer sewers and water systems. The lack of modern infrastructure severely handicapped opportunities for economic growth.

In the intervening 25 years the federal government has contributed $3 billion in federal dollars for the Appalachian Regional Development Highway System. Two-thirds of the highway system has been built. And we have achieved some degree of success. By 1990 the region's unemployment rate had been cut to only 15 percent above the national average. By 1980 57 percent of the population had completed high school. And further improvements are expected.

However, 122 Appalachian region counties in 1990 had unemployment rates of at least 150 percent of the national average. 14 percent of the region's families remained below the national poverty rate in 1980. Between 1980 and 1986, 81 percent of the new jobs created in the region—560,000—were in counties with either completed Appalachian corridor or interstate highway systems.

It is therefore, further the purpose of this Act to continue and intensify joing Federal/State efforts toward completion of a regionwide infrastructure. These efforts should be rededicated to assisting in the achievement of such a viable, comprehensive infrastructure. These efforts will create a stable base upon which to generate employment opportunities, and better health and education opportunities for the people of the region. The federal government ought facilitate the continued economic development of the region in this matter in order to assist the region in attaining prosperity.".

SEC. 203. AUTHORIZATIONS FOR ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.

Section 105(b) of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", and not to exceed $3,500,000 per fiscal year for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994. Of amounts appropriated pursuant to the preceding sentence for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994, not to exceed $1,000,000 shall be available for expenses of the Federal cochairman, his alternate, and his staff.".

SEC. 204. EXTENSION OF LEASE TERMS.

Section 106(7) of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "1982" and inserting in lieu thereof "1993".

SEC. 205. HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS. Section 201(g) of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "; and $341,500,000 per fiscal year for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994.".

(b) FEDERAL SHARE.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—Section 201(h)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "70 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "80 percent".

(2) APPLICABILITY.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply to projects approved after March 31, 1979.

SEC. 206. DEFINITIONS.

(a) UPDATING OF COVERED FEDERAL GRANT-IN-AID PROGRAMS.—The first sentence of section 214(c) of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "December 31, 1980" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1994".

(b) LIMITATION ON COVERED ROAD PROJECTS.—The second sentence of such section is amended by inserting "authorized by title 23, United States Code" after "road construction".

SEC 207. PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT CRITERIA.

Section 224(a) of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end of paragraph (1) the following: "or in a severely distressed and underdeveloped county or area lacking resources for basis services".

SEC. 208 REMOVAL OF LIMITATION.

Section 224(b) of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended—

(1) by striking out "(2) to finance" and all that follows through "(3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(2)"; and

(2) by striking out "(4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(3)".

SEC. 209. MAXIMUM FEDERAL SHARE.

Section 224 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) MAXIMUM FEDERAL SHARE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, after September 30, 1991, grants made with funds authorized under this Act shall not exceed 50 percent of the costs of any project approved under this Act (except projects under section 201); except that, notwithstanding any limitation of any other Federal law, such grants may increase the Federal contribution to any project being carried out under such other law and eligible for financial assistance under this Act to such percentage as the Commission determines appropriate within the limitations of this Act. The Commission may increase the maximum percentage of a grant from 50 percent to not more than 80 percent of the costs of a project approved under this Act for a county which the Commission determines is one of the most distressed counties in the Appalachian region; except that the Commission may not increase such percentage for more than 25 percent of the grants made in any fiscal year.".

SEC. 210. GRANTS FOR ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES AND DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Section 302(a)(3) of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended—

(1) by inserting after "technical assistance" the following: "(including technical assistance for business development and stabilization and application of technologies and productivity improvement)";

(2) by inserting after "training programs" the following: "(including on-site employee training and programs to upgrade employability of the region's perople)"; and

(3) by inserting after "demonstrations" the following: "(including demonstrations of service consolidations and other methods of increasing efficiency of local governments, the establishing and operation by States, public agencies, or nonprofit development organizations of revolving funds for business assistance loans, and establishment and operation of business incubators and the provision of industrial facilities and equipment by public agencies and non-profit organizations on such terms (including terms of reasonable recovery of grant funds upon resale) as are approved by the Commission, and the acquisition and development of land)."

(b) LIMITATIONS ON DEMONSTRATION GRANTS.—Subsection (b)(1) of such section is amended—

(1) by striking out ", (3), or (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "or (4),";

(2) by inserting "or economic" after "energy"; and

(3) by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Funds in energy enterprise development loan funds established with grants previously approved by the Commission under this section may, upon approval of the Commission pursuant to section 303, after the date of the enactment of the Appalachian Regional Development Act Amendments of 1991, be made available for the purposes authorized in subsection (a)(3).".

SEC. 211. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR GENERAL PROGRAM.

Section 401 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In addition to the appropriations authorized in section 105 for administrative expenses and in section 201(g) for the Appalachian development highway system and local access raods, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Commission, to be available until expended, to carry out this Act, $37,500,000 per fiscal year for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994.".

SEC. 212. EXTENSION OF TERMINATION DATE.

Section 405 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "1982" and inserting in lieu thereof "1994".

TITLE III—COAL MINE MOUTH PLANT TECHNOLOGY

SECTION 301. SHORT TITLE.

This Title may be cited as the "Coal Mine Mouth Plant Technolgy Improvement Act of 1991".

SEC. 302. PURPOSE.

To encourage the development of energy plants at the mouth of coal mines, with a specific focus on the economically depressed Appalachian region, by improving the technologies for coal separation and power transmission using superconductivity.

SEC. 303. STUDY BY THE APPALACHIAN REGION COMMISSION.

(a) STUDY.—The Appalachian Region Commission shall conduct a study of the economic and environmental impacts of locating coal fired power plants utilizing technologies developed pursuant to this Act near coal mines in the Appalachian region. The study shall include criteria for selecting appropriate mines and a list of appropriate mines.

(b) REPORT.—Not later then two years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Appalachian Region Commission shall report to Congress the findings and conclusions of the study conducted pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 304. RESEARCH OF TECHNOLOGIES TO IMPROVE COAL MINE MOUTH PLANT FEASIBILITY AND MAGNETIC SEPARATION TECHNIQUES USING SUPERCONDUCTIVITY.

(a) AUTHORIZATION TO CONDUCT RESEARCH.—The Secretary of Energy shall—

(1) conduct research and development through the Department of Energy; and

(2) enter into cooperative research and development agreements with public and private researchers, to promote the development of high temperature superconductivity technologies to be utilized for the production of power at coal mine mouth plants and the development of clean coal technologies as provided in subsection (b).

(b) TECHNOLOGIES.—The research and development authorized by subsection (a) shall focus on two specific technologies as follows:

(1) High temperature superconductivity transmission cables to be used to conduct reserve or active power to cities.

(2) Magnetic Coal separation techniques to be utilized to develop and improve magnetic coal separation and magnetic emissions control technology

SEC. 305. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) APPALACHIAN REGION COMMISSION STUDY.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the study authorized in section 2.

(b) RESEARCH OF TECHNOLOGIES.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated—

(1) for research described in section 3(b)(1), $2,000,000 for each fiscal year 1993 through 1997; and

(2) for research described in section 3(b)(2), $2,000,000 for each fiscal year 1993 through 1997.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 35. A bill entitled the "Safe Bottled Water Act of 1991"; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SAFE BOTTLED WATER ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Safe Bottled Water Act of 1991. In doing so, I hope to establish a better system of regulating bottled water. Bottled water should receive the same protections as public water supplies. That it does not is surely an anomaly of the law, one we can and should correct.

There are almost 500 water plants in the United States producing over 600 different brand names of bottled water. There are over 75 imported brands of bottled water. The estimated value of imported and domestic bottled water sold in the United States in 1988 was approximately $2 billion. Almost 1 out of every 15 households nationwide consumes bottled drinking water as their primary source of drinking water. In southern California, one out of every three households uses bottled water. In fact California accounts for almost half of the bottled water consumed in the United States. In 1988, Californians consumed 565 million gallons of bottled water, New Yorkers 110 million gallons, Texans 105 million gallons, and Floridians 92 million gallons.

Why do people buy bottled water at 500 to 1,000 times the price of public water? Taste, fashion, safety. It is perhaps a fad. Yet, in the last decade, the bottled water industry has grown some 400 percent, so it would seem bottled water is here to stay. That in itself is fine. If an individual chooses to buy a bottle of water, he or she assumes that it is at least as safe as that provided through the public water supplies. Mr. President, the truth is, this may not be the case at all. That bottle of water may actually contain levels of contaminants in excess of those found in our public water supplies. And the reason for this is worth noting.

Attempts to regulate public drinking water supplies have existed in one form or another since the turn of the century. In 1974, Congress passed the Safe Drinking Water Act and began regulating and enforcing tougher standards for drinking water. Congress again addressed public drinking supplies in 1986 by amending and strengthening the Safe Drinking Water Act and is scheduled to do so again in the Congress. Many believe that the Environmental Protection Agency must go further in its enforcement of the act, and this may be so. As with anything, there is always room for improvement.

In 1988, almost 2 billion gallons of bottled water was sold in the United States. Under the Safe Drinking Water Act, the Environmental Protection Agency, the agency of the Federal Government with the expertise in regulating drinking water, did not regulate a drop of this water. Bottled drinking water is considered a food and thus regulated by the Food and Drug Administration.

Bottled water is regulated under one small section of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. The provision simply requires that the Administrator of the Food and Drug Administration consult with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency whenever EPA issues new primary drinking water regulations. The Food and Drug Administrator then has 180 days in which to make the standard applicable to bottled water or explain why he or she is not doing so. The Food and Drug Administration is not required to apply the EPA standards. But if the FDA decides to adopt the EPA standards, it must promulgate separate regulations, putting bottled water at least 2 years behind public water. Furthermore, FDA does not require bottled water to be tested or monitored for unregulated contaminants as public water facilities are currently required to do.

Mr. President, there are presently no regulations requiring a bottler of water to disclose its source. As much as one-third of all bottled water comes from public water supplies. My bill requires that the bottler clearly identify its source. If a consumer is going to pay 1,000 times the price of public water, he or she is entitled to know for what they are paying.

There are no regulations concerning what an approved source of water is. There currently exist no criteria concerning minimum well construction standards, distance separation from upstream wastewater discharges, or minimum distance separations from a variety of potential contamination sources such as abandoned wells, septic tanks, waste impoundments or landfills. My bill does this.

Mr. President, this is a rather simple measure. It requires that the standards for public drinking water also be applied to bottled water. The bill requires simple labeling procedures and expands the monitoring, testing, and reporting procedures for bottled water. It requires standard definitions for drinking water, natural water, spring water, well water, distilled water, purified water, soda water, seltzer water, and mineral water, so that a consumer might have a better idea of what is being purchased.

In introducing this bill it is not my intention to burden a growing industry with excessive Federal regulations but rather, to insure that bottled water at least be as stringently regulated as public water supplies.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be entered into the RECORD at the appropriate place.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 35

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "The Safe Bottled Water Act of 1991".

SEC. 102. PURPOSE.

To amend the Safe Drinking Water Act to require that bottled water be subject to health standards applicable to public water supplies.

SEC. 103. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) Consumption of bottled water has increased markedly in recent years with approximately one out of every fifteen households currently consuming bottled drinking water as their source of drinking water;

(2) U.S. sales of bottled water increased by almost 500 percent during the decade of 1977 through 1987, creating a $1.9 billion dollar industry;

(3) Consumers are paying premium prices for bottled water based on the assumption that it is of superior quality to their tap water;

(4) Industry representatives report that sixty to seventy percent of all bottled water sold in the United States is left unregulated by the federal government;

(5) There exist confusion and ambiguities in the law leading to the consumption of bottled water that is not as stringently regulated as municipal water supplies;

(6) An estimated one-third of bottled water brands are taken from community water supplies and municipal tap water and commonly sold at 500 to 1000 times the cost of tap water, and

(7) There currently exist no requirement that a bottler of water reveal the original source of its product.

SEC. 104. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this Act—

(1) The term "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

(2) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

SEC. 105. NATIONAL PRIMARY DRINKING WATER REGULATIONS FOR BOTTLED WATER.

(a) The Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following new section at the end thereof:

"Maximum Contaminant Level for Bottled Water"

"SEC. 1452. (a)(1) When the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency promulgates interim or revised national primary drinking water regulations concerning maximum contaminant levels, such regulations shall be applicable to all bottled drinking waters, including mineral, spring, natural sparkling water and vended water.

(2) Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall establish separate quality standards and definitions for mineral water and carbonated water which include—

(A) limits for total dissolved solids, sulfate, sodium, and trihalomethane content;

(B) the Secretary shall insure that standards for mineral water and carbonated beverages meet all Environmental Protection Agency established health-based drinking water standards.

(b)(1) SOURCE PROTECTION.—Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator shall—

(A) define "approved sources" of bottled water;

(B) establish criteria to determine the adequacy as well as the protection of "approved sources" of bottled water including but not limited to—

(i) minimum well construction standards;

(ii) minimum distance separation from upstream wastewater discharges;

(iii) minimum distance separations from abandoned wells, septic tanks, waste impoundments, and landfills.

(c) MONITORING, REPORTING AND INSPECTION.—Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator shall—

(1) establish a bottled water monitoring program which at a minimum—

(A) is as stringent as that used for public water supplies and provides for yearly testing and monitoring for 51 unregulated contaminants for which public water utilities must test, and

(B) requires that any analyses or testing be performed in a State or EPA approved and certified laboratory.

(2) establish a bottled water reporting program that includes—

(A) time tables and procedures for timely reporting to EPA,

(B) provide public notification procedures should a bottled water be found to be in exceedence of health based standards,

(C) establish a national registry of bottled water facilities and their most current reporting information, and

(D) require that records of sampling and analysis be maintained at the plant for not less than two years and shall be available for official review upon request of State or Federal regulatory agency.

(3) establish a bottled water facility inspection program which includes at a minimum two scheduled inspections a year and one unscheduled inspection a year.

(e) RECALL REGULATIONS.—Not later than six months after the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator shall—

(1) establish procedures and public notification guidelines for recall of a bottled water product if exceedence of any health based standards occurs.

(2) require each bottler to develop and submit individual recall notification and recall procedures.

(f) PROHIBITION ON DUAL USE OF BOTTLED WATER EQUIPMENT.—Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this section—

(1) the Administrator shall prohibit the processing and bottling of noncarbonated water with equipment used to process milk, fruit juice or other food products likely to contribute nutrients for microbiological growth.

(g) BOTTLING, PACKAGING, AND STORAGE STUDY.—The Administrator shall conduct a comprehensive study of contaminants and the extent to which they contribute to the degradation of bottled water from the unique processing and storage of bottled water. The Administrator shall pay particular attention to contamination problems which may arise from the bottling, packaging or storage of bottled water products.

SEC. 106. LABELING.

Not more than six months after the date of enactment of this section the Secretary shall—

(a) establish and enforce clear, concise, and un-coded uniform source labeling requirements for all bottled water products which at a minimum includes—

(1) the original source of the water,
(2) type of water,
(3) type of treatment, if any,
(4) the date of bottling,
(5) the address of the bottler, and
(6) provide numerical specification of sodium content.

(b) Define—

(1) mineral water, spring water, naturally carbonated, naturally sparkling, well water, natural well water, artesian water, natural artesian water, purified water, distilled water, drinking water, and require that the definition for the appropriate product be placed on the bottle.

SEC. 107.

Section 349 of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act is amended by striking section 349.

SEC. 108.

There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 36. A bill entitled the "New York Zebra Mussel Monitoring Act of 1991"; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

NEW YORK ZEBRA MUSSEL MONITORING ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the New York City Zebra Mussel Monitoring Act of 1991. This is a simple but necessary measure. New York City receives 95 percent of its water from upstate reservoir systems. The current system is in reasonably good condition but the stress that zebra mussel infestation might produce could seriously jeopardize public water supplies for those living in the New York City area.

Last year the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, Subcommittee on Water Resources, Infrastructure, and Transportation, of which I am chairman, conducted several hearings concerning Dreissena polymorpha, or more commonly known as the zebra mussel.

During those hearings, it became clear that the zebra mussel, a nonindigenous mollusk native to Soviet Central Asia which arrived in the ballast water of a ship from Europe in 1986, was a serious threat to public water supplies throughout the Nation. Experts testified that within the coming two decades, the zebra mussel will have infested the entire surface water system of the United States. Accordingly, I introduced a bill which established a grant program to assist States and localities in keeping their public infrastructure facilities free of zebra mussels. I am pleased that this became law.

Zebra mussels will likely enter the New York City water supply system. When they do, it will be essential to know of their presence and have in place a system to maintain water flows to the New York City area. The bill I introduce today does just that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at the appropriate place.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 36

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "New York City Zebra Mussel Monitoring Act".

SEC. 102. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this Act—

(a) The term "Secretary" means the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works.

(b) The term "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

(c) The term "Zebra Mussel" means the species Dreissena polymorpha.

SEC. 103. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) New York City has operated a public water supply system since the late 1700's;

(2) The current water supply system supplies over 95 percent of all water used in New York City, providing service to millions of residents;

(3) the water supply system obtains its water from three upstate reservoir systems: the Croton, Catskill, and Delaware systems, which include 18 reservoirs and three controlled lakes;

(4) it is likely that within the coming two decades, the zebra mussel will have infested the entire surface water system of the United States and Canada and that this migration is irreversible and cannot be quarantined; and

(5) introduction of the zebra mussel into the New York City water supply system poses a unique public health threat to millions of citizens.

SEC. 104. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to establish a program of monitoring and technological development to prevent the introduction and subsequent infestation of Zebra Mussels into the New York City water supply system.

SEC. 105. MONITORING AND PREVENTION.

(a) The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the Governor of the State of New York, and the Mayor of the City of New York, shall—

(1) develop a prevention monitoring program for zebra mussels throughout the New York City water supply system.

(2) develop appropriate zebra mussel prevention and removal technologies for the New York City water supply system; and

(3) provide technical assistance to the State of New York and the City of New York on alternative design and maintenance practices for the New York City water supply system in the event of zebra mussel infestation.

SEC. 106. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) For the purposes of carrying out section 105 of this Act, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the Army $2,000,000 for each fiscal year 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995. Such sums shall remain available until expended.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 37. A bill to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to authorize the provision of medical supplies and other humanitarian assistance to the Lithuanian people to alleviate suffering during the current emergency; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EMERGENCY HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE TO LITHUANIA

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce a bill to authorize the provision of medical supplies and other humanitarian assistance to the Lithuanian people. I first introduced a similar bill on June 19, 1990.

Last year, the Soviet blockade of Lithuania induced a serious shortage of medical supplies. Hospitals lacked insulin, anesthesia, penicillin, disinfectants, and other indispensable items. Both Houses passed legislation to authorize assistance, but the funds were never appropriated. Some questioned the need for this assistance because the Soviet Union had lifted its economic blockade. Others argued that the negotiations between Lithuania and the Soviet Union would be upset by providing this help. I argued that Lithuania had no reserves and that the Soviets could plunge the state into crisis in a moment's notice. That these were not appropriate terms for negotiating Lithuanian independence.

Perhaps that moment of crisis has arrived. On Friday, January 11, we passed Senate Resolution 12 calling on President Gorbachev to refrain from further use of force against the democratically elected governments of the Baltic States. Yesterday, we learned of Soviet troops storming a radio station in Vilnius and 13 plus casualties.

Once again, I argue, there is a very real need to support Lithuania in its struggle to be free. The incorporation of Lithuania into the Soviet Union was blatantly illegal. Its forceful suppression is also illegal. President Bush condemned the crackdown and noted, "the United States and the West will redouble our efforts to strengthen and encourage peaceful change in the Soviet Union." We have championed Lithuanian efforts rhetorically. Now we have the opportunity to offer tangible support. To strengthen and encourage peaceful change.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 37

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

That chapter 9 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (relating to international disaster assistance) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 495L. LITHUANIAN EMERGENCY RELIEF.—(a) The Congress recognizes that prompt United States assistance is necessary to help alleviate the emergency existing in the Republic of Lithuania which has caused great suffering among the Lithuanian people, especially with regard to a severe shortage of medical supplies and the basic necessities of life.

"(b)(1) The Administrator of the Agency for International Development shall—

"(A) furnish, in accordance with the authorities of this chapter, humanitarian assistance for the relief of the Lithuanian people during the existing emergency;

"(B) solicit private sector donations of humanitarian assistance for Lithuania; and

"(C) cooperate with private relief agencies attempting to provide humanitarian aid to Lithuania.

"(2) The Commander-in-Chief of United States Transportation Command is authorized to provide all airlift and sealift necessary, throughout the course of the Lithuanian blockade, to transport United States public and private donations of medical supplies to Lithuania on a regular basis.

"(c)(1) In addition to funds authorized to be appropriated to carry out this chapter, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President $10,000,000 to carry out subsections (b)(1) and (b)(2).

"(2) Funds appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

"(3) The authority contained in the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to transfer funds between accounts shall not apply with respect to funds appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(d) Assistance may be provided under this section notwithstanding any other provision of law other than laws referred to in section 503(b) of the Support for East European Democracy (SEED) Act of 1989.

"(e) The Congress urges the President to begin negotiations with the nations surrounding Lithuania, including Latvia, Estonia, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and Poland, regarding the importation of critical humanitarian assistance. Pending conclusion of these negotiations, the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development shall furnish the necessary humanitarian assistance through the International Red Cross, the Lithuanian Red Cross, CARITAS, and other relief agencies, to ensure the Lithuanians begin to receive critical humanitarian assistance immediately.

"(f) For purposes of this section, the term 'humanitarian assistance' includes—

"(1) oil, gas, and fuel for emergency vehicles and medical facilities;

"(2) water purification supplies, materials for immunization, and other materials, needed to prevent the outbreak of contagious diseases and to safeguard public health;

"(3) medical supplies; and

"(4) food and clothing.".

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 38. A bill to deny the People's Republic of China most-favored-nation trade treatment; to the Committee on Finance.

DENIAL OF MOST-FAVORED-NATION TRADING STATUS TO THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

• Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today I reintroduce a bill to revoke most-favored-nation status for China. I first introduced this same bill in the 101st Congress on June 22, 1989.

Nearly two decades ago Senator Henry Jackson proposed what he termed "an unprecedented measure to bring the blessings of liberty to these brave men and women who have asked only for the chance to find freedom in a new land." The Jackson-Vanik amendment to the Trade Act of 1974 tied the provision of most-favored-nation status to a nation's willingness to permit emigration. In doing so, it established a relationship between MFN and human rights. Indeed, the purpose of Jackson-Vanik was expressed clearly in its text:

To assure the continued dedication of the United States to fundamental human rights.

Extension of most-favored-nation status has been used since to buttress America's defense of human rights around the world. In 1982, the President suspended Poland's MFN status after its government outlawed Solidarity. In 1987, Poland's MFN status was restored in recognition of positive political changes. Similarly, in 1986 the President revoked Afghanistan's MFN status. I do not need to recount to my colleagues the horrors that led to that decision.

Ten years ago, China was opening to the world, and the United States responded by waiving Jackson-Vanik and granting China MFN status. Supporters of the decision, Senator Jackson among them, cited China's progress in the area of human rights. Deputy Secretary of State Christopher Warren told the Ways and Means Committee on November 1, 1979, that "it should be a source of gratification to us that the Chinese Government is determined to develop a legal system that would prevent the unchecked exercise of official authority." Senator Jackson reminded the committee that Deng Xiaoping had told a Chinese-American audience earlier that year of his desire to loosen travel restrictions. To wit:

> Many of you have relatives living on the mainland and wish they may come over for a family reunion, and others may wish to go back to China to visit their relatives. This is quite natural and understandable. The Chinese government will treat these legitimate wishes favorably and with sympathy and will adopt effective measures to satisfy these wishes. You may rest assured on this score.

Well, we rested assured. Then Tiananmen Square. And on June 19, 1989, a Washington Post headline declared: "Chinese Government Issues New Restrictions on Foreign Travel." On November 28, 1990, a Washington Post headline declared: "China Files Formal Charges, Begins Prosecuting Dissidents Jailed in '89." Just last week, we see: "China Sentences 7 Activists to Prison; 4 Students on 'Most Wanted' List Among Those Tried, Convicted." And we read, in an editorial in today's Post by Jerome Alan Cohen of New York University, of the troubling reality of China that lacks any independent judiciary. They don't think the world is watching. But we are.

The totalitarian idea is dead. But as we see in Beijing, the totalitarian practice is alive and well, stripped of its ideological pretensions, and wielded, now as always, to defend the power of an elite. China's students refused to submit. They have joined the ranks of the martyrs of the 20th century; and their grace has touched us.

Of course such brutal repression of democratic dissent is not new in China. Ask any Tibetan. Chinese behavior in Tibet approaches genocide. It is within serious estimates of responsible people that if matters proceed as they do a distinctive Tibetan civilization, a rich culture for over a millennium, will have vanished in 20 years' time. And China has now become the principal supplier of weapons to the brutal junta in Burma, which also wages genocide against its minority peoples.

Upon receiving MFN status Chinese imports increased from $600 million in 1980 to $12 billion in 1989, a factor of 20. The Soviet Union, in comparison, experienced a drop in imports, from $873 million to $703 million during that same period. Through October 1990 Chinese exports to the United States totaled $4.1 billion. We have our third largest bilateral trade deficit with China. Only those with Japan, and Taiwan are larger.

This trade is so important to China that they violate trade agreements with the U.S. in order to increase exports to the U.S. Just before the new year, our Customs Service announced that China has been illegally shipping textile products into the U.S. through third countries. Indeed, they have been illegally shipping products since 1988. China's textile quota was reduced accordingly. But this is a truly minor inconvenience. U.S. consumption of Chinese goods represents a treasure the Chinese Government wants to preserve. We must consider this treasure worth denying.

Clearly, the conditions under which China received most-favored-nation status have changed. We would not have offered MFN status to China had the events in Tiananmen Square occurred in 1979, rather than 1989. We cannot ignore what happened in China. And we cannot avoid calling it by its name: an armed revolt by the Chinese Army against what we must recognize to be the legitimate authority of the Chinese people.

The United States has for almost two decades made most-favored-nation treatment conditional on political and human rights, in the Soviet Union, China and the rest of the world. We have denied it to the Soviet Union and much of Eastern Europe until they adopted fundamental political and human rights reforms. Happily, Hungary and Czechoslovakia have not fulfilled the requirements of the Jackson-Vanik law. East Germany is no more. We still await further positive change in Romania and Bulgaria before granting MFN. We have not, to this day, actually granted MFN status to the Soviet Union, even though 400,000 people freely emigrated from the country in 1990. We insist upon formal passage of an emigration law by the Soviet Government before we will grant MFN treatment. And the most recent Soviet actions in Lithuania certainly will raise new obstacles. Yet, we continue to confer MFN treatment on an unreconstructed, unrepentant, unchangeable totalitarian regime in Beijing.

This is a double standard. It is a double standard, in support of naked totalitarianism, that surely cannot have been our purpose. We cannot forget, and I ask for the support of my colleagues in making it clear to the Chinese Government that the U.S. will not look the other way as they continue to repress democracy and trample human rights. I urge swift passage of this legislation and ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and three articles from the Washington Post be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 38

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DENIAL OF MOST-FAVORED-NATION TRADE TREATMENT TO THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

(1) the President shall terminate or withdraw any portion of any trade agreement or treaty that relates to the provision of nondiscriminatory (most-favored-nation) trade treatment to the People's Republic of China.

(2) the People's Republic of China shall be denied nondiscriminatory (most-favored-nation) trade treatment by the United States and the products of the People's Republic of China shall be subject to the rates of duty set forth in column number 2 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States, and

(3) the People's Republic of China may not be provided nondiscriminatory (most-favored-nation) trade treatment under any provision of title IV of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2431, et seq.).

SEC. 2 EFFECTIVE DATE.

The provisions of this Act shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption after the date that is 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

CHINA FILES FORMAL CHARGES, BEGINS PROSECUTING DISSIDENTS JAILED IN '89

(By Lena H. Sun)

BEIJING, November 27.—China is taking advantage of world preoccupation with the Persian Gulf crisis to prosecute of some prominent dissidents accused of being ringleaders in last year's democracy movement, according to Chinese sources and Western diplomats.

China's resolve to maintain a "tough position" on internal dissent has been strengthened by the gulf crisis and the gradual lifting of economic and political sanctions against it in recent months by the European Community, Japan and to some degree the United States, according to a Chinese intellectual, who cited such assessments in internal Communist Party documents.

In this view, China no longer sees the need to free political prisoners to win foreign economic assistance, especially at a time when its vote as one of the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council is critical for passage of a U.S.-led resolution authorizing use of force against Iraq.

"U.S. attention is on the Persian Gulf, and a lot of the pressure on China has been lightened," said a Chinese with a relative who has been jailed without formal charges for nearly 17 months.

Earlier this month, Premier Li Peng indicated to some visiting U.S. congressmen that the cases of many of those jailed would be resolved quickly. The delegation stressed the longstanding U.S. position that detainees should be released or formally charged.

Human rights organizations estimate that hundreds of people remain imprisoned for their roles in the democracy movement, which was crushed by the army in June 1989.

In recent days, at least four jailed individuals whom authorities have branded core agitators have been charged with counterrevolution or sedition, according to Chinese sources.

In addition, Wang Dan, one of the most prominent student leaders, is likely to be formally charged in the next few weeks, according to reliable Chinese sources. Authorities also have drawn up indictments against about 10 other student leaders and intellectuals who took leadership roles in last year's protests, according to one Western diplomat, although he could not identify them.

Some university students who took part in the protests but were not jailed have been punished by their schools in recent weeks, sources said. The punishments range from verbal warnings to more serious written warnings that are placed in their secret personnel files.

At Beijing University, which was in the forefront of the protests, 137 students have been labeled political offenders within the last month for their participation in the demonstrations and have been issued warnings by the university's party committee, according to sources. Over 60 percent of those students received warnings that were serious enough to be recorded in their personnel files, the sources said.

At the Central Academy of Drama, another school active in last year's demonstrations, 11 students reportedly have been issued severe warnings for refusing food and water during a hunger strike at Tiananmen Square during the protests. A school spokesman called the reports of the warnings "sheer fabrication."

According to the sources, the Communist Party leadership has instructed university officials to complete investigations of those involved in the protests and to mete out punishments by the end of this year.

Although individual dissidents have been released from jail over the last several months, there has been no mass release of political prisoners since May. Since then, one Chinese said, "China has gained a lot without doing much in the way of human rights."

Although many participants in last year's protests have been tried, none of the accused student or intellectual ringleaders had been formally charged and taken to court until last weekend, when two intellectuals were charged with plotting to overthrow the government.

The charges against Wang Juntao and Chen Ziming, editor and publisher of the now-banned Economic Studies Weekly, are the most serious to be brought so far against intellectuals in the movement.

In addition, Liu Xiaobo, 34, a controversial literary critic, faces trial on a charge of spreading counterrevolutionary propaganda, one Chinese source said today. Authorities have accused Liu of "instigating and participating in the rioting" and of supporting armed resistance.

According to sources quoted by United Press International, Liu Suli, an assistant professor at the University of Politics and Law in Beijing, faces the same charge. Liu reportedly led the liaison group among students, workers and intellectuals in the democracy movement.

All four intellectuals, as well as student leader Wang Dan, are being held at Qincheng prison, where China detains many political prisoners.

It had been rumored that student leader Wang, 22, was going to be released earlier this year. But according to Chinese sources, he remains in prison, and Beijing University's party committee has been notified that Wang will be formally charged before next month's elections for local representatives to the National People's Congress, China's rubber-stamp legislature.

Until now, the party leadership has acted as though afraid of the reaction—at home and abroad—to the formal charging of Wang. But according to the sources, the party is now more afraid that Wang, who would retain his political rights if not formally charged, might be nominated as a people's deputy.

China Sentences 7 Activists to Prison, 4 Students on "Most Wanted" List Among Those Tried, Convicted

[By Lena H. Sun]

BEIJING, Jan. 5.—Authorities today sentenced seven activists, including four student leaders on the government's "most wanted" list, to prison terms ranging from two to four years for involvement in the 1989 democracy movement.

The sentences are considered relatively lenient by Chinese standards. In addition, several intellectuals and some students have been released from custody in recent days in what some Chinese sources said was another indication of leniency by the Communist government.

But those intellectuals whom authorities have accused of playing key roles in the demonstrations are expected to be punished much more severely to give legitimacy to the government's claim that the 1989 protests were a "counter revolution," according to Chinese and Western sources.

Several of those intellectuals, apprehended after the Chinese army crushed the demonstrations in June 1989, have been formally charged in recent weeks and are awaiting trial. Chief among them are scholars Wang Juntao and Chen Ziming, who have been charged with sedition, a crime punishable by death.

The four students sentenced today by the Beijing Municipal Intermediate People's Court are the first on the list of 21 most wanted student ringleaders to be tried. Wang Dan, No. 1 on the list, is still awaiting trial, and at least four others among the most wanted are also in jail. Several of those named on the list escaped to the West.

"I think it's pretty obvious that they tried to go easy on the students because there's a lot of public attention focused on this around the world," said Robin Munro, a China specialist with Asia Watch, a New York-based human rights organization.

Just last month, Assistant Secretary of State Richard Schifter, Washington's top official for human rights, held talks here with officials and asked for the release of 150 Chinese political prisoners.

Today's sentences ranged from two to four years, and included deprivation of political rights for some of the defendants, according to the official New China News Agency. It said the defendants were tried separately, made confessions and were represented by lawyers or relatives who argued on their behalf.

Despite repeated requests, court authorities refused to allow foreign journalists to attend any part of the proceedings, some of which began in November. However, the news agency said more than 60 Beijing residents were present when the sentences were announced.

The court said the defendants were guilty of inciting subversion against the government, organizing attacks against martial law forces, or gathering crowds to disrupt public order. The news agency did not specify the crimes with which each individual was charged.

Many of the "crimes," such as making public speeches or joining in peaceful protest marches, would be protected in the United States under constitutional guarantees of free speech and assembly.

Among the student leaders, the stiffest sentence—four years)—was given to Wang Youcai, No. 15 on the most wanted list.

Wang, 25, a Beijing University physics student, was a member of the Beijing Autonomous Students Federation, the group that organized and coordinated most of the student protests. He was accused of attempting to organize continued student resistance in Shanghai after the army crushed the protests on June 4, 1989, leaving hundreds of people dead.

Two other student leaders also active in the students federation, Zhang Ming, from Qinghua University, No. 19 on the most wanted list, and Ma Shaofang, a Beijing Film Academy student, No. 10 on the list, were each sentenced to three years in jail. Student leader Zheng Xuguang, a Beijing Aerospace University student, No. 9 on the list, was sentenced to two years.

Three activists whose backgrounds were not known were also sentenced to prison terms. They were Zhang Qianjin and Xue Jianan, sentenced to two years, and Kong Xianfeng, who was sentenced to three years.

In addition to the seven who were sentenced to jail time, two others, Li Yugi, a Qinghua University student, and Pang Zhihong, whose background was not known, were "exempted from criminal punishment" because they "committed minor crimes and showed willingness of repentance," the news agency said.

China: Clinging to Courts on a Marxist Model

[By Jerome Alan Cohen]

Deng Xiaoping has always been more interested in Marx than in Montesquieu. Despite his student sojourn in France, Deng has repeatedly rejected the French political philosopher's theory of the separation of powers—so influential in the United States and in other countries the People's Republic of China seeks to catch up with. Thus China lacks a judiciary that is independent of political authority, even though its constitution creates a contrary illusion. In China's courts, as in all of her other government institutions, "politics is in command."

Not only the Chinese people but also their Communist leaders have paid a high price for this system. The transitional figure Hua Guofeng, Chairman Mao Zedong's original successor, discovered this in 1979, when, prior to trial of the "Gang of Four," he assured the world that the Supreme People's Court would not sentence to death Mao's widow. Instead of being credited for a humane gesture, Hua was pilloried and mocked by Chinese reformers as well as foreign observers for usurping the role of the judiciary.

By choosing to continue with Communist Party control of the courts during the new era they brought to China in the 1980s, Deng and his colleagues guaranteed themselves some headaches they could have been spared. Dictating to judges is tempting, as any politician can testify, but it is also costly, as only dictators can confirm. One of its costs—sometimes overlooked in analysis of totalitarian systems—is that it saddles already overburdened political leaders with other important and contentious issues that might have been left to the judiciary.

Recent events in Beijing underscore this truth, for it is the highest party leaders and not the judges who must decide how to dispose of the cases of the advocates of democracy still in detention more than 18 months after the Tiananmen Square tragedy. The trials of some dissidents have just been concluded, but over 50 more will soon be dealt with, including the most prominent persons accused.

Undoubtedly, even Qiao Shi, member of the Politburo standing committee responsibile for what the Chinese accurately call their "political-legal system," cannot himself decide the sensitive and complex questions involved. Convicting workers and unemployed persons who had committed acts of violence was an easy matter on which to gain agreement in the months immediately after Tiananmen. But bringing to trial well-known intellectuals and students for engaging in "counterrevolutionary propaganda" and similar verbal activity has proved to be more controversial for Deng & Co.

Some leaders, eager for formal vindication of their decision to allow the wanton use of force on June 4th, are pushing for the condemnation and harsh punishment of certain dissident intellectuals as the "black hands" behind a supposedly conspiratorial rebellion. Others, recognizing that such actions would compound the damage to their reputations at home and abroad, would like to drop the charges and get on with modernization. Many leaders in the middle would welcome a face-saving way to get this hot potato off the leadership's hands.

An independent, impartial court system would provide the way out, as it does in bourgeois countries. As things stand, however, China's leaders have had to debate not only who will be tried, which changes will be alleged and what the sentences will be, but also other thorny questions. Will the accused be allowed to select their own defense counsel? Will counsel be permitted to make a genuine defense and given the time and facilities to prepare? Will the trials be open to the public as required by law? Will the press, including foreign journalists, be allowed to attend and report on the proceedings? And will China for the first time grant, as many other repressive regimes have done, the requests of international human rights organizations to send representatives to monitor the proceedings?

Thus far the answer appears to be no to all these questions, but they must be provoking great controversy among an elite that was already badly fractured over Tiananmen and its consequences and that has been surprised at the extent of foreign concern about the trials despite the diversion caused by Iraq and the accompanying relaxation against China. Most of this time consuming, enervating divisiveness could have been avoided if China, instead of importing the Marxist model of the judiciary from Moscow, had more carefully considered the advantage of the separation of powers. If Deng is too old and set in his ways to reread Montesquieu, surely some younger colleagues may wish to rummage around in Beijing's still tightly controlled libraries to find a copy.

S. 39. A bill to amend the National Wildlife Refuge Administration Act; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE ADMINISTRATION ACT AMENDMENT

• Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, as this distinguished body addresses the issues and challenges of good government, we often find that the process is a challenge in and of itself. It's a challenge because often the lines of distinction between what is good, better, and best for the American people are blurred by deep convictions and strong emotions from all parties concerned.

Mr. President, there are few things of value that we can leave to posterity with the confidence that they will endure beyond our lifetime. Undisturbed land is one of these. We become more certain about the importance of wilderness areas as time passes—realizing that once the land is stripped it is impossible to return it to the way it was. However, as time passes, we also receive greater pressure from those who feel we need to develop the precious resources on that land. Frightened by the energy crush, by the situation in the Middle East, or motivated by economic gain, either way their collective voices demand development. This is the situation today as we find ourselves confronted with the decision to drill or not to drill in the coastal plain of the Arctic Refuge.

I have always believed that we must weigh our competing national interests with care—after all, the need to develop and use our domestic resources is part of America too. In order to meet our Nation's energy requirements, we must continue to proceed on two fronts. We must continue to reduce the demand for energy through conservation. As a matter of fact, the Department of Energy has reported that conservation has done more than any other source to improve the United States' energy situation. This is important, but we must also increase domestic supplies of energy through alternate sources that will result in long-term solutions.

I ask unanimous consent that the legislation be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in its entirety at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 39

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That notwithstanding any provisions of the National Wildlife Refuge Administration Act, a portion of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska comprising approximately 1,556,793 acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Arctic Coastal Plain Wilderness—Proposed", dated June, 1986, and available for inspection in the offices of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby designated as a component of the National Wilderness Preservation System.•

• Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator ROTH and 14 of my colleagues in sponsoring legislation to provide permanent protection for the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Introduction of this bill, which would designate the coastal plain of the Arctic Refuge as a wilderness area, sends an important message to those who would use the tragic turn of events in the Middle East as an excuse to begin drilling for oil in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge—one of the remaining wild and pristine expanses of our Nation. Although the coastal plain may appear to be an arctic wasteland, it is actually a fertile ecosystem rich with the vegetation and wildlife of the fierce arctic tundra.

The coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge has long been recognized as a unique and important arctic habitat. The Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act of 1980 stated the purposes for which the refuge was established. Foremost among these is: To conserve fish and wildlife populations and habitats in their natural diversity including, but not limited to, the Porcupine caribou herd, polar bears, grizzly bears, muskox, Dall sheep, wolves, wolverines, snow geese, peregrine falcons, and other migratory birds and Arctic char and grayling. Protection of the coastal plain is critical to fulfilling this national goal.

I am concerned that Federal lands which have been set aside for their natural beauty and national significance are being exploited for commercial purposes. Too often, the development that takes place is done in a manner that damages and degrades those public lands.

Until we have developed and implemented a national energy strategy that includes all available conservation and efficiency policies, looking to development of the Arctic Refuge to fulfill our energy needs is irresponsible and shortsighted.

In 1986, the Department of the Interior estimated that chances were only one in five that there is economically recoverable oil present in the coastal plain. In other words, the odds are four to one that drilling in the refuge will not produce enough oil to justify the cost. It is important to keep in mind that the Interior Department's 1986 report also stated—this time without assigning odds—that long-term losses in fish and wildlife resources, subsistence uses, and wilderness values are inevitable consequences of oil and gas development.

This brings me to the crux of the issue. That is, are we willing to sacrifice the long-term integrity of this unique arctic coastal ecosystem for the possibility of a short-term injection of oil into our energy supply? Those who support the ROTH bill answer this query with a resounding "No".•

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am joining in introducing S. 39, a bill to amend the National Wildlife Refuge Administration Act, to increase our protection of the fragile Arctic Coastal Plain Wilderness—one of the world's richest ecosystems.

As an original cosponsor of the Alaska lands bill, I enthusiastically support this measure. The Alaska lands bill provides the limited protection that the Arctic Wilderness now enjoys.

I am pleased to join the Senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH], the Senior Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS], and many of our colleagues in seeking permanent protection for the Arctic Wilderness.

Our legislation would designate the Arctic coastal plain as part of the National Wilderness Preservation System. It would take one of our country's last great wilderness areas and put it clearly off limits to development interests.

I hope the Senate will take a commonsense approach to the Arctic coastal plain, but I am concerned that we may become embroiled in a highly emotional confrontation between wilderness preservation and energy development interests.

Such a debate is likely to obscure what I consider the most fundamental facts: Our Nation must not risk a globally irreplaceable wilderness for the long odds of finding enough oil reserves for a short-term energy fix.

The catastrophic Exxon Valdez oil spill effectively curbed any efforts to open the Arctic Wilderness to drilling during the 101st Congress. That tragic spill had the ironic effect of buying a brief respite from development interests.

Now, however, the situation in the Persian Gulf has focused attention on our dependence upon foreign oil. The advocates of drilling are marshaling their significant forces to argue in the 102d Congress for exploitation of the Arctic Wilderness.

Exploration for oil is a gamble and, anyone who says otherwise is not to be trusted. We should be particularly careful because the stakes we may be asked to offer are literally priceless and irreplaceable.

Let's look at the odds. The Department of the Interior estimates there is less than one chance in five of finding an economically available supply of oil in the arctic coastal plain. Such long-shot odds are not justified, especially when we consider the treasure we would be surrendering.

Let's look at what's in the pot. Estimates vary widely, but the mean estimate of the recoverable oil in the arctic coastal plain is about 3.2 billion barrels. That's about a 6-month supply of oil for the United States.

Let's look at the payoff. Oil industry experts agree it would take 7 years to see the first oil production if any is found, and as many as 15 years to hit full production.

Let's look again at our stake. The abundance and diversity of wildlife on the arctic coastal plain, focuses in an area only slightly larger than my home State of Rhode Island, makes it one of the richest ecosystems in the world.

In my view, especially as one who is concerned about the need to preserve our wilderness areas in public trust, this is a sucker's bet. Others, with the very best of motives, will argue that the risk may not be as great and the payoff may be greater.

I respect their views and understand their desire for energy reserves, but I cannot support them. We must remember the earlier assurances of safety that were exposed to the world as wishful thinking by the Exxon Valdez.

Although the glaring headlines of that vast spill have faded into history, the legacy of that tragedy remains. It could have been worse and, along the arctic coastal plain, such an ecological disaster could be even more devastating.

Instead of risking our wilderness heritage and our children's legacy, I believe the administration and the Congress should work harder and longer to develop a clear and effective national energy policy.

We should be fostering greater energy efficiency and actively encouraging the development of innovative, alternative energy sources. We must not let these needs fall by the wayside in a blind rush for more oil from any source, regardless of risks, to feed our profligate energy habits.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 40. A bill to direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to develop a prototype of a counterfeit-resistant Social Security card, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

DEVELOPMENT OF COUNTERFEIT-RESISTANT SOCIAL SECURITY CARD

• Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill that would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to develop a prototype of a plastic, counterfeit-resistant Social Security card, and submit that prototype to the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees for review. The bill would also require the Secretary to study and report to Congress on ways to improve the Social Security card application process so as to make it more difficult for individuals to obtain Social Security cards fraudulently.

Let me make it clear. The bill does not require issuance of new cards, only the development of a prototype for congressional review. We could then decide whether issuance of such a card to new applicants is desirable.

Personally, I think it a rather simple proposition that a plastic, counterfeit-proof Social Security card would reduce fraud and enhance public confidence in our Social Security system.

The current paper card is easily counterfeited. A New York Times reporter purchased one at a Houston supermarket for the not-so-hefty sum of $6.90. He used a fake name and contrived number. He received a card on the spot.

Use of such counterfeit Social Security cards is costly to the public. According to estimates by the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Transportation, crimes based on false identification, which frequently involve counterfeit and fraudulently obtained Social Security cards, cost Americans more than $15 billion annually. Misuse of the cards is so widespread that the Domestic Mail Manual of the U.S. Postal Service directs postal employees not to accept Social Security cards as identification for purposes of cashing a money order.

The mere fact of such unfettered misuse of the Social Security card compromises the integrity of the Social Security system. But there is another problem with the card: As a symbol of Social Security, it would not appear to instill much confidence in the system.

It is flimsy. Printed on paper stock, it is easily worn, torn, or, worse, thrown away. Get it wet, and it disintegrates. It is commonly lost.

The card seems even flimsier when compared to its peers, the colorful plastic cards that adorn the wallets of most Americans: Gold tinted cards, cards bearing silverized holograms. I speak, of course, of credit and bank cards—the currency of our generation. Next to these flashy cards, the drab Social Security variety seem second-rate.

The flimsiness of the card suggests not the importance of Social Security, but a lack thereof; not value, but worthlessness. The card is in the league with the sort of temporary, hand-written paper cards that expire after 30 days, or with business cards that are replaced when the bearer changes job or title. It is hardly a symbol designed to boost public confidence.

And such a boost is sorely needed. According to a December 1989 Gallup Poll on public attitudes about Social Security, 51% of nonretired adults believe that Social Security will not be able to pay them benefits when they retire. More than half.

It is time to develop a new card that enhances public confidence in Social Security. I have tried to do so in the past. In 1979, I first introduced legislation for the development of a counterfeit-resistant Social Security card, and after a few tries at passage I finally got bill language included in the Social Security amendments of 1983. What a disappointment when late that year the Social Security Administration began issuing the new card. It looked much like the old card, in fact much like the original card issued back in 1936.

There has been resistance to the idea of developing a new card. Some think it would cost too much. This is not so. According to Visa International, a plastic card with a hologram costs about 2½ cents to produce.

Some fear the card would become a national identity card and would compromise individual privacy. Let me assure you that this is not what I suggest. Far from it. This bill requires only the development of a prototype card. And even if we would go to the issuance of such a card, it would simply be the same card we have now, but made of plastic and more secure against counterfeiting. The Canadians have been using such Social Security cards for years.

The time has surely come to develop a new Social Security card. We need a better symbol for this most important domestic program. Let us try again.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 40

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DEVELOPMENT OF PROTOTYPE OF COUNTERFEIT-RESISTANT SOCIAL SECURITY CARD REQUIRED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall in accordance with the provisions of this section develop a prototype of a counterfeit-resistant Social Security card. Such prototype card shall—

(A) be made of a durable, tamper-resistant material such as plastic or polyester, and

(B) employ features that provide security against counterfeiting, such as holograms.

(2) The Comptroller General of the United States shall provide such information and assistance as the Secretary deems necessary to achieve the purposes of this Act.

(b) STUDY AND REPORT.—(1) The Secretary shall conduct a study and issue a report to Congress which examines different methods of reducing fraud in the current Social Security card application process.

(2) Copies of the report described in this subsection along with the prototype card as described in subsection (a) of this section shall be submitted to the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee within 1 year of the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall become effective upon the date of enactment of this Act.•

S. 41. A bill to provide a 5.4-percent increase in the rates of compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and to rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for the survivors of certain disabled veterans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS COMPENSATION RATES COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to provide a 5.4-percent cost-of-living adjustment in the rates of compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and their dependents.

As my colleagues are aware, in the closing days of the 101st Congress, an unfortunate series of events prevented 2.5 million disabled veterans and their survivors from receiving a modest cost-of-living adjustment for calendar year 1991. As a result, our Nation's disabled veterans, their widows, and children were the only category of Federal beneficiaries who did not receive a 1991 COLA.

The bill I am introducing today, is designed to provide a 5.4-percent increase in the rates of compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for the survivors of certain disabled veterans. The legislation would be retroactive to January 1, 1991.

I am informed by the Congressional Budget Office that because the cost-of-living adjustment for disabled veterans is assumed in the Congressional Budget Office's baseline prepared under section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, this bill would have no cost relative to the baseline.

Disabled veterans, who have given so much for their country, should rightly expect that the Congress stand ready to provide them with the services they deserve. The 5.4-percent cost-of-living adjustment that I propose today for disabled veterans is the same percentage increase as Social Security recipients and Federal and military retirees received on January 1, 1991. Congress cannot provide COLA's for some groups and then discriminate against others, especially against a group as deserving as our Nation's disabled veterans.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues who have joined me in introducing this bill today and urge the Senate to give expeditious consideration to this important legislation. The hour has arrived for us to restore equity and send a strong message to our veterans that this body is working hard and standing strong to preserve and protect all benefits which are so richly deserved.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(b) ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUSTMENTS.—The adjustments made pursuant to section 2(b) shall take effect as of January 1, 1991.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise to join my colleague, Senator SPECTER, as an original cosponsor of legislation authorizing a 5.4-percent cost-of-living adjustment for our Nation's disabled veterans. Our prompt action on this measure is of vital importance to over 2.5 million veterans and their survivors.

No group is more deserving of our respect and gratitude than those individuals who so bravely fought for and defended our way of life. Yet, implausibly, it was this very group which, in the closing days of the last Congress, was denied a cost-of-living adjustment to its compensation benefits.

Certainly, this was not the intent of Congress. In fact, both the House and Senate Veterans' Affairs Committees had earlier voted to award a 1991 COLA. Rather, it was an insistence by Members in both Houses that the COLA remain coupled with unrelated veterans' legislation that effectively killed the COLA.

We can avoid a similar impasse in the 102d Congress by acting quickly in passing a clean COLA bill, one unencumbered by potentially controversial provisions. Moreover, we can redress our failure to award a COLA in the last Congress by passing legislation that is retroactive to January 1, 1991.

The measure we are introducing today is such a bill. It is legislation that has strong support among our veterans. And it is legislation that, at a time when our troops are prepared to sacrifice their lives in the Persian Gulf, sends a clear message that we will stand firmly behind those who have responded to their Nation's call.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this critical legislation, and I urge its immediate passage.

LINEAR ALKYLBENZENE SULFONIC ACID

• Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill to amend the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States. Linear Alkylbenzene Sulfonic Acid, or LAS is a chemical agent used in many household detergents and other cleaning agents. When the new Harmonized Tariff Schedule was implemented, on January 1, 1989, LAS was converted to a new classification. Under this new classification the tariff on LAS was cut in half.

I introduce this bill to restore the LAS tariff to its previous level.•

S. 43. A bill to amend the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States to change the rate of duty for certain bicycles; to the Committee on Finance.

TARIFF RATE OF CERTAIN BICYCLES

• Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill to amend the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States. Imports of adult bicycles, those with front and back wheels larger than 65 centimenters, or 26 inches, are assessed a tariff rate of 5.5 percent. Imports of children's bicycles, either with wheel sizes of less than 65 centimeters or with different sized front and rear wheels, pay a 15-percent rate. Certain bicycles designed specifically for women are designed with smaller front wheels in order to provide proper handling along with a comfortable fit for women under 5 feet 4 inches. These bikes are indeed designed for adults, having standard-sized rear wheels.

Because of their unequal wheel size these special bikes are currently classified as children's bikes, subject to the 15-percent duty. Yet they are intended for and used by adults, and should be assessed rates as such. I am therefore introducing legislation to reduce the tariff on bikes with standard rear wheels and smaller front wheels to the 5.5 percent rate assessed other adult bicycles. The act is retroactive to January 1, 1989, as is appropriate. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation, correcting a discriminatory provision of the Harmonized Tariff Schedules.•

S. 44. A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to admit to the United States for permanent residence aliens holding bachelor of sciences degrees or postgraduate degrees in natural science, engineering, or computer sciences; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IMMIGRATION STATUS FOR HOLDERS OF CERTAIN BACHELORS DEGREES

• Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to accord immigrant status to foreign students who attain a bachelor of science or postgraduate degree in the natural sciences, computer science, or engineering.

This bill addresses the concerns raised by Richard Atkinson in his presidential address at the American Association for the Advancement of Science [AAAS] annual meeting. Atkinson states that the supply of scientists and engineers at the baccalaureate level will almost certainly decline over the coming decade. The size of the college-age population will continue to decrease and it is unlikely that the precentage of college students who are awarded baccalaureate degrees in science and engineering will increase fast enough to compensate for that decrease.

These facts, combined with growing demand for scientists and Ph.D.'s in science and engineering due to other demographic trends, portend an increasing annual shortfall in the needed supply of Ph.D.'s Atkinson estimates that this shortfall may be as high as 10,000 by the year 2010.

The Immigration Act of 1990 takes some valuable steps to address these concerns. The act provides 40,000 visas for priority workers and an additional 40,000 visas for persons with exceptional ability, advanced degrees, or the equivalent. The act, however, fails to make use of the most valuable, most available supply of foreign-born scientists and engineers: Foreign students who have received science and engineering degrees from American universities.

This bill will directly address the anticipated shortfall of scientists and engineers by allowing students who have been educated in the United States to remain here if they so desire. Dr. Dorothy Zinberg of Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government states that 360,000 foreign students were attending schools in the United States in 1989, and 81 percent of these students were in graduate schools or baccalaureate programs. Census Bureau data suggest that approximately 30 percent of these students are in science and engineering fields. Allowing these students to remain in this country, where they have forged strong personal and community bonds, will afford our Nation access to thousands of the world's finest, American-educated scientists.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this measure, and look forward to its prompt passage.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD after my statement along with a letter by Dr. Zinberg appearing in Science on August 10, 1990.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Science, Aug. 10, 1990]

PH.D. SUPPLY AND DEMAND

(By Dorothy S. Zinberg)

In his AAAS presidential address "Supply and demand for scientists and engineers: A national crisis in the making" (27 Apr., p. 425), Richard Atkinson analyzes a number of projections, almost all of which appear dire. The major hopes, he believes, are (i) to encourage high school students who are qualified, but are not choosing science, to do so and (ii) to cut back on the numbers of students who drop out of science and engineering majors in college. These are worthy recommendations and should be vigorously pursued.

However, as someone who has spent more than a decade as an undergraduate adviser to talented freshmen students, I can attest to the onerousness of the task of trying to interest nonscience students in the field, or of convincing those who have discovered the joys of the Gothic novel or 19th-century philosophy that they should not shift out of their science concentrations. The former use their considerable intellects to devise excuses for why they should be allowed to substitute "soft" science for a "hard" science requirement. The latter, rightfully, explain that they had never encountered sophisticated thinking in literature or philosophy in high school, where the science teaching had been first rate. They were simply enlarging their horizons. The many "physics-for-poets" and now the largely nonscientific environmental courses that have sprung up in recent years have allowed many students to satisfy their science requirements, but rarely convert them.

The most promising opportunity to alleviate the predicted shortage is not mentioned by Atkinson, namely, the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Were every foreign science and engineering student in the United States, whether in a baccalaureate, masters, or Ph.D. program, awarded a green card at graduation, the immediate problem would be solved. At present, the rules and regulations are so complicated, and the procedures for granting resident status so confusing, that prospective employers attempt to avoid becoming enmeshed in the red tape and often negative results. This solution would provide the country with some of the best scientific talent in the world.

S. 45. A bill to provide for Federal recognition of the Jena Band of Choctaws of Louisiana, and for other purposes; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

FEDERAL RECOGNITION OF THE JENA BAND OF CHOCTAWS OF LOUISIANA

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation which would extend Federal recognition to the Jena Band of Choctaw of Louisiana. As you may know, I introduced a similar measure last year in the 101st Congress, and the bill I now submit is identical to the amended version of Senate bill 1918 which was unanimously approved by the Senate on October 19, 1990.

To be more precise, Mr. President, this is a bill of reinstatement rather than an extension of recognition. In 1936, the Jena Band of Choctaw was recognized by the U.S. Congress and the Department of the Interior when funds were appropriated by the Congress and specifically designated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs for the education of the Jena Band. This funding, which provided support for a separate Indian school to be operated under the direction of Mrs. Charles Penick, was continued until 1938. At that time, authority was granted for the transfer of members of the Jena Band to the Pearl River area in Mississippi. The Bureau of Indian Affairs, however, reneged on this offer, and the subsequent abrogation of funds for the Jena Band was not only wrong, but unlawful. As the Congress is the only body granted the authority to revoked Federal recognition and since no such action has been taken, the relationship between the Federal Government and the Jena Band of Choctaw remains intact.

Given their unique case, it would be an injustice to require the Jena Band of Choctaw to undergo the current recognition procedure supervised by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. This procedure is lengthy, cumbersome, and expensive. While I understand that this process is necessary and appropriate in determining the proper status of many Indian groups, I assure you that the Jena Band is not such a group. The Jena case is unique in that clear and concise documentation exists which demonstrates previous recognition and acknowledges the authorization of Federal funds for the Penick Indian School. With such convincing proof, there is no reason for the Jena Band to be subjected to the standard acknowledgment process. There is simply no need to waste more time and more money. The established acknowlegment procedure, however well-intentioned and necessary in most cases, will simply serve as an impediment to justice in this instance.

Unfortunately, extensive efforts to secure administrative action on behalf of the Jena Band have been unsuccessful, and it appears our last recourse is to seek resolution through legislation. As I mentioned, this measure is identical to Senate bill 1918, which was unanimously approved by the Senate in the 101st Congress, and I hope my colleagues will join me once again in an attempt to rectify a previous injustice to the Jena Band of Choctaw.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this measure be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as folllows:

S. 45

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Jena Band of Choctaw Recognition Act".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. For purposes of this Act—

(1) The term "Tribe" means the Jena Band of Choctaw of Louisiana.

(2) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior or the designated representative of the Secretary of the Interior.

(3) The term "Interim Council" means the Board of Directors of the Jena Band of Choctaw, Inc.

(4) The term "member" means an individual who is enrolled on the membership roll of the Tribe.

(5) The term "State" means the State of Louisiana.

FEDERAL RECOGNITION

SEC. 3. Federal recognition is hereby extended to the Jena Band of Choctaw of Louisiana. All Federal laws of general application of Indians and Indian tribes (including the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984; 25 U.S.C. 461, et seq.), popularly known as the Indian Reorganization Act, shall apply with respect to the Tribe and to the members.

RESTORATION OF RIGHTS

SEC. 4. (a) All rights and privileges of the Tribe, and members thereof, which may have been abrogated or diminished before the date of enactment of this Act are hereby restored.

(b) Nothing in this Act may be construed to diminish any rights or privileges of the Tribe, or of the members, that existed prior to the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) The Secretary shall accept any real property that is transferred to the Secretary for the benefit of the Tribe. Such real property shall be accepted by the Secretary (subject to any rights, liens, or taxes that exist prior to the date of such transfer) in the name of the United States in trust for the benefit of the Tribe and shall be exempt from all taxes imposed by the Federal Government or any State or local government after such transfer.

(d) Except as otherwise specifically provided in any other provision of this Act, nothing in this Act may be construed as altering or affecting—

(1) any rights or obligations with respect to property,

(2) any rights or obligations under any contract,

(3) any hunting, fishing, trapping, gathering, or water rights of the Tribe or the members, or

(4) any obligation to pay a tax levied before the date of enactment of this Act.

SERVICES

SEC. 5. The Tribe, and the members, shall be eligible for all services and benefits that are provided by the Federal Government to Indians because of their status as Federally recognized Indians and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, such services and benefits shall be provided after the date of enactment of this Act of the Tribe, and to the members, without regard to the existence of a reservation for the Tribe or the location of the residence of any member on or near any Indian reservation.

INTERIM GOVERNMENT

SEC. 6. Until such time as a constitution for the Tribe is adopted in accordance with section 8(a) and tribal officials are elected under section 8(b), the Tribe shall be governed by the Interim Council.

MEMBERSHIP ROLL

SEC. 7. (a) The membership list submitted to the Secretary by the Tribe on May 2, 1985, shall constitute the base roll of the Tribe, subject to the approval of the Secretary.

(b)(1) Until a constitution is adopted in accordance with section 8, an individual shall be eligible for membership in the Tribe, and the name of the individual shall be placed on the membership roll of the Tribe, if—

(A) the individual is living and is not an enrolled member of another Indian tribe that is recognized by the Federal Government, and

(B) the individual—

(i) was included on the membership list submitted to te Secretary on May 2, 1985,

(ii) was entitled to be included on such list but was not included, or

(iii) is a lineal descendant of an individual, living or deceased, who is included on such list.

(2) Any individual who is excluded from the membership roll of the Tribe by the Interim Council may appeal to the Secretary for a determination of the eligibility of the individual for membership in the Tribe. The Interim Council shall include on the membership roll any such individual that the Secretary determines in such an appeal to be eligible for membership in the Tribe.

TRIBAL CONSTITUTION

SEC. 8. (a) Upon the written request of the Interim Council, the Secretary shall conduct, by secret ballot, an election to adopt a constitution for the Tribe. Such constitution shall be submitted by the Interim Council to the Secretary no later than one year following the date of enactment of this Act. The election shall be held according to section 16 of the Indian Reorganization Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), as amended.

(b) Not later than one hundred and twenty days after the Tribe adopts a tribal constitution, the Secretary shall conduct an election by secret ballot for the purpose of electing tribal officials as provided in the constitution. Such election shall be conducted according to the procedures stated in subsection (a) except to the extent that such procedures conflict with the tribal constitution.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the governing body of the Tribe established under the constitution of the Tribe that is adopted under subsection (a) shall be treated as an Indian tribal government for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, and all our Federal laws of general application to Indians and Indian tribes (including the Act of June 18, 1934, 25 U.S.C. 461 et seq).

REGULATIONS

SEC. 9. The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

REAL PROPERTY

SEC. 10. (a) Real property acquired by or for the Tribe shall be taken by the Secretary in the name of the United States in trust for the benefit of the Tribe.

(b) Any real property taken in trust by the Secretary shall be subject to—

(1) all legal rights and interests in such land held by any person at the time of acquisition of such land by the Secretary, including any lien, mortgage, or previously levied and outstanding State or local tax; and

(2) foreclosure or sale in accordance with the laws of the State of Louisiana pursuant to the terms of any valid obligation in existence at the time of the acquisition of such land by the Secretary; and

(3) any real property transferred pursuant to this Act shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation of any kind.•

S. 47. A bill to provide relief to shrimp fishermen from economic hardship caused by the mandatory use of turtle excluder devices under the Endangered Species Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

TRAWLERS RELIEF AND WORKING LIVELIHOOD ACT

• Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President. I am here today, Mr. President, because my home State of Louisiana will soon be thrust once again into a state of emergency. A perceived threat to endangered or threatened sea turtles has caused Federal lawmakers to restrict shrimp trawling practices by requiring a shrimper's net to be equipped with a turtle excluder device, or TED. A TED allows a turtle to escape in the unlikely event that one becomes entangled in a net. The law requires that all shrimp trawlers put the cage-like device in their nets or face stern civil and criminal penalties. As was evidenced by last summer's events, enforcement of this law has been Draconian. Most of the shrimpers arrested and thrown in jail with drug dealers and murderers during the 1990 shrimping season never even caught a turtle in their nets.

The law is the law. The shrimpers know that. I know that. What I also know is that our shrimp fishermen are drowning in a sea of debt because of the diminished harvest of wild shrimp, and diminished income, when pulling a TED. It is a matter of life or death for our shrimpers. They simply cannot survive under the status quo.

I am not saying that the TEDs regulations should be suspended or repealed. I am not saying that sea turtles should be de-listed from endangered or threatened status because of the exorbitant costs to shrimpers. What I am saying is that something must be done. Something must be done to relieve the severe economic burden the shrimpers alone are bearing. Something must be done to help these hardworking, law-abiding people put food on their tables and pay their bills. Something must be done to ensure that our shrimpers do not suffer the same fate as the endangered sea turtles at the heart of this controversy have suffered in the past. Mr. President, I think the bill I am offering today can do just that.

My bill prohibits the Secretary of Commerce from shortening or otherwise restricting the shrimping season in the Gulf of Mexico and the South Atlantic until 90 days after the Secretary has presented findings to Congress demonstrating the need for additional restrictions. We cannot afford to have the Secretary imposing even more drastic restrictions on law-abiding shrimpers without sufficient proof that such measures are absolutely necessary.

This legislation also provides for a sea turtle conservation tax credit. The tax credit is intended to offset the loss of income by shrimpers using turtle excluder devices. The conservation loss is calculated as 15 percent of the total dollar amount received by a shrimper for the sale of shrimp caught in areas where TEDs are required. The key is that the tax credit is only available to a shrimper who has not been convicted of civil or criminal violations of the Endangered Species Act that involve the failure to use, or improper use of, a TED during that tax year.

The bill also removes criminal penalties for violation of the Federal requirements concerning the use of turtle excluder devices. Mr. President, I was raised to respect the law. My daddy taught me to obey the law even when I didn't agree with it. But Mr. President, the law has never come and taken my livelihood away. The law has never told me I must do something that would threaten my ability to put food on the table for my family. So I can understand, though not condone, the refusal of shrimpers in South Louisiana to obey the Federal regulations on TEDs. It seems to me, Mr. President, that given the desperation of normally law-abiding shrimp fishermen, it would not be just to throw them in jail with murderers and drug dealers. That just adds misery to pain. The stringent civil penalties and fines for violation of the Endangered Species Act are a strong enough deterrent. And for those who are nevertheless moved to violate the TED requirements, little purpose is served by throwing them in jail as well.

The final provision of my bill furthers the intent of the Endangered Species Act to ensure the conservation and recovery of endangered and threatened species, including sea turtles, by directing the Secretary of Commerce to establish and implement a comprehensive sea turtle headstart program. Under the program, endangered and threatened sea turtle eggs are removed from the wild, hatched in captivity, and the young sea turtles are released months later into the wild after the greatest period of vulnerability to predation has passed.

Up to now, everyone has viewed this situation as a direct conflict between shrimper and sea turtle. As a choice between shrimpers feeding their families or turtles bouncing back from near extinction. As a decision on whether our commercial shrimping industry will die off or an endangered species will die off. With this bill, we do not have to choose. With this bill, we can save not one but two endangered species with a single stroke of the legislative pen—sea turtles and shrimpers.•

By Mr. SIMON:

S. 48. A bill to amend the Higher Education Act of 1965 to permit the awarding of minority scholarships, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

MINORITY SCHOLARSHIPS

• Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill that will eliminate the confusion caused by the Department of Education's unfortunate statement regarding minority scholarships.

In what was perhaps the single most harmful and misguided action ever taken by the Education Department, its Office for Civil Rights [OCR] on December 4, 1990, issued a press release announcing a new interpretation of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, effectively banning minority scholarship programs. This was a bureaucratic decision that does not reflect policy statements by Congress, the courts, or prior opinions of OCR. I doubt that there was a single Member of Congress who voted for the Civil Rights Act of 1964 who thought that law could or should ever be used to outlaw scholarships for minority students.

This new OCR opinion was issued without justification, without an evaluation of the effects of the decision, and without consultation with Congress or civil rights experts. The ensuing uproar brought another statement from OCR which seemed to be intended to clarify and perhaps partially reverse the policy, but which only resulted in further confusion.

There should be no need for this legislation, and I am hopeful that it will turn out that we do not need to pass this bill. I have been encouraged by and impressed with Governor Lamar Alexandar, the President's selection for Secretary of Education, and I hope that he will steal my thunder and reverse the Department's movement in this harmful direction.

Nevertheless, I am introducing this bill as a starting point for discussion of the legislative options, if that proves necessary. Under current law it is clear that minority scholarships and other student aid programs to encourage diversity are valid and appropriate ways to promote campus diversity and reverse the effects of past discrimination. But the Department of Education ruling has caused unnecessary confusion for millions of students and thousands of colleges and universities. If the Department's policy requires a legislative response to clarify what the law already says, we must be prepared to act.

MINORITIES AND WOMEN IN HIGHER EDUCATION

Minority enrollment in college lags significantly behind white enrollment. While 38 percent of white high school graduates (aged 18–24) enroll in college, only 28 percent of African Americans and 31 percent of Hispanics enroll. And these figures mask the fact that a much larger percentage of these minorities enroll in two-year programs, rather than traditional 4-year colleges. Furthermore, the rate of minority enrollment has dropped in the past 10 to 15 years.

College completion rates show even more disparity. While African Americans make up 7.9 percent of the enrollment at 4-year colleges, they only receive 5.7 percent of the bachelor's degrees awarded. That's more than a 25 percent drop-off. Hispanics are 3.6 percent of enrollment, but only 2.7 percent of degrees awarded, also 25 percent drop-off.

When you look at particular disciplines, the lack of women and minorities is especially alarming. In science and engineering, according to the Task Force on Women, Minorities, and the Handicapped in Science and Technology, created by Public Law 99-383, African Americans are 12 percent of the general population, but are only 2 percent of employed scientists and engineers. Hispanics comprise 9 percent of the population, but only 2 percent of employed scientists and engineers. White women, 43 percent of our population, are only 10 percent of all scientists and engineers. While the number of women and minorities in science and engineering is increasing—thanks to recruitment and financial aid programs aimed specifically at women and minorities—the number earning advanced degrees continues to lag behind.

A National Academy of Sciences panel reports that the number of science, engineering and technical jobs requiring competence in math will increase 36 percent by the year 2000—but the number of college graduates geared to those types of majors and careers will not meet that demand. The only way to fill that need is to bring more women and minorities into science and engineering, because over the next decade, women and minorities will represent more than two-thirds of the new entrants into the work force.

Another important area where minority participation is crucial, but declining, is in the teaching profession. While any teacher can be a good role model, it is natural for minority students, bombarded with negative racial stereotypes in the mass media, to look for a teacher who looks like them, and who might feel the way they do about being a minority. It is equally important that students who are not minorities have minority teachers to counter those stereotypes. Yet in Illinois, where a third of the students are minorities, only 15 percent of the teachers are minorities. In Chicago, with an almost 25 percent Hispanic student population, less than 6 percent of the teachers are Hispanic. Even these numbers are deceptive, however. When you again look at particular academic areas, the numbers are more disturbing. In Illinois—according to the State Board of Education's report for the 1986–87 school year—while nearly 23 percent of the students are African American, only 8 percent of the science teachers and 7 percent of the social studies teachers are African American. Furthermore, there is not one Hispanic physics teacher in all of Illinois, and only one in every 157 math teachers is Hispanic. These numbers are shocking.

THE IMPORTANCE OF MINORITY SCHOLARSHIPS

Minority scholarships are the only door many young people have to higher education. Dr. Donald Stewart, president of the college board, testified that, "[u]nquestionably, one of the reasons for the success achieved with regard to minorities in higher education has been the growing availability of minority scholarships at institutions that are predominantly white. We have found that nearly 700 colleges and universities nationwide have scholarships designated for minorities." The number of colleges considering race when awarding non-need-based scholarships has increased 60 percent in the past 4 years.

If the statement in the OCR press release stands, colleges and universities, particularly the most expensive schools, will become white bastions, further segregating higher education on the basis of race and income. A St. Louis Post-Dispatch survey of seven schools in Illinois and Missouri found minority scholarship to be an important part of the overall student aid programs, affecting hundreds, perhaps thousands, of students at just those few schools. The largest program cited, at the University of Illinois, awards $5 million a year to outstanding African American, Hispanic, and American Indian students. I will ask that the article and chart be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

More than wrongfully questioning the legality of these programs, the OCR press release—especially combined with other statements from the administration—sends the message that the Federal Government hopes to actively discourage colleges and universities from increasing minority enrollment and promoting diversity on their campuses. Indeed, even though the press release was not an official ruling of any sort, much damage has already been done. According to an article in the most recent edition of the Chronicle of Higher Education, January 9, 1991—

> Educators say the controversy over the legality of minority scholarships has seriously damaged higher education. Regardless of how the legal issue is resolved, they predict that * * * [m]any minority students, thinking money for their education has been lost, will be discouraged from applying to college.

The confusion caused by this controversy has caused many financial aid officers to put their plans on hold. At this time when millions of students are applying for college and for financial aid, it is irresponsible to needlessly dash the hopes and opportunities of minority youth.

As a nation, we cannot afford to lose the progress we have made with women and minorities in higher education. I am hopeful that the Department will reverse its statement and take actions to restore confidence in the student aid system. But if legislation proves necessary to restore minority scholarship programs, this bill is a starting point.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill, and the article and chart from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 48

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MINORITY SCHOLARSHIPS.

Title 12 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1141 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 1214. MINORITY SCHOLARSHIPS.

"Nothing in this Act or any other Act shall be construed to prohibit any eligible institution, including an institution of higher education, from awarding or administering minority scholarships or other scholarships or awards designed to promote diversity or remedy the effects of past discrimination, regardless of the source of funding.".

SCHOLARSHIP DEBATE HAS REGIONAL IMPACT

(By Virginia Hick)

Rose Thomas, 48, says she "loved school" when she was young, but her family was poor and could barely support her through high school. One of 11 children, Thomas went to work instead of college.

But Thomas' daughter, Venus Harry, is going to St. Louis University, thanks to a scholarship program aimed at talented black students.

Harry will get to finish college under the Ernest Calloway Scholarship. But that program and others like it across the country are in the cross hairs of the Department of Education, which says such programs violate civil rights laws and should be changed.

After the department's explanation of its position at a press conference Dec. 12 prompted a furor, the department backtracked to a degree, saying it would approve of minority scholarships funded by private donations. But it contended that universities receiving federal funds should not use their operating funds to back such scholarships.

A Post-Dispatch survey of colleges in the region shows that millions of dollars in programs affecting hundreds of students are vulnerable, because they are partly supported by university funds.

They range from relatively modest programs like one at the University of Missouri at St. Louis—worth $800 for six students each year—to the $5 million Presidential Awards program at the University of Illinois, which serves 1,700 minority scholars.

The good news for those programs is that Education Department officials have offered a four-year phase-in period, so that present recipients like Harry will not be affected.

That also gives legislators time to intercede. Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., strongly supports minority scholarships and predicts that legislation will be introduced in January to prevent the change from taking effect.

Black students are watching the political maneuvering with dismay and defensiveness.

"It's not like they're just giving it to us," Harry said. "It was not easy to get at all. We had to go through two interviews, and our grades had to be really good. I have seen scholarships for boys, for veterans—nobody is saying anything about those."

Harry, a freshman and a graduate of Ritenour High school, said she had applied for a half-dozen scholarships besides the Calloway. She was offered athletic scholarships to play basketball at Mississippi State and at UMSL. But the Calloway was her only academic scholarship.

She wonders if one of the other scholarships she applied for had hidden biases against members of racial minorities.

"I really do think that, depending on where a scholarship is coming from, some of them are biased behind closed doors," Harry said. "It looks on the up-and-up on the outside. They supposedly went through your credentials. But I don't think it went that way."

Others, including blacks, express misgivings about scholarships aimed at minorities. With the money comes a stigma, some believe.

Delores Townsend has mixed feelings about her scholarship. Townsend, 40, has been going to college in several cities off and on since 1971. She often had to drop out for a semester or two, to make enough money to continue. She has used food stamps, financial aid, part-time and full-time jobs to support herself and her four children. Two of her children are in college now, too.

For her last semester of undergraduate work, Townsend received the first Marion Oldham Scholarship, which is named after the former long-time University of Missouri curator. The scholarship was established by former UMSL Chancellor Marguerite Ross Barnett.

"I appreciated it," Townsend said. "I needed the money. But I would have finished anyway. It's sort of like food stamps—stereotypically associated with blacks. You need them. But you hate to take them.

"As a black student, you can feel you're good at something. But there's always this lingering doubt: Was it 'good' for a black person or 'good' for anybody? Sometimes that bothers me.

"I think when you separate money like that, you're saying,'We will give this to you, stepchild, poor pitiful thing.' Does that carry over to the way they think when they grade you?"

Sharifah Sims of East St. Louis is a senior at the University of Missouri at Columbia. She sees scholarships for minorities as a way of making life more fair.

"They've been giving scholarships to Irish Catholics, the DAR [Daughters of the American Revolution]. I don't fit those categories; I can't apply for those." She is a recipient of the George C. Brooks minority scholarship.

The way I understand it, these programs are to give us a chance to catch up, where we had been legally discriminated against for so many years," Sims said.

K.C. Morrison, vice provost for minority affairs at Mizzou, said the university appeared to be exempt from the ban on publicly funded scholarships, because it has been cited for past discrimination.

Michael Middleton, a Mizzou law professor and a former Department of Education official, sees a change in the government's approach.

"The law says that the use of race is inappropriate where there has not been prior discrimination, "Middleton said. In the past, the department had interpreted it to mean that logically, nearly every predominantly white institution would fall under the definition of past discrimination, he said.

Now the department is saying, in effect, that institutions must prove that they had discriminated in the past or they will lose federal funds.

"That says to me if I'm a college official, 'Why stick my neck out?'" Middleton said. "The message they're sending is extremely discouraging."

But college officials and students say that such scholarships hold advantages for the schools—and for society as well.

"These scholarships are an investment," Sims said. "I see my friends, who made good grades like I did, have to stay at home and work 40 hours a week while they go to school. Without help, they will be in school until I don't know when. You hear about Japan . . . and Germany burning us in economic competition—they're investing in their college student."

College officials say the investments are paying off. Washington University awards 10 academic scholarships a year to black students, in addition to 600 academic scholarships open to the general population.

These scholarships are offered to minority students and contain at least some university funds. According to the Department of Education's latest policy announcement, they would have to be changed or the sponsoring university would lose federal funds. The policy is still under discussion. All of the universities and colleges mentioned and the state of Illinois also offer scholarship programs to students according to academic merit, financial need or other criteria that are not based on race.

Minorities and women are represented among the general academic scholarships, said Dennis Martin, director of financial aid and assistant provost.

But the university felt the need for an additional program for black students. The scholarship attracts black students and creates a "multiethnic experiences for all students," Martin said.

The program has brought the university "10 wonderful students" in the program and "an increase in the number of black applicants," Martin said. "Many are well-served by regular financial aid and come even if they don't get a scholarship."

The University of Illinois has had a similar experience on a larger scale. The President's Award program there offers scholarships to outstanding black, Hispanic and American Indian students—a total of $5 million, said Robert W. Resek, vice president for academic affairs.

> Blacks and Hispancs still are under-represented on campus. Resek said. But those populations are "growing significantly" and not just in the upper echelon. "These programs have created a foundation that makes it comfortable for these students to attend the university," Resek said.•

By Mr. STEVENS (for himself and Mr. TURKOWSKI):

S. 49. A bill to establish an Ocean and Coastal Resources Enhancement Fund and a Coastal Zone Impact Assistance Fund, to require the Secretary of Commerce to provide States and local governments with block grants from moneys in the funds, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

OCEAN AND COASTAL RESOURCES ENHANCEMENT ACT

• Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today I introduce S. 49, the Ocean and Coastal Resources Enhancement Act. The measure, which is similar to legislation I introduced in the mideighties, is designed to give coastal states and communities the tools they need to minimize the impacts energy development can bring coastal areas. The bill directs the Secretary of Commerce to distribute 4½ percent of all OCS revenues to coastal areas impacted by a wide spectrum of energy development ranging from refineries to pipelines. All coastal areas would be eligible including the Great Lakes States.

The bill uses many of the concepts established in the Coastal Zone Management Act, and is intended to complement the provisions of that Act. For States and local governments directly impacted by OCS leasing activities, the Commerce Department would share one-third of OCS revenues derived off the coast of that particular state. The Secretary of Commerce would pass half the sum to the States and half to local governments.

The funds would be used to help state and local governments participate meaningfully in the permitting process. The moneys would also enable them to undertake their own projects to enhance and protect the environment. In addition, local governments most directly impacted by energy development could use their funds to increase police and fire protection, sewer and water facilities, and provide needed government services for the increased population that energy development can bring.

Mr. President, twice the Senate approved similar legislation, but unfortunately because of administration opposition, we were not successful in getting it enacted into law. When he announced his decision on OCS development off the coasts of California and Florida, President Bush hinted that his Administrtion might support a revenue sharing concept. I look forward to working with the administration to develop a fiscally responsible bill that addresses the concerns of coastal states and communities. •

By Mr. SYMMS (for himself, Mr. BOREN, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. BURNS):

S. 50. A bill to ensure that agencies establish the appropriate procedures for assessing whether or not regulation may result in the taking of private property, so as to avoid such where possible; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

PRIVATE PROPERTY RIGHTS ACT

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, today, I join with the senior Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. BOREN, and Messrs. GRASSLEY, HEFLIN, PRYOR, THURMOND, NICKLES, CRAIG, HATCH, BURNS, HELMS, and WALLOP in introducing the Private Property Rights Act of 1991.

This bill establishes procedural safeguards to better protect one of the basic civil rights guaranteed by the Bill of Rights: The right to own private property free from the threat of it being taken by government for public use without just compensation. We have volumes of law in America designed to prevent government from infringing on most of our civil rights. Free speech, assembly, worship—these are all protected under various statutes. But basic private property rights currently have little or no statutory protection.

During America's first 200 years, the need for such protection of private property was not as evident as it is today. There are two reasons for this: First, the concept of private property is so intrinsic to our society that government has, in the past, been somewhat restrained purely through societal conscience, and second, the courts have left the issue of what is and is not an infringement on private property somewhat vague—at least until recently.

But now, as Robert Meltz, an attorney-adviser with the Congressional Research Service pointed out in a Federal Bar Journal article in February of last year,

> Looking back, it seems so obvious. Relentless growth of population and industry beget increasing environmental impact, which begets ever more pervasive regulation of property use, which begets collision with constitutional property rights. In particular, it was inevitable that the "taking issue" should have emerged from the constitutional wings and moved to center stage, as it has now done.

Furthermore, the Supreme Court has recently spoken very clearly about the fundamental principles that prevent government from usurping private property from individuals. It was these cases, First English Evangelical Lutheran Church of Glendale versus County of Los Angeles and Nollan versus California Coastal Commission that prompted another CRS legal analyst to identify "a court trend supporting increased protection of private property against government controls."

Mr. Mark Pollot, an attorney and former official in the Natural Resources Division of the Department of Justice, recently wrote this about the current status of regulatory infringement on private property in the United States:

> [In 1987] there was approximately $1 billion in outstanding takings claims against the United States Government in one section of one division of the Justice Department alone. This figure did not account for previous claims which were resolved by settlement or otherwise. It did not account for claims which may not have reached the point of litigation. It did not account for potential future claims, nor did it consider the interest that would have to be paid for successful claims which even at a simple rate of legal interest could be staggering. Some claims have been around for years. (And, of course, since the requirement is just compensation, the courts have held that simple interest at the "legal" rate is not necessarily acceptable.) Furthermore, these figures do not account for the administrative and litigation costs the government spends just to assess these claims, much less to litigate them. The likelihood that more claims will be successfully brought was increased by the Supreme Court's 1987 decisions in Nollan, First English, and even Keystone. That this increased risk was actual has been shown by recent state and federal takings cases in lower courts.
> In California, for example, approximately one-half of the takings claims which have reached the intermediate appeals courts since 1987 have resulted in takings rulings favoring the property owner, a remarkable state of affairs in California. Similarly, in other states, like Florida, takings claims have been upheld in areas where they would not have been in the last 50 or more years. See, e.g., Florida Department of Agriculture versus Midflorida Growers Inc.
> At the federal level, for example, even very recently, the United States Claims Court has issued three decisions finding regulatory takings in the wetlands regulation and mining contexts (Whitney Benefits, Loveladies Harbor, and Florida Rock). Three other wetlands cases in the Claims Court have rejected claims by the United States that its wetlands regulations cannot cause takings (Formanek, Ciampetti, and Beure-Co.). In the Whitney Benefits case, the award was for approximately $60 million plus interest, which, because of the time involved, will be considerable [possibly in excess of $100 million itself]. Both the risk that a takings will be found and the potential for a broad amount of liability have been shown by post-1987 experience to be on the increase.

Frankly, I was shocked by what Mr. Pollot had to say. Obviously there is a virus eating away at American freedoms. The simple fact is that the private property that Americans own is coming under increasing control by the Government.

Take, for example, the case of John Pozsgai from Morrisville, PA, a Hungarian immigrant and self-employed mechanic. John decided to exercise a right that had been denied him in Hungary, and in 1987, he purchased a few acres next to his mechanic's shop. The acreage had been used for 30 years as an illegal dump, filled with old tires and rusted auto bodies. He removed the refuse, and replaced it with clean fill in order to improve the appearance "and value" of his property.

John is now serving a portion of his 3-year prison sentence, while his family is strapped by a $200,000 fine. His crime? That garbage dump that he cleaned up was found to be a "wetland", and, by filling in the area with clean dirt without a permit from the U.S. Government, he violated Clean Water Act regulations.

This is what Mr. Pozsgai had to say in his defense: "We thought this was a free country here—you buy a piece of land; you use it."

Unfortuntely, John Pozsgai's case is not isolated. We are facing a number of very similar cases in Idaho, where property owners are being told that their land really isn't theirs because the Federal Government has decided it "has an interest in it." And it isn't just land, either. Private property has been defined to include your house, your car, your rifle, your dog, your marketplace, your clientele, and yes, even your innovative thoughts and ideas. All of these are your private property—things that our Constitution prohibits the Government from denying you (along with life and liberty) without due process. That document also declares that your private property should not be "taken for public use without just compensation." And yet, on nearly every front, we see government imposing regulations that "deny" people their property, from the elderly couple whose home is devalued by land use controls, to the small businessman whose shop is closed down for failures in government paperwork and reporting.

Supposedly, there is a system of checks and balances established to keep the Federal Government in line—if constitutional rights are being denied, the courts should recognize it and demand compensation. But as John Pozsgai found out early on, the cost of a decent attorney is $30,000 to $40,000 up front. Can we ask Americans to spend what is 1, maybe 2 years entire salary, just to defend their basic constitutional rights.

Mr. President, the time has come for perestroika in America. Private property is an essential part of America's strength. The Soviet Union realizes this, Eastern Europe realizes this. The world is coming to understand this. So why don't we, in America, do something to preserve our private property heritiage.

Well, we intend to. Working with the White House Counsel, the President's Council on Competitiveness, and the Justice Department, we have drafted the Private Property Rights Act of 1991. The bill has won strong support from grassroots constituencies: from farmers, ranchers, home builders, small businessmen, realtors and even county commissioners (who see an attack on private property as an attack on their revenue base.

The Private Property Rights Act of 1991 forces the Government to respect private property, and requires that regulations be assessed for their potential to deny such rights. The goal of these assessments would be to redirect the regulation so as to accomplish its goal while imposing on private property to the smallest degree possible. And if such an imposition is unavoidable, then the constitutionally required "just compensation" must be considered in the Agency's budget.

Private property ownership is stewardship. And strengthening America's commitment to private property can only enhance that stewardship. As Alexander Hamilton described it in the Federalist:

> It is a general principle of human nature, that a man will be interested in what ever he possesses, in proportion to the firmness or precariousness of the tenure by which he holds it; will be less attached to what he holds by a momentary or uncertain title, than to what he enjoys by a durable or certain title; and, of course, will be willing to risk more for the sake of the one, than for the sake of the other.

Hamilton's point should not be lost today. If we wish people to care for their property, to sacrifice for the environment, to forego immediate self-interest for longer-term interests shared with society, then we cannot abandon the private property incentives that justify that sacrifice.

Mr. President, I ask that a letter further explaining the details of this legislation by the Assistant Attorney General for Natural Resources, a letter from 22 State and national organizations endorsing the Private Property Rights Act, a letter from a Georgia homebuilder's association, one from "Stop Taking Our Property"—an Indiana-based organization, a resolution adopted by the Greater Yellowstone Association of Conservation Districts, and the text of the bill appear in the RECORD immediately after my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Private Property Rights Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act:

(1) The term "agency" means all executive branch agencies which engage in activity with the potential for taking private property, including any military department of the United States Government, any United States Government corporation, United States Government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the Executive Branch of the United States Government.

(2) The term "taking of private property" means an activity wherein private property is taken such that compensation to the owner of that property is required by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 3. PROTECTION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY.

No regulation promulgated after the date of enactment of this Act by any agency shall become effective until the issuing agency is certified by the Attorney General to be in compliance with Executive Order 12630 or similar procedures to assess the potential for the taking of private property in the course of Federal regulatory activity, with the goal of minimizing such where possible.

SEC. 4. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

(a) Judicial review of actions taken pursuant to this Act shall be limited to whether the Attorney General has certified the issuing agency as in compliance with Executive Order 12630 or similar procedures, such review to be permitted in the same forum and at the same time as the issued regulations are otherwise subject to judicial review. Only persons adversely affected or grieved by agency action shall have standing to challenge that action as contrary to this Act. In no event shall such review include any issue for which the United States Claims Court has jurisdiction.

(b) Nothing in this section shall affect any otherwise available judicial review of agency action.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES DIVISION,
Washington, DC, October 1, 1990.

Hon STEVE SYMMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SYMMS: I am writing in response to your letter of July 30, 1990, regarding your amendment to S. 2830. The Vice President's Council on Competitiveness and the affected agencies, including the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Interior, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and the Environmental Protection Agency, have reviewed this issue and fully support the objectives of your amendment.

We applaud your initiative in seeking statutory endorsement for Executive Order 12630, which seeks to ensure that federal agencies consider the impacts which their policies might have on private property rights. The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution requires that the federal government pay just compensation for taking private property. This requirement reflects an important commitment to private property, which agencies should heed.

The Administration is prepared fully to support your amendment, provided that two changes are made. First, we believe that the amendment should be extended to include all federal agencies subject to the Executive Order. Second, the availability and scope of judicial review pursuant to the amendment should be clarified in order to avoid potentially creating extensive, burdensome new litigation that would clog the courts. These changes are explained more fully in the attached letter, which sets forth our views in greater detail.

Sincerely,

RICHARD B. STEWART,
Assistant Attorney General.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
LAND AND NATURAL RESOURCES DIVISON,
Washington, DC, October 1, 1990
Hon. STEVE SYMMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SYMMS: Thank you for your letter of July 30, 1990, asking the Department to respond to certain comments made regarding your amendment to S. 2830, relating to protection of private property. In addition, you have asked for the Department's position on this amendment.

As the Justice Department official designated by the Attorney General to assure implementation compliance with Executive Order 12630, which seeks to ensure that federal agencies consider the impacts which their policies might have on private property rights, I fully support the Order's provisions and compliance with it throughout the Executive Branch. The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution requires that the federal government pay just compensation for taking private property. This requirement reflects an important commitment to private property, which agencies should heed. Also, fiscal accountability dictates that potential government liability for payment of compensation should be considered before choosing an action which may result in a taking. Agencies should carefully consider alternatives to proposed actions that risk taking private property. The Executive Order is designed to implement these principles.

We support and encourage your efforts to obtain congressional endorsement of the goal of the Executive Order. The Council on Competitiveness and all of the affected agencies have also reviewed this issue and support the objectives of your amendment. We stand willing to work with you and other members of Congress to refine the amendment where necessary to ensure that it carefully, specifically, and effectively assures that due consideration is given to consequences of governmental action which may impact on private property rights, without improperly infringing on the constitutional prerogatives of the President to manage the Executive Branch or the statutory responsibilities of government agencies.

We strongly object to any suggestion that a choice must be made between protecting private property rights, and protecting public health and welfare. Neither the Fifth Amendment, nor the Executive Order requires such a choice. The Fifth Amendment provides, simply: "[N]or shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation."

It presumes that the action which is said to have taken the property is lawful and authorized. Nothing in its terms prevents any agency from promulgating regulations to protect health, welfare or the environment. Indeed, the Executive Order assumes that agencies will, on occasion, be required to carry out lawful and authorized responsibilities which have the effect of taking private property. Its goal is to: ". . . ensure that government actions are undertaken on a well-reasoned basis with due regard for fiscal accountability, for the financial impact of the obligations imposed on the Federal government by the Just Compensation Clause of the Fifth Amendment . . ."

The Order further states that agencies "should account in decision making for those takings that are necessitated by statutory mandate," E.O. §1(b), and "need only address takings implications under the Order to the extent permitted by law."

When, in the course of fulfilling its mission, an agency's action effects a taking of private property payment to the property owner is made from the Treasury.[1] Thus, all taxpayers share in this cost. The Executive Order directs agencies to consider such potential costs before they take action and look carefully at alternative actions to avoid unnecessary infringments on individual rights in private property. This analysis is designed to introduce into agency decisionmaking the broader government-wide concerns that might otherwise be overlooked. It is not designed to negate or supersede an agency's statutory responsibilities.

With these basic principles in mind, we offer the following comments on objections to your proposal.

I. OPERATION OF THE AMENDMENT

A. Scope

We do not understand the proposed language as codifying all of the provisions of E.O. 12630 or the Attorney General's Guidelines. Specifically, the amendment provides that "[n]o regulation promulgated after the date of enactment of this Act by . . . the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Army, or the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency . . . ." The Executive Order, in contrast, applies to proposed federal legislation, comments on proposed federal legislation, other federal policy statements, and other proposed federal actions, as well as federal regulations. See E.O. 12630 §2.

In addition, this amendment applies to only four executive branch agencies, while the Executive Order applies to many more: "[E]cept as provided in Section 2 of the Executive Order and Section II(b) herein, to any executive department, agency, or military department of the United States Government, and to any United States Government corporation, United States Government controlled corporation, or other esablishment in the Executive Branch of the United States Government other than those entities defined as "independent regulatory agencies" in 44 U.S.C. §3502(10).

Attorney General's Guidelines for the Evaluation of Risk and Avoidance of Unanticipated Takings §III [hereinafter Guidelines].

Recent judicial decisions holding that "regulatory" takings occurred, involved programs administered by three of the four named agencies. See e.q., United Nuclear Corporation v. United States, No. 89-1727 (Fed. Cir.) (slip. op., Aug. 24, 1990); (cancellation of leases constitutes a taking); Whitney Benefits v. United States, 20 Cl. Ct. 324 (1990) (prohibition of surface mining in an alluvall valley floor creates compensable taking), appeal pending, No.——, Fed. Cir., Loveladies v. United States, No. 243-83L (July 23, 1990) (denial of 33 U.S.C. §1344 permit found to be a taking), and Florida Rock v. United States, No. 266-82L (July 23, 1990) (denial of 33 U.S.C. §1344 permit found to be a taking). The federal program under 33 U.S.C. §1344, of course, involves both the Corps of Engineers and the Environemtnal Protection Agency. It is noteworthy that the monetary judgments against the United States in those cases total in excess of $120 million dollars.[2]

The Administration believes, however, that the application of the amendment must be expanded to all executive branch agencies which engage in activity with potential "takings" implications. Such a change in scope would not alter our observation that the bill is not a codification of the existing Executive Order.

B. The Executive Order's Requirements and The Amendment

It has been suggested that this amendment goes beyond the Executive Order by adding a new requirement that the Department of Justice "certify" agency compliance with the Executive Order. Such a suggestion demonstrates a misunderstanding of how the Executive Order has operated for the past two years.

Under E.O. 12630, both the Director of the Office of Mangement and Budget (OMB) and the Attorney General have implementation responsibilities. On June 30, 1988 and after consultation with affected Executive Branch agencies and OMB, the Attorney General (pursuant to §1(c), EO 12530) issued government-wide guidelines ("Guidelines") setting a basic framework for implementing the order. Both the Order (§5(e)(2)) and the Guideline (§VI (D)) encourage development of agency-specific guidance beyond those issued by the Attorney General. Informed an agency's particular internal procedures and program portfolio with the Order's obligations.

Under the Executive Order, the Attorney General, in close consultation with individual agencies, may promulgate these supplemental guidelines. As a practical matter, this process involves an agency developing its proposed supplemental guidelines, followed by the Attorney General's review and approval.

Development of supplemental guidelines requires an inventory of an agency's responsibilities, including promulgation of regulations, which affect, or may affect, the use or value of private property. This inventory determines the content of the agency's supplemental guidelines. Program elements having no takings risks can be excluded from further analysis. Those elements prone to takings challenges remain subject to completion of takings implication assessments (TIA) for particular policies or actions. Implementation of the Order is accordingly streamlined. In accordance with this strategy of focusing administrative attention on matters of special concern, supplemental guidelines are vital to an effective E.O. 12630 process. An agency which does not seek to develop supplemental guidelines remains subject to those issued by the Attorney General.

The Attorney General has already approved supplemental guidelines for the Departments of the Army, Commerce, Housing and Urban Development, Interior, Justice and for the Agencies of the Small Business Administration and National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Active consultations are now underway with other agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency and the Departments of Health and Human Services, Labor, and Agriculture.

We understand the language in your proposal, referring to certification by the Attorney General, is designed to be consistent with the current process, and thus contemplates issuance by the Attorney General of supplemental guidelines for an agency or determination that an agency has elected to follow the government-wide guidelines. However, your proposal might be amended to make this intent more explicit.

[1] Whether a particular regulation or regulatory action results in a constitutionally compensable taking of private property depends on the nature of the regulation and the specific factual circumstances of the case. See e.g., Keystone Bituminous Coal Assn v. DeBenedictis, 480 U.S. 470 (1987); see also Kaiser Aetna v. United States, 444 U.S. 164 (1979).

[2] Our dicussion of these decisions should in no way be construed as a change in the Department's legal position in each case.

Moreover, it is also inaccurate to suggest that this proposal would require that each regulatory action must be reviewed by the Attorney General for compliance with the guidelines. The specific language of the amendment calls for the "issuing agency", not each specific regulation, to be "certified" by the Attorney General for compliance with the Executive Order. This focus on the agency process is consistent with current practice under the Executive Order.

Neither your amendment nor the Executive Order requires that the Attorney General review and approve each TIA that an agency performs in accordance with its supplemental guidelines. As outlined above, each agency may develop generic supplemental guidelines which govern its entire program inventory, or it may simply follow the Attorney General's guidelines. The agency must perform a TIA for each proposed set of regulations which are not excluded in the supplemental guidelines, or the Attorney General's guidelines. Specific analyses performed pursuant to these guidelines are not "certified" by the Attorney General. On occasion, this Department is informally consulted by the agency conducting these analysis for information on current applicable case law.

Moreover, by including the language "Executive Order 12630 or similar procedures" your amendment makes clear that its coverage is limited to agency procedures, not the substantive result in a particular case. Accordingly, nothing in the amendment would support a suggestion that review of procedures includes review of particular substantive decisions, and so the role of the Attorney General remains as it is under Executive Order.

Finally, the phrase "or similar procedures" has no effect on the authority of the Attorney General. Clearly, this phrase modifies the phrase "Executive Order", thus indicating that these other procedures refer to those that might be issued by the President in the future to modify the Executive Order, not to any action by the Attorney General.

II. ANALYSIS OF CRITICISMS OF THE AMENDMENT

A. Need for Takings Review

It has been suggested that this amendment is unnecessary because the Claims Court provides as adequate remedy for vindication of private property rights taken through governmental action, that most claims stating that agency action will result in a constitutional taking are overblown and unsuccessful in any event, and that agencies with special missions such as protection of the environment and public health should not be required to deal with this issue.

Several responses are appropriate. the amendment, like the Executive Order, is not designed to supersede or prejudge possible takings remedies available in the Claims Court, nor do either the amendment or the Executive Order imply that particular agency actions will result in compensable takings. To suggest, however, that sensitivity to Fifth Amendment rights is "someone else's job" incorrectly implies that a congressional mandate to a particular federal agency to carry out a particular mission precludes that agency from considering anything else, including the potential Constitutional consequences of its action. The fact that only a minority of "takings" claims are successfully litigated is hardly a basis for objecting to legislation which might serve to minimize even that minority of claims. Indeed, the function of the "takings" clause is to assure that burdens placed on individuals which, in fairness and justice should be borne by society at large, are in fact borne by the latter. See Armstrong v. United States, 364 U.S. 40, 49 (1960). Before this burden is shifted to taxpayers generally, an agency should carefully consider whether the imposition of any such burden is necessary and whether less burdensome alternatives exist. Such a planning process is designed to encourage consideration of regulatory alternatives which meet statutory goals or requirements but do not unnecessarily infringe on individual rights in private property and increase taxpayer burdens.

B. Alleged Effects on Agency Mandates and Enforcement

It is suggested that this proposal would add a bureaucratic roadblock to executive enforcement of some laws. This is incorrect. The plain language of your amendment limits its application to regulations, not enforcement actions. This is consistent with the Executive Order, as interpreted by the Attorney General's Guidelines, which does not cover individual enforcement actions, e.g., "[p]olicies and actions taken in furtherance of pending or immiment litigation . . . (and) . . . judicial and administrative adjudicatory actions brought pursuant to federal law seeking penalties, collection of debts, or the like." E.O. 12630, § II(B)(9).

Moreover, the amendment does not preclude an agency from meeting its statutory obligations, including enforcement responsibilities. In fact, by including the phrase, "in the course of federal regulatory activity", the amendment recognizes the ongoing statutory responsibilites of each agency, and preserves them. This is consistent with the Executive Order, which expressly notes that agencies "should account in decision making for those takings that are necessitated by statutory mandate," E.O. § 1(b), and "need only address takings implications under the Order to the extent permitted by law." E.O. § 5(b).

For similar reasons, it is inaccurate to suggest that this proposal would afford the Office of Management and Budget "yet another basis" to challenge agency performance of their statutory responsibilities by creating an "additional bureaucratic roadblock." As noted above, OMB has been and continues to be involved in accepting and evaluating information submitted in connection with an agency's takings assessments. This includes submitting information to OMB regarding takings claims and awards, and submitting to OMB along with proposed regulatory actions information on potential takings implications of such actions. See E.O. § 5(b), (c), (d), and (e)(1). To our knowledge, this process, which would not be affected by your proposed amendment, has never resulted in any obstruction of any agency's performance of its statutory responsibilities. In short, nothing in the amendment you have proposed would create additional burdens for agencies currently complying with the Executive Order. Because the amendment does not alter the current involvement of OMB in regulatory review, it would be inaccurate to suggest that this amendment somehow reassigns OMB functions to the Department of Justice, or any other agency.

It would also be incorrect to suggest that this amendment effectively blocks agency action because it renders a regulation ineffective until the issuing agency complies with the Executive Order or otherwise precludes an agency from promulgating a regulation. The limited remedy provided under the amendment is the deferral of implementation of regulations until supplemental guidelines are approved. The simple solution to avoiding delay in the effective date of the regulation is, as many agencies have already done, to secure approved supplemental guidelines. We stand ready to assist this process in an expeditious manner.

C. Effect on Executive Prerogatives

It has been suggested that this amendment would create an unwarranted and unprecedented legislative intrusion into executive branch functions. We might have concerns about this issue, if your amendment was not so carefully drafted to assure that the Executive Branch can utilize those procedures it finds suitable, now and in the future; use of the language "Executive Order or similar procedures" recognizes that the President retains his authority to change the Executive Order and the Attorney General retains the discretion to modify the guidelines. It might be appropriate to make this point completely free from doubt, and we are prepared to work with you in this regard.

D. Judicial Review

The amendment does not expressly provide for judicial review of either the procedures governing takings assessments or the assessments themselves.[3] The Executive Order expressly states that no such review is available, noting that these procedures do not: "create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by a party against the United States, its agencies, its officers, or any person."
See E.O. § 6.

Nonetheless, questions have been raised regarding whether, by referencing the Executive Order in legislation, certain decisions become judicially reviewable action, i.e., an agency's supplemental guidelines, the Attorney General's approval of such supplemental guidelines, and the policy or decision-specific takings assessments performed by the agency pursuant to those guidelines.

In order for the Administration to support this amendment the availability and extent of judicial review must be clarified. Specifically, the amendment must specify that such review be limited to the fact of whether or not the Attorney General has certified supplemental guidelines for the issuing agency. Neither the Attorney General's decision whether or not to issue such certification nor an agency or department's compliance with such guidelines shall be subject to review. Of course, notwithstanding Section 6 of the Executive Order, the individual takings analysis or other documents developed by a department or agency pursuant to applicable guidelines would be part of the administrative record and would, in accordance with generally applicable principles of administrative review, be considered by a reviewing court in deciding whether agency action complies with the requirements of other applicable statutes, including the Administrative Procedure Act.

This review should be provided in a way which does not create additional undue delay in the promulgation or implementation of programs. To that end, such review should take place in the forum which might otherwise have review of the substantive decision itself (i.e., the promulgation of regulations). Review of whether certification occurred would take place simultaneously with the underlying review of the regulations, in strict accordance with the relevant statutory provisions governing such review. We also believe that review should be limited to persons whose property is potentially threatened by a taking.

[3] Whether or not a particular agency action constitutes a taking would, of course, be reviewable in the Claims Court, as is the case today.

Such review of the agency action should not be a forum for determining whether a "taking" occurred or, if so, what compensation is due. That forum already exists in the Claims Court. Finally, judicial review of the procedural validity of the agency TIA should have no effect whatsoever on a subsequent action in the Claims Court alleging that a specific agency action resulted in a taking.[4]

Finally, your amendment by its terms applies to regulations "promulgated after the date of enactment of this Act" thus making it clear that regulations currently in effect are neither subject to a takings assessment nor subject to judicial review based upon an alleged failure to conduct such an assessment. This is a sound provision because no administrative record would exist upon which judicial review could focus. By applying this provision prospectively, agencies are afforded the opportunity as they develop regulations, to conduct taking assessments, and develop adminstrative records of their decisions. In contrast, for regulations issued after the effective date of this amendment, an administrative record containing the takings assessment would be developed, and review of that record would be subject to general principles of administrative review.

III. CONCLUSION

In conclusion, the Administration fully supports the principles and procedures enunciated in Executive Order 12630. With the changes we have noted above, the proposed amendment you offered embodies the fundamental principles expressed in that Executive Order, and is carefully crafted to address a very specific and important concern: the need to recognize in the course of developing regulations, the impact which those regulations might have on private property rights. By recognizing the need to consider the effect of regulatory actions on private property, and the possibility that such actions may effect a taking of private property, the amendment ensures that agencies will attempt, in carrying out their statutory functions, to prevent unnecessary takings, thereby protecting rights of individuals in private property, reducing the fiscal burden on all taxpayers from unnecessary takings and related litigation, while protecting the environment as well.

We have an excellent relationship with a broad range of government agencies, assisting in the implementation of Executive Order 12630 and the principles which undergird it. We are confident that relationship would continue with the amendment which, as we understand it, shares those principles. Thus, with the addition of these requested changes, we support the amendment and look forward to working with you toward achieving those goals.

Sincerely,

RICHARD B. STEWART,
Assistant Attorney General.

AN OPEN LETTER OF MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE

January 13, 1991.

DEAR SENATOR: We write to urge you to join Senator Symms, Senator Boren, and others as a cosponsor of legislation extremely important to our members and to your constituents: S. 50, the Private Property Rights Act of 1991.

This bill will ensure that impacts on private property rights is duly considered in the federal agencies' regulatory activities. It in no way limits federal agencies' authority to regulate or to fulfill any legislative mandate. However, the bill will require federal decision makers to assess the potential impact of their regulatory actions on private property rights and to minimize transgression of private rights whenever possible. Compliance with this act will help avoid inadvertent "takings" of constitutionally guaranteed rights and thus reduce the federal government's financial liability for such compensable "takings."

The Private Property Rights Act of 1991 will give statutory endorsement to procedures like those stipulated in Executive Order #12630. After a careful review by the Department of Justice, the Administration (including the President's Council on Competitiveness, the EPA, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and the USDA) "strongly supports" this legislation.

Our organizations have been staunch defenders of private property rights which are the foundation of U.S. agricultural production and the individual liberties which we all enjoy. Your past leadership in protecting those rights is greatly appreciated. The Private Property Rights Act of 1991 provides a strategic method for balancing government's necessary action and protecting private rights.

Please communicate your support for this important legislation by enlisting as a cosponsor as soon as possible. You may contact Trent in Senator Symms' office (4-6142), or Dan in Senator Boren's office (4-4732) for more information.

Sincerely.

American Environmental Foundation, American Farm Bureau Federation, Americans Forest Council, American Forest Resource Alliance, American Sheep Industry Association, Blue Ribbon Coalition, Citizens for a Sound Economy, Competitive Enterprise Institute, Environmental Conservation Organization, Fairness to Land Owners Committee, Land Improvement Contractors Association, National Cattlemen's Association, National Farmers Organization, National Forest Products Association, National Grange, National Inholders Association, National Milk Producers Association, National Water Resources Association, Pennsylvania Land Owners Association, S.T.O.P. of Indiana, U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Washington Property Owners Coalition.

Brunswick, GA, October 12, 1990.

Hon. STEVE SYMMS,
U.S. Congress,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SYMMS: I strongly support your Private Property Rights Bill which you are to introduce in the coming days in Congress.

I am a local member of the Fairness to Landowners' Committee, (F.L.O.C.) whose headquarters is in Cambridge, Maryland.

With the way things are going, we need your bill to strengthen the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution.

Very truly yours,

JIMMIE ANN ABNER,
Brunswick/Golden Isles Homebuilders' Association.

THE FLOC,
Cambridge, MD, October 15, 1990.

DEAR SENATOR: I am the founder and Chairman of the FLOC—Fairness to Land Owners Committee. Our policy statement is included in our written testimony on the "No Net Loss" Policy to the Wetlands Coordination Team of the Domestic Policy Council, and can be obtained from Teresa Gorman.

On behalf of our 7,000+ members in the State of Maryland and our growing chapters from Maine to Georgia and as far West as Washington State, I Applaud Senator Symms efforts and offer him our strongest support for the passage of the "Private Property Rights Act of 1990".

The growth and out-reach of our citizens' organization, in less than four months and with limited resources and volunteer staff, is tangible testimony to Federal government agencies' blatant abuse of power resulting in the deprivation of the rights of land owners.

I would like to emphasize a few relevant quotes from our "no net loss" testimony:

Our principles are very basic—We want our rights under the law and a balance in the scales of environmental sensitivity and property ownership.

It's time for this Administration to stop the loss of land owners' rights, the devaluation of private property, and land "takings" due to those (non-tidal wetlands) changes.

It's time for all of us with a vested interest in private property rights to pull out all the guns and fight those who want to tell what we can not do with our land.

This act must pass as a firm reminder to government agencies that they must consider private property and the cost of "takings" when they regulate. At this very moment, we are aware of an enormous number of law firms that are preparing class action and individual cases against Federal government agencies involved in land "takings" due to the changes in the non-tidal wetlands definitions and policies. The claims of these cases are beyond quantification and the damages are far beyond the ability of we the taxpayers to pay. Perhaps if the litigation cost and damages came out of the agencies' budgets, they might not be so cavalier in holding our land hostage and in "taking" private property.

Sincerely,

MARGARET ANN REIGLE,
Chairman.

Hon. STEVE SYMMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SYMMS: Recently, the STOP Organization of Northwest Indiana became aware of the Private Property Rights Act of [4] A provision encompassing these principles could be added to the end of your amendment, as follows: Judicial review of actions taken pursuant to this section shall be limited to a determination of whether the Attorney General has certified the issuing agency as in compliance with the Executive Order or similar procedures. Such review shall be permitted in the same forum and at the same time as the issued regulations are otherwise subject to judicial review. Only persons with property potentially threatened by an agency taking shall have standing to challenge action as contrary to this section. In no event shall such review include any issue for which the Claims Court has jurisdiction.

1990. As a grassroots organization currently fighting federal legislation which includes condemnation, we realize the need and importance of legislation such as this. The support which we have received from homeowners, farmers, local elected officials, and businesses reinforces the fact that private property protection rights are sorely needed.

We commend you for the initiative that you have shown in drafting this act and pledge our support for the Private Property Rights Act of 1990. It is heartening to see that you have already received the support of small business, farm, civil rights, and free market environmentalist groups. We hope that support such as this will make your proposal a reality in the near future. Please do not hesitate to contact us if we may be of any assistance to you.

Sincerely,

THE STOP STEERING COMMITTEE.

RESOLUTION OF THE GREATER YELLOWSTONE ASSOCIATION OF CONSERVATION DISTRICTS

Resolution: To encourage conservation districts who are members of the Greater Yellowstone Association of Conservation Districts to support the concept of the "Private Property Rights Act of 1991" as authored by Sen. Steve Symms (R-ID) and cosponsored by Sen. David Boren (D-OK).

Whereas, the Greater Yellowstone Association of Conservation Districts was formed in February, 1990 to present a three state unified conservation district voice on natural resource issues in the Greater Yellowstone area, and

Whereas, the Association's membership is 35 conservation districts surrounding Yellowstone National Park, and

Whereas, the intention of the Association is to protect the rights of those individuals and organizations currently involved in business and personal endeavors surrounding the Yellowstone National Park,

Therefore be it Resolved, that conservation districts and members of those districts who belong to the Greater Yellowstone Association of Conservation Districts be encouraged to support the concept of the "Private Property Rights Act of 1991." This bill, if passed, will add statutory endorsement to executive orders issued by both Presidents Reagan and Bush, requiring federal agencies to consider the impact of their rules and regulations on private property under the "Taking" clause of the 5th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Submitted by: Caribou Conservation District, Soda Springs, Idaho.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, Senator SYMMS of Idaho, in introducing the Private Property Rights Act. This bill is a response to the growing phenomenon where a citizen is essentially deprived of his property rights by the enforcement of a Federal regulation. The fifth amendment to the United States Constitution requires "just compensation" when private property is taken for public use. The U.S. Supreme Court has often noted that "if regulation goes too far it will be recognized as a taking."

Regulations of several Federal agencies, most notably the Interior Department, the Agriculture Department, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Corps of Engineers, have been found by the courts to amount to fifth amendment takings. These aggressive regulations not only rob the owner of the use of his property, but expose the taxpayers to multimillion-dollar lawsuits in order to compensate the property owners. Currently, the Federal Government faces over $1 billion in outstanding "takings" claims.

Mr. President, the costs of these "takings" suits are far beyond those budgeted for these agencies and the laws and programs they administer. Worse yet, these costs can often be avoided if one hand of the Federal Government will communicate with the other. This communication is the function of the Private Property Rights Act.

This legislation requires that new regulations promulgated by any agency of the Federal Government be certified by the U.S. Attorney General that an assessment has been made as to their potential for governmental exposure to takings claims. Instead of codifying a standard, this mechanism will allow the Justice Department to apply the current standard used by the Federal courts to determine when a regulation amounts to a taking. Therefore, if the Supreme Court refines the takings test over time, the Justice Department's analysis changes with it.

Critics of this proposal charge that it will add a new and burdensome layer of bureaucracy to the already slow process of implementation of regulations. However, the Justice Department has responded by pointing out the fact that most Federal agencies already comply with a similar practice. Further, any short delay caused by the certification process will be worth the savings from a reduction of takings claims against the Government.

Mr. President, this legislation has been endorsed by the agencies I've mentioned and is strongly supported by several farm and business organizations. I urge my colleagues to consider the value of the certification process it would require and to join Senator SYMMS and myself as cosponsors of the bill.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 51. A bill to amend chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code, to prohibit the manufacture, transfer, or importation of .25 caliber, .32 caliber, and 9 millimeter ammunition; to the Committee on Finance.

VIOLENT CRIME PREVENTION ACT

• Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Violent Crime Prevention Act of 1991 to ban the manufacture, importation, and transfer of .25 caliber, .32 caliber, and 9 millimeter ammunition. I propose this not as an alternative to gun control efforts, which I support, but rather as something of an interim complementary measure while the prolonged debate on gun control continues. The bill targets these particular rounds of ammunition because .25 and .32 caliber bullets are used in Saturday Night Specials, the street criminal's weapon of choice, and 9-millimeter bullets are used in the deadly assault weapons favored by drug lords.

Handguns exact a deadly price on our Nation. Of that there is no question. According to the Bureau of Justice statistics, more than 4 in 10 murder victims between 1984 and 1988 were killed with handguns, an average of 9,200 per year.

Law enforcement officials must contend with the sheer number of guns available on the streets. About 70 million handguns and 200 million firearms of all types are in private hands, more than triple the number two decades ago. New York City police estimate there are 2 million guns in the city, despite the fact that permits have been issued for only 50,000 of them. One police officer recently told the New York Times, "If you're asking me if every 14-year-old has a gun, the answer is no. Does every other 14-year-old have a gun? The answer is yes." One Brooklyn teenager declared, "It's not just want, it's need. Everybody's got one, so I got to have one."

As the drug war grows ever deadlier in our inner cities, military-style firearms have become plentiful and fashionable. I recently paid a visit to the NYPD Police Academy and saw some of these guns, such as the TEC–9. What chilled me is that some of the 9-millimeter semiautomatics are "street dude" stuff. They have comic strip chromium that makes them look like space guns. But they are absolutely deadly, and they consume an enormous amount of ammunition.

How did we find ourselves in this situation? Handgun control as it is conventionally offered has not worked. The Gun Control Act of 1968 has been evaded by foreign imports. The Firearms Owners Protection Act of 1986 repealed provisions of the Gun Control Act restricting the sale of guns. The debate continues to focus exclusively on how to control the availability of guns: Should they be banned? Registered? Should there be a waiting period before purchasing it? Should certain people be prohibited from obtaining them, or should certain guns be seized or bought from individuals?

Mr. President, these efforts are admirable, and I shall continue to support measures which are aimed at keeping guns out of the hands of those who are a threat to public safety. But with 200 million guns available, each with a longer lifespan than you or I, even if we were to ban all further manufacture and importation of firearms, we would have enough to last us well into the 22d century. Clearly another tack must be taken.

A story from my days as Ambassador to India illustrates my point. Admission to the legendary Indian Civil Service ultimately turned on a grueling oral examination. A favorite question asked the examinee to imagine himself a district officer on a 2-day trek from his main base to an outlying village. As his party is preparing to make camp for the night he is struck on the forearm by a Malay King Cobra. What does he do?

The correct answer is that he dies. The young men who thought of slashing and sucking their wound or sending runners for a doctor, or whatever, were deemed to have an insufficient hold on reality. A man struck on the arm by a Malay King Cobra as dark descends on the Indian jungle does exactly one thing—he dies.

This is our problem with handgun control. We somehow don't grasp the significance of the fact that guns are out there, in our streets, 70 million of them and 2 million more each year. There is no getting rid of them. But this conundrum does give us a way out. Supposing the cobra had been defanged? Supposing the supply of bullets were restricted or eliminated?

There are enough firearms to last well into the 22d century, but only enough ammunition for those guns to last about 4 years. Of the 7.5 billion rounds in factory, commercial, and household inventory in this country, about 2 billion are used each year. Were we to ban from today additional rounds from entering the market, existing ammunition supplies would soon run out. And what good is a gun without bullets?

The exact numbers are sketchy because the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms does not have the authority to track the supply of ammunition in the same way it tracks firearms. But even so, the point is the same: guns don't kill people, bullets do. If efforts to stem the supply of guns are failing, it is time to look for another alternative. I ask you today as I asked you 2 years ago: Is it not a more realistic hypothesis to control ammunition as a means of controlling violent crime than it is to control handguns?

This is not the first time that Congress has been called upon to ban a particular round of ammunition. In 1986, the same year this body passed the Firearms Owners Protection Act, Congress passed legislation banning the so-called cop-killer bullet. This round, jacketed with tungsten alloys, steel, brass, or any number of other metals, had been demonstrated to penetrate no fewer than four police flak jackets and an additional five Los Angeles Country phone books at one time. In 1982 the New York Policy Benevolent Association came to be and Representative Biaggi and asked us to do something about the ready availability of these bullets. The result was the Law Enforcement Officers Protection Act, which we introduced in 1982, 1983, and for the last time during the 99th Congress. In the end, with the tacit support of the National Rifle Association the measure passed the Congress and was signed by the President as Public Law 99-408 on August 28, 1986.

In this Congress we have the opportunity to ban three other cop-killer bullets: the .25 caliber, .32 caliber and 9 millimeter. As I stated earlier, the first two, the .25 and .32 caliber, are used in guns commonly known as Saturday Night Specials, a phrase coined by Detroit police to describe the weekend traffic in cheap guns from Ohio. Saturday Night Specials, or snubbies, are easily concealed. So easily, in fact, that last December one Brooklyn 3-year-old brought a .25 Raven automatic to school in his coat pocket. The New York Daily News reported that an alert teacher noticed the gun and, unsure whether it was a toy, took it from the "gun-totin' tot." Police discovered it carried four live rounds. The child had taken the gun from the front seat of family friend's car as he was driven to school that morning. This was not the first time a member of the Sesame Street set brought a loaded Saturday Night Special to school. Nor will it be the last until we do something about it.

As Cox Newspapers documented in 1981, Saturday Night Specials are the overwhelming choice of criminals. Of handguns fired at New York City police officers between 1975 and 1985, one-quarter were .25 or .32 caliber. They are concealable guns, and they are deadly. Saturday Night Specials are used in convenience store and liquor store hold-ups, teenagers take them to school to settle arguments, and gunrunners carry them from State to State in the hundreds. There are more than 350,000 .25 caliber and .32 caliber firearms manufactured each year in this country.

In each of the last three Congresses I have sponsored a bill that would ban .25 and .32 caliber ammunition. In this Congress I offer a bill which would also ban 9-millimeter ammunition. The drug war is a war, with military-style weapons used by drug dealers and traffickers. Fourteen- and 15-year-olds can be seen proudly displaying their 9-millimeter Tec-9, Mac-10 or Glock-17 plastic frame pistols. "It used to be that when kids had problems with one another, they took it out with their fists or maybe zip guns," New York City Police Commissioner Lee Brown said in November. "But now they consider the gun a badge of honor. And now the 9-millimeter is the weapon of choice."

In an editorial entitled "Every Other 14-Year-Old, Armed," the New York Times wrote less than a week later that teenagers now carry powerful 9-millimeter semiautomatics, machine pistols or military assault rifles worth hundreds of dollars affordable with drug money. Guns bought elsewhere for $500 regularly go for more than $1,000 on the streets of New York City, spawning a new domestic illicit gun trade in military assault weapons. And with nearly 200,000 9-millimeter firearms manufactured in this country each year, in many places police find themselves outgunned by gang members and drug dealers. In 1987, 10 law enforcement officers were killed by .25 and .32 caliber and 9-millimeter guns, and in 1988 another 10 lost their lives by these guns.

If we ban the manufacture, importation and transfer of the ammunition for these weapons, and here I speak specifically of .25 and .32 caliber and 9-millimeter rounds, before we reach the new millenium a large number of the guns used to commit crimes in this country will be out of commission. Will there be others? Of course. But President Reagan survived a .22 caliber chest wound. President Ford very likely would not have survived the .32 round that was fired at him. President McKinley, Huey Long and George Moscone did not. The .22 is too small to be deadly, the .45 too large to conceal and is used by Alaskan guides to protect themselves from grizzly bear attacks. In between we could save a couple thousand lives each year.

This is no permanent solution to the problem of handgun violence, but I believe it is a step in the right direction. It might just save the lives of a few children. It is our chance to make sure that the deadliest guns on our streets no longer pose us a threat. It is time to defang our cobra. I urge my colleagues to support this bill and ask unanimous consent that the text be printed in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 51

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Violent Crime Prevention Act".

SEC. 2. Section 922(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (7);

(2) striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(9) for any person to manufacture, transfer, or import .25 or .32 caliber or 9 millimeter ammunition, except that this paragraph shall not apply to—

"(A) the manufacture or importation of such ammunition for the use of the United States or any department or agency thereof or any State or any department, agency, or political subdivision thereof; and

"(B) any manufacture or importation for testing or for experimenting authorized by the Secretary; and

"(10) for any manufacturer or importer to sell or deliver .25 or .32 caliber or 9 millimeter ammunition, except that this paragraph shall not apply to—

"(A) the sale or delivery by a manufacturer or importer of such ammunition for the use of the United States or any department or agency thereof or any State or any department, agency, or political subdivision thereof; and

"(B) the sale or delivery by a manufacturer or importer of such ammunition for testing or for experimenting authorized by the Secretary.".

SEC. 3. Section 923(a)(1)(A) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(A) of destructive devices, ammunition for destructive devices, armor piercing ammunition, or .25 or .32 caliber or 9 millimeter ammunition, a fee of $1,000 per year;".

SEC. 4. Section 923(a)(1)(C) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(C) of ammunition for firearms other than destructive devices, or armor piercing or .24 or .32 caliber or 9 millimeter ammunition for any firearm, a fee of $10 per year.".

SEC. 5. Section 923(a)(2) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) If the applicant is an importer—

"(A) of destructive devices, ammunition for destructive devices, or armor piercing or .25 or .32 caliber or 9 millimeter ammunition for any firearm, a fee of $1,000 per year; or

"(B) of firearms other than destructive devices or ammunition for firearms other than destructive devices, or ammunition other than armor piercing or .25 or .32 caliber or 9 millimeter ammunition for any firearm, a fee of $50 per year.".

SEC. 6. Section 923 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(l) Licensed importers and licensed manufacturers shall mark all .25 and .32 caliber and 9 millimeter ammunition and packages containing such ammunition for distribution, in the manner prescribed by the Secretary by regulation.".

SEC. 7. Section 929(a)(1) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting ', or with .25 or .32 caliber or 9 millimeter ammunition" after "possession of armor piercing ammunition"; and

(2) inserting ", or .25 or .32 caliber or 9 millimeter ammunition," after "armor-piercing handgun ammunition".

SEC. 8. This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the first day of the first calendar month which begins more than 90 days after the enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 52. A bill to direct the Secretary of the Interior to prepare a national historic landmark theme study on American labor history; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

STUDY OF HISTORIC SITES IN THE LABOR MOVEMENT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill that would direct the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a nationwide study of sites significant to the history of the American labor movement and other less formal, but still important, historical events involving workers; the laying of the transcontinental railroad and the industrial revolution, for example.

The impact of the labor movement on business, industry, and the standard of living of millions of workers has been great. Its influence starts with paychecks and job security for union members in every State, and reaches here to Washington, where their unified voice is heard.

The history of the labor movement goes back nearly to the birth of the Nation. In 1799, the Franklin Typographical Society of Journeymen Printers of New York formulated a complete wage scale and went on strike to enforce it. In these early years, such organizations dissolved once their goal was accomplished.

Recognizing and preserving the history of American labor will involve recognizing and preserving an idea. No easy task. But it can be done, and, in fact, the Park Service is already doing it at sites that commemorate other ideas. For example, at the Women's Rights National Historical Park in Seneca Falls, NY. Here in 1848, five women drafted a declaration of sentiments and assembled a convention of 300 people. Two weeks later another was held in Rochester. Soon they were being held across the country.

The preservation of several buildings in Seneca Falls and the interpretive center enable many thousands of visitors to better understand the idea that was born there 143 years ago. This study will enable the Park Service to identify other sites that should be similarly recognized and preserved.

Such sites are found throughout the country. The birthplaces of leaders such as William Sylvis, a Philadelphia ironworker who founded the National Union of Iron Molders in 1859 and the National Labor Union in 1866, for example. Or the home of Samuel Gompers, who founded the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions, which became the American Federation of Labor. He was its president for 37 years.

There are the sites of the first meetings of the unions that came to be household names, such as the United Mine Workers in Columbus, OH, in 1890. And there are sites that have largely been forgotten, but still have their place in history, such as Tyronza, AR, where the Southern Tenant Farmers Union formed during the depression.

There are also the sites of strikes, some of which are known for their violent outcomes. They were, in a real sense, battlefields in the fight for fair wages and working conditions. Haymarket Square in Chicago, where workers met in 1886 to protest police actions against strikers, for example. A bomb went off, several people died, and seven labor leaders were sentenced to death. Or the 1917 strike led by the Wobblies in the copper mines of Bisbee, AZ that ended when the sheriff and 1,800 deputies deported 1,200 strikers to New Mexico.

Mr. President, the home of one of the most influential 19th century American painters is being offered as a donation. I believe we owe it to him, and to the many people who admire the Hudson River School and explore its origins, to accept this offer and designate it a national historic landmark.

I regret that none of Thomas Cole's work hangs in the Capitol, although two works of Bierstadt can be found in the stairwell outside the Speaker's lobby. Perhaps Cole's greatest work is the four part "Voyage of Life," an allegorical series that depicts man in the four stages of life. It can be found in the National Gallery, along with two other Cole paintings. The National Gallery currently has a major exhibition of works by Church, who was Cole's first student.

I urge my colleagues to seek out these and other works from the Hudson River School. They are proof enough of Cole's importance and the need to add his home to the list of national historic landmarks.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill be printed at the conclusion of these remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 52

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. THEME STUDY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior (referred to as the "Secretary") shall prepare and transmit to the Congress a national historic landmark theme study on American labor history (referred to as the "theme study").

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the theme study shall be to identify the key sites in American labor history including the history of workers and their work organizing, unions, and strikes, of the impacts of industrial and technological change, and the contributions of American labor to American history

(c) NOMINATION OF LANDMARKS.—In the theme study the Secretary shall identify, evaluate, and nominate as national historic landmarks the districts, sites, buildings, and structures that best illustrate or commemorate American labor history in its fullest variety.

(d) LIST OF POSSIBLE SITES.—On the basis of the theme study, the Secretary shall—

(1) Identify possible new park units appropriate to the theme of American labor history; and

(2) prepare a list, in order of importance or merit, of the most appropriate sites, including a discussion of the feasibility and suitability of their inclusion in the National Park System.

SEC. 2. CONSULTATION.

The Secretary shall prepare the theme study in consultation with the Secretary of Labor and with workers, workers' representatives, scholars of labor history, and historic preservationists.

SEC. 3. COOPERATIVE AGREEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall enter into a cooperative agreement with one or more scholarly and public historic organizations to—

(1) prepare the theme study; and

(2) ensure that the theme study is prepared in accordance with scholarly standards that are generally acceptable in the scholarly community.

(b) QUALIFICATIONS.—The scholarly and public historic organization or organizations described in subsection (a) shall be—

(1) knowledgeable of American labor history; and

(2) recognized in the scholarly community as adhering to scholarly standards that are generally acceptable in the scholarly community.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated $250,000 to carry out this Act.•

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 53. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for a voluntary system of spending limits and partial public financing of Senate general election campaigns, to limit contributions by multicandidate political committees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SENATE ELECTION REFORM ACT

• Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today a bill to reform our system of financing Senate campaigns. This is an issue which the Senate dealt with in depth in the last Congress, and the Congress before that. I believe it is well known that this is an issue which I have pursued vigorously since I was first elected to the Senate in the 95th Congress. I supported public financing of Senate elections back in 1977. Throughout my career in the Senate I have cosponsored numerous pieces of legislation to reform Senate elections: Provisions to provide public financing and limit spending, to increase disclosure of PAC activity, limit PAC contributions, reverse Buckley versus Valeo, end the practice of converting left-over campaign funds to private use, combat negative advertising, enhance voter registration, the list goes on. I have spoken on the Senate floor again and again the same concerns I have discussed today, and I've voted again and again to pass solid reforms.

With the passage of a reform bill in the Senate last year, I was hopeful that we might actually see campaign finance reform enacted, and although we fell short last year, I am still hopeful that we will see reform in the near future. I am more hopeful because the American people are calling loudly and clearly for a major overhaul in the way we run Senate campaigns. With voter turnout at about 50 percent, it is clear that many citizens no longer believe in the power of their vote. The people are disillusioned by the perceived power of PACs and special interest groups that make large contributions to campaigns. They are disillusioned by the inordinate amount of time candidates must spend raising money, and they are disillusioned by the evolution—maybe more accurately, disintegration—of political campaigns into catchy 30-second sound bites.

The bill I am introducing today is the same bill I introduced on this issue last year. It varies in some important aspects from the final form of the campaign finance reform legislation that this body passed last year. I have no doubt that the intense debate on this issue will be repeated in an effort to pass campaign reform again, and I am not unalterably committed to every provision in my bill. Ideally, I would like to propose even tougher and stricter provisions than what I am proposing today. I realize that when we do pass campaign reform in the Senate, it will not contain every provision in my bill. But this is a solid approach to this pressing issue, and it contains the elements that I believe must be included to achieve true reform: Spending limits, partial public financing of Senate campaigns, an emphasis on small grassroots contributions, reduction of incumbent advantage, and the means of reducing the high media costs that have made political campaigns a multimillion dollar endeavor.

First and most importantly, this bill sets voluntary limits on total campaign spending through a formula based on the voting age population (VAP) of a candidate's State: For a general Senate election, the limit would be $400,000 plus 25 cents for each voter up to 4 million, plus 20 cents for each voter over 4 million, with minimum and maximum limits of $400,000 and $5.5 million respectively. The spending limit for primary elections would be 50 percent of the general limit. This is a fair means of controlling the cost of these campaigns equally for all candidates while allowing flexibility for the obviously different makeup of our diverse States. My bill has lower limits than previous proposals. Under my bill, fully half of the Senate races would be kept below $1.5 million for the total spending cycle. This still seems high to me, but with the average Senate race ringing up at $3.7 million in 1988, it is clearly a great improvement. I have prepared a table that shows the key numbers for every State under this bill—spending limits, PAC limits, qualifying thresholds, and the amount of funding grants—and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Second, this bill would cut PAC contributions in half, limiting them to $2,500 per election per candidate, as opposed to $5,000 per election in current law. Additionally, candidates would have to limit their aggregate acceptance of PAC contributions to 10 percent of their total cycle spending limit. These limits provide ample opportunity for people to contribute to political action committees that will help promote the causes they feel are important while preventing PAC's from overshadowing small individual contributors. The limits make a candidate more dependent on small contributors, but this in turn makes the public more confident in the integrity of their representatives, and this is the key to a more representative government.

This legislation also provides a variety of mechanisms for reducing the costs of Senate campaigns so that the spending limits and contribution limits do not hinder a candidate's success. First, it limits the campaign period to the period beginning 6 months prior to the primary election. With the campaign period restricted to a reasonable length of time, costs will immediately be reduced simply by virtue of not having to purchase as much media time. Limiting the campaign period also restores grassroots interest and participation in the election—long, drawn out campaigns result in vote burnout and apathy at the polls. Second, participating candidates would receive both preferred mail rates and the lowest unit broadcast rate—essentially, non-preemptable time at pre-emptable rates, based on the lowest rate over the past 12-month period. In addition, the media would be required to provide free and equal time for a candidate to counter independent expenditures made for the benefit of his or her opponent.

One of the most significant provisions of this legislation is the implementation of partial public financing of Senate races. This would most effectively reduce the amount of time a candidate is forced to spend on fundraising and would return the focus of a campaign to substantive issues. In order to qualify for this and other benefits, a candidate would have to garner broad grassroots support, as demonstrated by raising a threshold of funds made up of small contributions primarily from in-State sources. Upon reaching the threshold and agreeing to comply with the various limitations, the candidate would receive a flat grant of one-third of the remaining general election spending limit amount. For the remaining two-thirds of the amount above the threshold, the candidate would be eligible to receive matching grants for small contributions of $250 or less, and grants equal to $250 for contributions between $251 and $1,000. No matching grants would be made for PAC contributions in any amount. This financing mechanism accomplishes several of our goals. It eases the candidate's fundraising burden without putting the entire burden upon the Federal Government, and it encourages the candidate to focus on small contributions—the kind made by individuals. This is by no means the highest level of public financing which I believe we should consider. A greater level of public financing would do even more to level the playing field between incumbents and challengers and to eliminate the perception of monied influence on Senate elections. I am open to proposals of higher levels of public funding, but the plan I am proposing today is a fair and responsible way to start.

This bill would do a few other things that warrant mention at this time. It would prohibit franked mass mailings of over 250 pieces during the period beginning 6 months prior to the primary election through the general election, including newsletters, notices of town meetings, and opinion surveys. It has been noted that our current campaign system provides an unfair advantage to incumbents. The limit on franked mailings is simply one more step in assuring that Senate races are not biased in favor of established office-holders.

Finally, this legislation prohibits Member PACs and contains limits and disclosure requirements on bundling contributions and on so-called soft money expenditures from State political party committees.

Mr. President, it is time to restore public confidence in our election process and in our Government's representation of the people. This bill does just that. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 53

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Senate Election Reform Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. SPENDING LIMITS.

The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (referred to as "the Act") is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE V—SPENDING LIMITS AND PUBLIC FINANCING FOR SENATE GENERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. For the purposes of this title—

"(1) the term 'authorized committee' means, with respect to a candidate for election to a seat in the United States Senate, a political committee that is authorized in writing by the candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures on behalf of the candidate to further the election of the candidate;

"(2) the term 'candidate' means an individual who is seeking nomination for election, or election to a seat in the United States Senate, and such an individual shall be deemed to be seeking nomination for election, or election, if the individual meets the criteria stated in subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 301(2);

"(3) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate who has made the filings prescribed by section 502 (a) and (b);

"(4) the term 'election cycle' means, with respect to an election to any Senate seat—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or the authorized committee of a candidate, the period beginning on the day after the date of the most recent general election for the seat that the candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next general election; or

"(B) in the case of other persons, the period beginning on the first day following the date of the last general election and ending on the date of the next election;

"(5) the term 'general election' means an election that will directly result in the election of a person to the office of United States Senator, but does not include an open primary election;

"(6) the term 'general election period' means the period beginning on the day after the date of a primary or runoff election, whichever is later, and ending on the first of—

"(A) the date of such general election; or

"(B) the date on which the candidate withdraws from the campaign or otherwise ceases actively to seek election;

"(7) the term 'immediate family' means—

"(A) a candidate's spouse;

"(B) a child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister, or half-sister of the candidate or the candidate's spouse; and

"(C) the spouse of a person described in subparagraph (B);

"(8) the term 'major party' has the meaning stated in section 9002(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act), provided that a candidate in a general election held by a State to elect a Senator subsequent to an open primary in which all the candidates for the office participated and which resulted in the selection of the candidate and at least one other candidate for the ballot in the general election, shall be treated as a candidate of a major party for purposes of this title;

"(9) the term 'primary election', with respect to an election for any Senate seat, means an election that may result in the selection of a candidate for the Senate on the ballot of in a general election;

"(10) the term 'primary election period', with respect to an election for any Senate seat, means the period beginning on the day following the date of the last Senate election for that seat and ending on the first of—

"(A) the date of the first primary election for that seat following the last Senate election for that seat; or

"(B) the date on which the candidate withdraws from the election or otherwise ceases actively to seek election;

"(11) the term 'runoff election', with respect to an election for any Senate seat, means an election held after a primary election for that seat, prescribed by State law as the means for determining the candidates that will be certified as nominees for the Senate;

"(12) the term 'runoff election period', with respect to an election for any Senate seat, means the period beginning on the day following the date of the most recent primary election for that seat and ending on the date of the runoff election for that seat;

"(13) the term 'Senate Account' means the Senate Election Campaign Account maintained, pursuant to section 506, by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Presidential Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and

"(14) the term 'voting age population' means the resident population, 18 years of age or older, as certified for a State pursuant to section 315(e).

"ELIGIBILITY TO RECEIVE BENEFITS

"SEC. 502. (a) To be eligible to receive benefits under this title, a candidate shall make the filings required by subsections (b) and (c).

"(b) To become an eligible candidate, a candidate shall, on the day that the candidate files as a candidate for the primary election, file with the Commission a declaration whether—

"(1) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees agree to make expenditures for the primary election in an amount greater than the lesser of—

"(A) 50 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b); or

"(B) $2,750,000;

"(2) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees agree to make expenditures for a runoff election, in an amount equal to no more than 20 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b); and

"(3) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees agree to make expenditures for the general election in an amount equal to no more than the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b).

"(c) To become an eligible candidate, a candidate shall, not later than 7 days after qualifying for the general election ballot under State law or, if the candidate's State is one that has a primary election to qualify for the general election ballot after September 1, not later than 7 days after the date such candidate wins in such primary, whichever occurs first, file a certification with the Commission under penalty of perjury stating that—

"(1) during the period beginning on January 1 of the calendar year preceding the year of the general election, or in the case of a special election for the seat of a United States Senator, during the period beginning on the day on which the seat was vacated, and ending on the day the certification is made, the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees have received contributions in an amount at least equal to the lesser of—

"(A) $650,000; or

"(B) the greater of—

"(i) $150,000; or

"(ii) 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State;

"(2) all contributions received for purposes of paragraph (1) have come from individuals, and no contribution received from an individual, when added to all contributions to or for the benefit of the candidate from the individual, was taken into account to the extent that the contributions from that individual exceed $250;

"(3) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees have not expended for the primary election more than the amount described in subsection (b)(1);

"(4) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees have not expended for any runoff election more than the amount described in subsection (b)(2);

"(5) at least 80 percent of the amount of contributions received for purposes of paragraph (1) have come from individuals residing in the candidate's State;

"(6) at least one other candidate has qualified for the same general election ballot under State law;

"(7) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees—

"(A) have not made and will not make expenditures for the general election that exceed the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b), unless permitted to do so under section 504(a)(2);

"(B) will not accept any contributions in violation of section 315;

"(C) will not accept any contribution for the general election except to the extent that the contribution is necessary to defray expenditures for the general election that in the aggregate do not exceed the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b), unless permitted to do so under section 504(a)(2);

"(D) will deposit all payments received under this section in an account insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation from which funds may be withdrawn by check or similar means of payment to third parties;

"(E) will furnish campaign records, evidence of contributions, and other appropriate information to the Commission;

"(F) will cooperate in any audit and examination conducted by the Commission pursuant to section 507; and

"(G) will not make any expenditures until the date that is 6 months before the date of the primary election, or use payments received under this section for expenses incurred prior to such date for media advertising, direct mail, and telephone banks unless such expenses for mail or telephones are directly related to raising funds or recruiting volunteers for that election; and

"(8) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees will not use a broadcast station, pursuant to section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315), for a political advertisement or broadcast communication on a television broadcast station until the date that is 6 months before the date of the primary election in which such candidate is involved; and

"(8) the candidate intends to make use of the benefits provided in section 504.

"(b) For the purposes of subsection (c)(1) and section 504(a)(2)(B), in determining the amount of contributions received by a candidate and the candidate's authorized a committees—

"(1) no contribution other than a gift of money made by a written instrument that identifies the person making the contribution shall be taken into account;

"(2) no contribution made through an intermediary or conduit referred to in section 315(a)(8) shall be taken into account;

"(3) no contribution received from a person other than an individual shall be taken into account, and no contribution received from an individual shall be taken into account to the extent such contribution exceeds $250 when added to all other contributions made by that individual to or for the benefit of such candidate since the date specified in paragraph (4); and

"(4) no contribution received prior to January 1 of the calendar year preceding the year in which the general election is held or received after the date on which the general election is held shall be taken into account, and in the case of a special election, no contribution received prior to the date on which the seat was vacated or received after the date on which the general election is held shall be taken into account.

"LIMITATIONS ON EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 503. (a) No candidate shall—

"(1) make expenditures from the personal funds of the candidate or the funds of a member of the immediate family of the candidate; or

"(2) incur personal debt, in excess of $100,000 in connection with the candidate's campaign for the Senate during an election cycle.

"(b) No candidate may make expenditures for a general election in excess of the lesser of—

"(A) $5,500,000; or

"(B) the greater of—

"(i) $900,000; or

"(ii) $400,000 plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population of 4,000,000 or less, plus 20 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4,000,000, plus any amount permitted under section 504 (b) and (c).

"(c) No candidate who is otherwise eligible to receive benefits under this title for use in a general election may receive such benefits if the candidate make expenditures for the primary election in excess of the lesser of—

"(1) $2,750,000; or

"(2) the amount equal to 50 percent of the limitation on expenditures for the general election determined under subsection (b).

"(d) No candidate who is otherwise eligible to receive benefits under this title for use in a general election may receive such benefits if the candidate makes expenditures for a runoff election in excess of an amount equal to 20 percent of the limitation on expenditures for the general election determined under subsection (b).

"(e)(1) The limitation stated in subsection (b) shall not apply to expenditures by a candidate or the candidate's authorized committees from a compliance fund established to defray the costs of legal and accounting services provided solely to insure compliance with this Act, if—

"(A) the compliance fund contains only contributions (including contributions received in excess of any amount necessary to defray qualified campaign expenditures pursuant to section 313) received in accordance with the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act, and does not contain any funds received by the candidate pursuant to section 504(a);

"(B) the amount of contributions to and expenditures from the compliance fund do not exceed 10 percent of the limitation on expenditures for the general election determined under subsection (b); and

"(C) no transfers are made from the compliance fund to any other accounts of the candidate's authorized committees.

"(2) If, after a general election, a candidate determines that the costs of necessary and continuing legal and accounting services require contributions to and expenditures from a compliance fund in excess of the limitation stated in paragraph (1), the candidate may petition the Commission for a waiver of such limitation up to any additional amount that the Commission may authorize, the determination of which shall be subject to Federal review under section 508.

"(3) Any money remaining in a compliance fund when a candidate decides to terminate or dissolve the compliance fund shall be—

"(A) contributed to the United States Treasury to reduce the budget deficit; or

"(B) transferred to any fund of a subsequent campaign of that candidate.

"(f) If during a primary election period or runoff election period preceding a general election, independent expenditures aggregating more than $10,000 are made or obligated to be made in opposition to a candidate or for the opponent of a candidate, the limitations stated in subsections (c) and (d), as they apply to such candidate, shall be deemed to be increased for that primary or runoff election in an amount equal to the amount of such independent expenditures made during the primary election period or runoff election period.

"(g) No candidate who receives a benefit under this title for use in a general election campaign shall receive any such benefits if the candidate makes any expenditure before the date that is 6 months before the date of the primary election in which the candidate is a candidate.

"(h) No candidate who receives a benefit under this title shall make any expenditure, directly or indirectly, for any political advertisement or broadcast communication on a television broadcast until after the date that is 6 months before the date of the primary election in which such candidate is a candidate.

"ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO BENEFITS

"SEC. 504. (a) An eligible candidate shall be entitled to—

"(1) the broadcast media rates provided under subsections (b) and (d)(3) of section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315);

"(2) mailing rates provided in section 3629 of title 39, United States Code; and

"(3) a payment equal to the greater of—

"(A) $250,000; or

"(B) one-third of the difference between—

"(i) the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b); and

"(ii) the threshold amount applicable to the candidate under section 502(b)(1), to the extent that such payment will not result in the candidate's having received contributions and payments under this subparagraph and subparagraph (D) aggregating an amount in excess of the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b);

"(D) payments equal to the sum of—

"(i) all contributions that the candidate has received from contributors (excluding multicandidate political committees) who have made contributions for the general election aggregating no more than $250 each; and

"(ii) $250 times the number of contributors (excluding multicandidate political committees) from whom the candidate has received contributions for the general election aggregating more than $250,

to the extent that such payment will not result in the candidate's having received contributions and payments under this subparagraph and subparagraph (C) aggregating an amount in excess of the general election spending unit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b); and

"(E) payments under section 506 equal to the total amount of independent expenditures made or obligated to be made in the general election by any person in opposition to, or on behalf of an opponent of, the eligible candidate, as such expenditures are reported by such person or determined by the Commission under section 304(f);

"(2) if an eligible candidate's opponent who is not an eligible candidate either raises aggregate contributions or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures for the general election that exceed the general election spending limit applicable to the eligible candidate under section 503(b)—

"(A) in the case of an eligible candidate who is a major party candidate a payment under section 506 (in addition to payments to which the candidate is entitled under paragraph (1)) in an amount equal to—

"(i) two-thirds of the amount of the general election spending limit applicable to the eligible candidate under section 503(b) in a case in which the opponent either raises aggregate contributions or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures for the general election that exceed 100 percent of the applicable general election spending limit; and "(ii) one-third of the amount of the general election spending limit applicable to the eligible candidate under section 503(b) in a case in which the opponent either raises aggregate contributions or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures for the general election that exceed 133⅓ percent of the applicable general election spending limit; and

"(B) in the case of an eligible candidate who is not a major party candidate matching payments under section 506 (in addition to payment to which the candidate is entitled under paragraph (1)) equal to the amount of each contribution received by such eligible candidate and the candidate's authorized committees, provided that in determining the amount of each such contribution—

"(i) section 502(b) shall apply; and

"(ii) threshold contributions required to be raised under section 502(b)(1) shall not be matched, to the extent that aggregate payments to a candidate under this subparagraph do not exceed 50 percent of the amount of the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b).

"(b) An eligible candidate who receives payments under paragraph (1)(C) or (2) of subsection (a) may spend such funds to defray expenditures in the general election without regard to the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b).

"(c)(1) An eligible candidate who receives benefits under this section may make expenditures for the general election without regard to subparagraph (A) of section 502(a)(7) or subsection (a) or (b) of section 503 if any one of the eligible candidate's opponent who is not an eligible candidate either raises aggregate contributions or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures for the general election that exceed 133⅓ percent of the general election spending limit applicable under section 503(b).

"(2) A candidate who receives benefits under this section may receive contributions for the general election without regard to subparagraph (C) of section 502(a)(7) if a major party candidate in the same general election is not an eligible candidate, or if any other candidate in the same general election who is not an eligible candidate raises aggregate contributions or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures for the general election that exceed 75 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b).

"(d) Benefits received by a candidate under this section shall be used to defray expenditures incurred with respect to the general election period for the candidate. Such benefits shall not be used—

"(1) to make any payments, directly or indirectly, to such candidate or to any member of the immediate family of such candidate;

"(2) to make any expenditure other than expenditures to further the general election of such candidate,

"(3) to make any expenditures which constitute a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which the expenditure is made; or

"(4) to repay any loan to any person except to the extent the proceeds of such loan were used to further the general election of such candidate.

"CERTIFICATION BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 505. (a) No later than 48 hours after an eligible candidate files a request with the Commission to receive benefits under section 506 the Commission shall certify such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, unless the provisions of section 506(c) apply. Such request shall contain—

"(1) such information and be made in accordance with such procedures, as the Commission may provide by regulation;

"(2) a certification that the candidate has raised contributions in the applicable threshold amount states in section 502(b)(1) and has met all other requirements to become an eligible candidate; and

"(3) a verification signed by the candidate and the treasurer of the principal campaign committee of such candidate stating that the information furnished in support of the request, to the best of their knowledge, is correct and full satisfies the requirements of this title.

"(b) Certifications by the Commission under subsection (a) and all determinations made by the Commission under this title shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 507 and judicial review under section 508.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND; PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 506. (a)(1) The Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund (referred to as the 'Fund') established by section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, in addition to any other accounts maintained under such section, a separate account to be known as the 'Senate Account'. The Secretary shall deposit into the Senate Account, for use by eligible candidates, the amounts available after the Secretary determines that the amounts in the fund, plus the amounts of revenue the Secretary projects will accrue to the fund during the remainder of the period ending on December 31 of the year of the next Presidential election, equal 110 percent of the amount the Secretary projects will be necessary for payments under subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 during such remainder of such period. The monies designated for the Senate Fund shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

"(2) On May 15 of each year following the year during which a regularly scheduled biennial Senate election has occurred, the Secretary shall determine the amount in the Senate Fund, and determine whether that amount, plus the amount of revenue the Secretary projects will accrue to the Senate Account (based on the computation made by the Secretary with respect to the fund, as provided in paragraph (1)) during the period beginning on such date and ending on December 31 of the year of the next regularly scheduled biennial election, exceeds 110 percent of the total estimated expenditures of the Senate Account during that period. If the Secretary determines that an excess amount exists, the Secretary shall transfer the excess to the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

"(b) Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, the Secretary shall promptly pay to the candidate named in the certification, out of the Senate Account, the amount certified by the Commission.

"EXAMINATION AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"SEC. 507. (a)(1) After each general election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of 10 percent of the eligible candidates of each major party and 10 percent of all other eligible candidates, as designated by the Commission through the use of an appropriate statistical method of random selection to determine, among other things, whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and other conditions of eligibility and requirements of this title.

"(2) After each special election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of each eligible candidate in such election to determine whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and other conditions of eligibility and requirements under this title.

"(3) The Commission may conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of any eligible candidate in a general election if the Commission, by an affirmative vote of four members, determines that there exists reason to believe that the candidate has violated any provision of this title.

"(b) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate under this title was in excess of the aggregate payments to which such candidate was entitled, the Commission shall so notify the candidate, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the excess.

"(c) If the Commission determines that any part of a payment benefit made to a candidate under this title was not used as required by this title, the Commission shall so notify the candidate and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of the benefit that was used otherwise than as permitted by this title.

"(d) If the Commission determines that a candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by 5 percent or less the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b), the Commission shall so notify the candidate, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the amount of the excess expenditure.

"(e) If the Commission determines that a candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by more than 5 percent general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under the limitation set forth in section 503(b), the Commission shall so notify the candidate, and the candidate shall pay the Secretary an amount equal to three times the amount of the excess expenditure.

"(f) Any amount received by an eligible candidate under this title may be retained for no more than 60 days after the date of the general election for the liquidation of all obligations to pay general election campaign expenses incurred during the general election period. At the end of 60 days any unexpended funds received under this title shall be promptly repaid to the Secretary.

"(g) No notification shall be made by the Commission under this section with respect to an election more than 3 years after the date of such election.

"(h) All payments received under this section shall be deposited in the Senate Account.

"CRIMINAL PENALTIES

"SEC. 507A. (a) No candidate shall knowingly or willfully accept benefits under this title in excess of the aggregate benefits to which the candidate is entitled or knowingly or willfully use such benefits for any purpose other than one permitted by this title or knowingly or willfully make expenditures from the candidate's personal funds, or the personal funds of the candidate's immediate family, in excess of the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b).

"(b) A person who violates subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Any officer or member of any political committee who knowingly consents to the making of an expenditure in violation of subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c)(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any benefit under this title, or to whom any portion of any such benefit is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such benefit or such portion except as provided in section 504(d).

"(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(d)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

"(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information (including any certification, verification, notice, or report) to the Commission under this title, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Commission or an examination and audit by the Commission under this title; or

"(B) to fail to furnish to the Commission any records, books, or information requested by it for purposes of this title.

"(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(e)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any benefits received by a candidate, or an authorized committee of a candidate who receives benefits under this title.

"(2) Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal benefit in connection with any benefits received by a candidate or an authorized committee of a candidate pursuant to the provisions of this title shall pay to the Secretary for deposit in the fund, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or benefit received.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 508. (a) Any action by the Commission made under this title shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in that court not later than 30 days after the Commission action for which review is sought. It shall be the duty of the Court of Appeals, ahead of all matters not filed under this title, to advance on the docket and expeditiously take action on all petitions filed pursuant to this title.

"(b) Chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, applies to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

"PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 509. (a) The Commission may appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section and under section 508 either by attorneys employed in its office or by counsel whom it may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation it may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

"(b) The Commission may, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined under section 507 to be payable to the Secretary.

"(c) The Commission may, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), petition the courts of the United States for such injunctive relief as is appropriate in order to implement any provision of this title.

"(d) The Commission is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which it appears pursuant to this section.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS

"SEC. 510. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after each election, submit a full report to the Senate setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures (shown in such detail as the Commission deems appropriate) made by each eligible candidate and the authorized committees of that candidate;

"(2) the amounts certified by the Commission under section 505 for payment to each eligible candidate;

"(3) the amount of repayments, if any, required under section 507, and the reasons for each such repayment; and

"(4) the balance in the fund, the Senate Account and any other account maintained in the fund.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) The Commission may prescribe such rules and regulations in accordance with subsection (c), conduct such examinations and investigations, and require the keeping and submission of such books, records, and information, as it deems necessary to carry out its functions and duties under this title.

"(c) Thirty days before prescribing any rules or regulation under subsection (b), the Commission shall transmit to the Senate a statement setting forth the proposed rule or regulation and containing a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 511. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission such sums as are necessary for the purpose of carrying out the Commission's functions and duties under this title.".

SENATE ACCOUNT

SEC. 3. Section 6096(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended—

(1) by striking "$1" each place it appears in that subsection and inserting "$2"; and

(2) by striking "$2" each place it appears in that subsection and inserting "$4".

BROADCAST RATES

SEC. 4. Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by striking "section" and inserting "subsection";

(2) by redesignating subsections (b), (c), and (d) as subsections (d), (e), and (f), respectively; and

(3) by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) If any licensee permits a person to utilize a broadcasting station to broadcast material which either endorses a legally qualified candidate for any Federal elective office or opposes a legally qualified candidate for that office, such licensee shall, within a reasonable period of time, provide to any eligible candidate opposing the candidate endorsed (or to an authorized committee of such eligible candidate), or to any eligible candidate who was so opposed (or to an authorized committee of such eligible candidate), the opportunity to utilize, without charge, the same amount of time on such broadcasting station, during the same period of the day, as was utilized by such person.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons, but such term does not include a legally qualified candidate for any Federal elective office or an authorized committee of any such candidate.

"(c) A licensee shall not preempt the use, during any period specified in subsection (d)(1), of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for Federal office who has purchased such use pursuant to such subsection (d)(1).";

(4) by amending subsection (d)(1), as redesignated by paragraph (2), to read as follows:

"(1) during the 6 months preceding the date of a primary, runoff, general, or special election in which such person is a candidate, the lowest unit charge of the station over the preceding 12-month period for the same class and amount of time for the same period, except that in the case of candidates for the United States in a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(5) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, this provision shall apply only if such candidate has been certified by the Federal Election Commission as eligible to receive benefits under title V of that Act;"; and

(5) by amending subsection (e), as redesignated by paragraph (2) to read as follows:

"(e) For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'authorized committee' means, with respect to any candidate for nomination for election, or election, to any Federal elective office, any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000 and which is authorized by such candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures on behalf of such candidate to further the nomination or election of such candidate;

"(2) the term 'broadcasting station' includes a community antenna television system; and

"(3) the term 'license' and 'station licensee', when used with respect to a community antenna system, mean the operator of such system.".

REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 304 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d)(1) Not later than the day after the date on which a candidate for the United States Senate qualifies for the ballot for a general election, as that term is defined in section 501(5), or, if such candidate is a candidate in a State which has a primary election to qualify for such ballot after September 1, within 7 days after the date such candidate wins in such primary, whichever occurs first, each such candidate in such election shall file with the Commission a declaration whether the candidate intends to make expenditures in excess of the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b).

"(2) A declaration filed pursuant to paragraph (1) may be amended or changed at any time within 7 days after the filing of the declaration, and may not be further amended or changed.

"(e)(1) A candidate for the United States Senate who qualifies for the ballot for a general election, as that term is defined in section 501(5)—

"(A) who is not eligible to receive benefits under section 502; and

"(B) who either raises aggregate contributions or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures for the general election that exceed 75 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b) for such Senate election, shall file a report with the Commission not later than 24 hours after such contributions have been raised or such expenditures have been made or obligated to be made, or not later than 24 hours after the date of qualification for the general election ballot, whichever is later, setting forth the candidate's total contributions and total expenditures for such election. Thereafter such candidate shall file additional reports with the Commission not later than 24 hours after each time additional contributions are raised or expenditures are made, or are obligated to be made, which aggregate an additional 5 percent of such limit. A candidate shall continue to file such reports until the candidate has raised aggregate contributions or made or has become obligated to make aggregate expenditures equal to 133⅓ percent of the general election spending limit applicable to the candidate under section 503(b).

"(2) The Commission, not later than 24 hours after such a report has been filed, shall notify each candidate in an election who is eligible to receive benefits pursuant to this title of the filing of such report, and after an opposing candidate has raised aggregate contributions or made or has become obligated to make aggregate expenditures in excess of the applicable general election spending limit, the Commission shall certify, pursuant to subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which such eligible candidate is entitled.

"(3) Notwithstanding the reporting requirement established in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate in a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(5), who is not eligible to receive benefits under section 504, has raised aggregate contributions or has made or has become obligated to make aggregate expenditures for such election that exceed general election spending limit applicable to a candidate under section 503(b). The Commission, not later than 24 hours after making such determination, shall notify each candidate in the general election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504 about the making of such determination, and shall certify, pursuant to subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which any such candidate is entitled.

"(f)(1) All independent expenditures, if any (including those described in subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii)), made by any person after the date of the last Federal election with regard to a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(5), and all obligations to make such expenditures incurred by any person during such period, if any, shall be reported by such person to the Commission as provided in paragraph (2), if such expenditure or obligation is described in such paragraph.

"(2) Independent expenditures by any person referred to in paragraph (1) shall be reported not later than 24 hours after the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated exceeds $10,000. Thereafter, independent expenditures referred to in paragraph (1), made by the same person in the same election, shall be reported not later than 24 hours after each time the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated, not yet reported under this subparagraph, exceeds $5,000.

"(3) Each report under this subsection shall be filed with the Commission and the Secretary of State for the State of the election involved and shall contain—

"(A) the information required by subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii); and

"(B) a statement filed under penalty of perjury by the person making the independent expenditures, or by the person incurring the obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, that identifies the candidate whom the independent expenditures are actually intended to help elect or defeat.

The Commission shall, not later than 24 hours after such report is made, notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits pursuant to section 504(a)(1)(C), about the making of each such report, and shall certify such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of any amount to which any such candidate is entitled.

"(4)(A) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements established in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a person has made independent expenditures, or has incurred an obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, with regard to a general election, as defined in section 501(5), that in the aggregate total more than the applicable amount specified in paragraph (2).

"(B) The Commission shall, not later than 24 hours after such determination is made, notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504(a)(1)(C) about the making of each determination under subparagraph (A), and shall certify, pursuant to subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(g)(1) When two or more persons make an expenditure or expenditures in coordination, consultation, or concert (as described in paragraph (2) or otherwise) for the purpose of promoting the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, each such person shall report to the Commission, under subsection (f), the amount of such expenditure or expenditures made by such person in coordination, consultation, or concert with such other person or persons when the total amount of all expenditures made by such persons in coordination, consultation, or concert with each other exceeds the applicable amount provided in such subsection.

"(2) An expenditure by a person shall constitute an expenditure in coordination, consultation, or concert with another person when—

"(A) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between the persons making the expenditures, including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person;

"(B) in the same 2-year election cycle, 1 of the persons making the expenditures (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) is or has been, with respect to such expenditures—

"(i) authorized by such other person to raise or expend funds on behalf of such other person; or

"(ii) receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from such other person or an agent of such other person;

"(C) one of the persons making expenditures (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated with, advised, or counseled such other person in connection with such expenditure; or

"(D) one of the persons making expenditures and such other person making expenditures each retain the professional services of the same individual or person in connection with such expenditures.

"(h)(1) Every political committee, as defined in section 301(4), active in non-Federal elections and maintaining separate accounts for this purpose shall file with the Commission reports of funds received into and disbursements made from such accounts for activities which may influence an election to any Federal office. For purposes of this section, activities that may influence an election to any Federal office include—

"(A) voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives directed to the general public in connection with any election in which Federal candidates appear on the ballot;

"(B) general public political advertising that includes references, however, incidental, to clearly identify Federal and non-Federal candidates for public office, or that does not clearly identify Federal candidates but urges support for or opposition to all the candidates of a political party or other candidates in a classification or context which includes Federal candidates; and

"(C) any other activities that require an allocation of costs between a political committee's Federal and non-Federal accounts reflecting the impact on Federal elections in accordance with regulations prescribed or Advisory Opinions rendered by the Commission.

"(2) Reports required to be filed by this subsection shall be filed for the same time periods required for political committees under section 304(a), and shall include:

"(A) a separate statement, for each of the activities in connection with which a report is required under paragraph (1), of the aggregate total of disbursements from the non-Federal accounts; and

"(B) supporting schedules, providing an identification of each donor (except donors whose aggregate donations do not exceed $200 in a calendar year) together with the amount and date of each donation with regard to the receipts of the non-Federal account that comprise disbursements reported under subparagraph (A).

"(3) Reports required to be filed by this subsection need not include donations made to or on behalf of non-Federal candidates or political organizations in accordance with the financing and reporting requirements of State laws, or other disbursements from the non-Federal accounts in support of exclusively non-Federal election activities, if such donations or disbursements are governed solely by such State laws and not subject to paragraph (1).

"(i) The certifications required by this section shall be made by the Commission on the basis of reports filed with such Commission in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or on the basis of such Commission's own investigation or determination, notwithstanding section 505(a).

"(j) Not later than 15 days after a candidate for the Senate qualifies for the primary ballot under applicable State law, such candidate shall file with the Commission a declaration stating whether or not such candidate agrees to expend from the candidate's personal funds, or the funds of the candidate's immediate family, or incur personal loans, in connection with the candidate's campaign for such office, in the aggregate of $100,000 or more, for the election cycle.

"(k)(1) A candidate for the United States Senate who expends from the candidate's personal funds or the funds of the candidate's immediate family, or incurs personal loans, in connection with the candidate's campaign for such office, in the aggregate in excess of $100,000, for the election cycle, shall file a report with the Commission not later than 24 hours after such expenditures have been made or loans incurred. Thereafter the expenditures referred to in this paragraph shall be reported not later than 24 hours after each time the aggregate of additional expenditures or loans exceeds $10,000.

"(2) Not later than 24 hours after a report has been filed under paragraph (1), the Commission shall notify each candidate in the election who is eligible to receive payments under section 504 of the filing of each such report.

"(3) Nothwithstanding the reporting requirements in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate for the United States Senate has made expenditures from the personal funds of such candidate or the funds of any member of a candidate's immediate family or incurred personal loans in connection with the candidate's campaign aggregating in excess of $100,000, or thereafter in increments of $10,000 during the election cycle. Not later than 24 hours after making such determination, the Commission shall notify each candidate in the general election who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504 of the making of each such determination.".

(b) Section 301(4) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Whether a committee, club, association, or other group of persons has received contributions within the meaning of this paragraph shall be determined by the Commission on the basis of facts and circumstances, in any combination, demonstrating a purpose of influencing any election for Federal office, including, but not limited to, the representations made by any person soliciting funds about their intended uses; the identification by name of individuals who are candidates for Federal office, as defined in paragraph (2) of this section, or of any political party, in general public political advertising; and the proximity to any primary, run-off, or general election of general public political advertising designed or reasonably calculated to influence voter choice in that election."

(c) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(20) The term 'election cycle' means—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or an authorized committee of a candidate, the period beginning on the day after the date of the most recent election for the seat that the candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next general election; or

"(B) in the case of other persons, the period beginning on the first day following the date of the most recent general election and ending on the date of the next election.".

LIMITS ON CONTRIBUTIONS BY MULTICANDIDATE POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND SEPARATE SEGREGATED FUNDS

SEC. 6. (a) Section 315(a)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2)) is amended by—

(1) striking "or" at the end of subparagraph (B);

(2) striking the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting a semicolon; and

(3) adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(D) to any candidate for the office of Member of, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the House of Representatives and the authorized political committees of such candidate with respect to—

"(i) a general or special election for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) which exceed $100,000 (or $125,000 if at least two candidates qualify for the ballot in the general or special election and at least two candidates qualify for the ballot in a primary election relating to such general or special election), when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and the candidate's authorized political committees with respect to such general or special election (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election); or

"(ii) a runoff election for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress which exceed $25,000 when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and the candidate's authorized political committees with respect to such runoff election;

"(E) to any candidate for the office of Senator and the authorized political committees of such candidate with respect to—

"(i) a general or special election for such office (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) which, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and the candidate's authorized political committees with respect to such general or special election (including any primary election convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) exceeds an amount equal to 10 percent of the amount provided in section 315(i); or

"(ii) a runoff election for the office of United States Senator which exceeds, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such runoff election, an amount equal to 10 percent of the limitation on expenditures provided in section 315(j) for runoff elections; or

"(F) to any State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, which, when added to the total contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such State committee exceeds the greater of—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State of such State committee; or

"(ii) $25,000.

The limitation of subparagraph (F) shall apply separately with respect to each two-year Federal election cycle, covering a period from the day following the date of the last Federal general election held in that State through the date of the next regularly scheduled Federal general election.".

"(b)(1) Section 315 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2) U.S.C. 441a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(i) For purposes of subsection (a)(2)(E)(i), such limitation for the election cycle shall be an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(A) $5,500,000; or

"(B) the greater of—

"(i) $900,000; or

"(ii) 50 percent of the sum of—

"(I) $400,000; and

"(II) 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population of 4,000,000 or less, plus 20 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4,000,000.

"(j) For purposes of subsection (a)(2)(E)(ii), such limitation for the election cycle shall be an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(A) $5,500,000; or

"(B) the greater of—

"(i) $900,000; or

"(ii) 20 percent of the sum of—

"(I) $400,000; and

"(II) 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population of 4,000,000 or less, plus 20 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4,000,000.

(2) Section 315(c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(c)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1) by striking "subsection (b) and subsection (d)" and inserting "subsections (b), (d), (i), and (j)"; and

(B) in paragraph (2)(B) by inserting before the period at the end thereof "as applied in subsections (b) and (d), and the term 'base period' means the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senate Election Reform Act of 1990, as applied in subsections (i) and (j)".

(c) Section 315(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking "(2) and (3)" and inserting "(2), (3), (4), and (5)";

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4) No congressional campaign committee may accept contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, during two-year election cycle, which, in the aggregate, exceed 30 percent of the total expenditures that may be made during such election cycle by that campaign committee on behalf of candidates for Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner pursuant to paragraph (3).

"(5) No national committee of a political party may accept contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, during two-year election cycle, which, in the aggregate, are in excess of an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States.

"(6) The limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall apply to any expenditure through general public political advertising, whenever made, which—
